"Ah!" cried Beelzebub, "now we can talk. Tell me, St. Peter, if in your flock of white sheep you have not one by the name of Mark Sistra, from auvert, who has departed the earth, and of whom can find no trace."

"Mark? Mark Sistra? Why, no—not Mark Sistra; but there is a Marion Sistra. She is a Saint who has naught to do with you or your infernal gions. She is—"

"Imbecile!" cried the impatient devil, "if he not on your register or in your memory, then Mark Sistra can not be here; yet, if not here, where is he be, for I have rummaged everywhere?"

"True!" said St. Peter, "and should he be here, how recognize him in so great a crowd?" Satan reflected a minute, finger on forehead.

"Ah-h!" said he, at last, "I have it; we'll find him, but I shall need your assistance, St. Peter!"

"And you shall have it—anything to discover the knave."

"Then," added Beelzebub, "be not astonished whatever happens, and presently when I return I'll knock upon your door, open it and be not afraid, for I promise you that none of mine shall pass its threshold."

"Agreed!" said St. Peter; and he closed the wicket—to open the gate as agreed upon at the pointed knock, to find before it at the very threshold a throng of—

"Devils?"

Exactly—but devils metamorphosed into gay heroes in brilliant costumes, their velvet coats and yellow breeches covered with pasquilles and bands of gold, the chulos coiffed in scarlet handkerchiefs, the picadores on prancing horses, and, in the midst of the throng two Spanish bulls, one brown, one black, and with tassels of silky hair on the tips of their tails. Beelzebub himself, as a superb espada, in a plumed montera and clothed like a fairy prince, headed the procession, and, preceded by the voice of a stentor, began the usual halloo, that well-known warning of the bull's approach.

Scarce had he cried it twice, when Mark Sistra, bounding barriers, leaping brooks, and mingling like a shuttle-cock thrown from a racquet, face and eyes aflame, crossed the sill of Paradise, and hurled himself into the cohort of imps waiting to receive him. And from there, into the depths of Tartarus, falling, falling, falling, Mark Sistra shot like a shooting star.—Translated for the Argonaut from the French of Chalon.

OLD FAVORITES.

Where Shall the Lover Rest?

Where shall the lover rest
Whom the fates sever
From his true maiden's breast—
Parted forever?
Where, through groves deep and high
Sounds the far hallow,
Where early violets die
Under the willow
Eleu loro
Soft shall he his pillow.

There through the summer day,
Cool streams are laying;
There, where the tempests sway,
Scarce are houghs waving;
There thy rest shalt thou take,
Parted forever,
Never again to make,
Never, O, never!
Eleu loro
Never, O, never.

Where shall the traitor rest,
He, the deceiver,
Who could win maiden's breast,
Ruin, and leave her?
In the lost hattle,
Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle
With groans of the dying:
Eleu loro
There shall he he lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap
O'er the false hearted;
His warm blood the wolf shall lap
Ere life be parted;
Shame and dishonor sit
By his grave ever;
Blessing shall hallow it
Never, O, never!
Eleu loro
Never, O, never!

—Sir Walter Scott.

Eveleen's Bower.

O, weep for the hour
When to Eveleen's bower
The Lord of the Valley with false vows came!
The moon hid her light
From the heavens that night
And wept behind her clouds o'er the maiden's shame
The clouds passed soon
From the chaste, cold moon,
And heaven smiled again with her vestal flame;
But none will see the day
When the clouds shall pass away
Which that dark hour left upon Eveleen's fame.

The white snow lay
On the narrow pathway,
When the Lord of the Valley crossed over the moor;
And many a deep print
On the white snow's tint
Showed the track of his footsteps to Eveleen's door.

The next sun's ray
Soon melted away
Every trace on the path where the false lord came;
But there's a light above
Which alone can remove That stain upon the snow of fair Eveleen's fame.
—Thomas Moore.

The Mother's Last Song.

Sleep! The ghostly winds are howling,
No moon abroad, no star is glowing;
The river is deep, and the tide is flowing
To the land where you and I are going!
We are going afar,
Beyond moon or star,
To the land where the sinless angels are!

I lost my heart to your heartless sire,
('Twas melted away by his looks of fire.)
Forgot my God, and my father's ire,
All for the sake of a man's desire;
But now we'll go
Where the waters flow
And make us a bed where none shall know.

The world is cruel, the world is untrue;
Our woes are many, our friends are few;
No work, no bread, however we sue!
What is there left for me to do,
But fly—fly
From the cruel sky,
And hide in the deepest depths—and die?
—Barry Cornwall.

At one time British wines were a popular beverage, but foreign wines diluted with Hamburg and potato spirits have been encouraged at the expense of British manufacturers. The taste, however, seems to be reviving a little. The wines are absolutely pure; they are fermented for at least nine or ten months, and there are a score of varieties, including ginger, orange, raisin, cowslip, cherry, red currant, black currant, white currant, and blackberry.

DINNER TO EDITOR ALDEN.

Veteran Head of Harper's Magazine Celebrates His Seventieth Birthday.

Thousands of readers in the United States and scattered around the world have profited for years by the fine literary taste and cheery counsel of Henry Mills Alden without knowing it. For thirty-seven years Mr. Alden has been editor of Harper's Magazine, the dean of the monthlies, and though his work, has been given to every number of the periodical, and his judgment and selection have imparted a value and flavor to each sheaf of contributions, his name has never been prominent in its pages. Among writers and editors, however, his gifts are appreciated, and from the members of a wide circle of such acquaintances and friends there will come to him messages of congratulation on the completion of his seventieth year in good health.

Mr. Alden's birthday is November 10, and two weeks ago the anniversary was celebrated by a reception and dinner in the famous Harper publishing house in Franklin Square, New York City. The affair was arranged by George B. Harvey, editor of Harper's Weekly, and doubtless without enthusiastic endorsement by Mr. Alden, who is extremely modest.

The correspondent of the Indianapolis Star said:

It was considered fitting that the celebration should take place in the building in which Mr. Alden has worked for more than forty years, and where were read the first manuscripts of many of those who assembled to do him honor.

Seated at the table with Mr. Alden, the guest of the evening, were Col. Harvey, Thomas Bailey Aldrich, Richard Watson Gilder, William Dean Howells, Edmund Clarence Stedman, Bishop Ethelbert Talbot of the Protestant Diocese of central Pennsylvania, and President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton University.

During the dinner letters of congratulation from President Roosevelt and Samuel L. Clemens to Mr. Alden were read. The President in his letter invited the editor to visit him at the White House, should he go to Washington this winter.

Mark Twain was kept at home by a severe cold, but sent this characteristic letter of congratulation:

"Alden, Dear and Ancient Friend—It is a solemn moment. You have now reached the years of discretion. You have been a long time arriving. How often we recall with regret that Napoleon once shot at a magazine editor and missed him and killed the publisher. But we remember with charity that his intentions were good. You will reform now, Alden."

A special correspondent of the Los Angeles Express gave in his account of the dinner these paragraphs:

It was a notable assembly. Men as widely asunder as Thomas Bailey Aldrich and Hayden Carruth were there, and women with as little in common, except their love for Alden, as Margaret Deland and Carolyn Wells.

Mr. Alden looked well— hale, handsome, halcyon as he was twenty years ago. Verses were read by poets of all degrees of genius, from Mr. Howells to John Kendrick Bangs. Mr. Alden bore the infliction as only a man could who had been seasoned by nearly four decades of experience with versifiers. There was not one of the rhymed offerings that he would have admitted to the columns of Harper's Magazine.

The account printed in the New York American the following morning spoke of Mr. Alden's unweary air:

The guest of honor, though he has been thirty-seven years in harness at the head of the magazine, looked younger than many of the men gathered about him, some of whose first manuscripts he read, and all of whom he had helped with advice. He was toasted again and again as "America's schoolmaster of literature," and called the pioneer of the modern magazine.

Most of the guests were men and women who have contributed to Harper's Magazine during Mr. Alden's term as editor. Mr. Harvey said that, in spite of his age, Mr. Alden is so strong physically and mentally that he will keep his place for many years still.

"Only the youngest of you," he declared, "will ever submit manuscripts to Harper's under any other management."

Those who spoke or read their tributes in the presence of the two hundred and fifty at the tables included wits as well as poets:

Those who were invited to speak at the banquet included George Ade, Richard Harding Davis, Edward Bok, Sewell Ford, Howard Pyle, Frederick Remington, Owen Wister and the Prince and Princess Troubetzkzy (Amelia Rives).

Verses in praise of Mr. Alden were read by William Dean Howells, Richard Watson Gilder, Mrs. Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, Edwin Markham, and Mrs. Helen Hay Whitney, daughter of the late Secretary Hay.

Others asked to do honor to the venerable editor were: Dr. Lyman Abbott, John W. Alexander, Poultny Bigelow, John Burroughs, George W. Cable, Will Carleton, Andrew Carnegie, Hayden Carruth, Julius Chambers, Grace MacGowan Cooke, John Corbin, Elizabeth Cutting, John Russell Davidson, George Cary Eggleston, Edward A. Dithmar, Eliot Gregory, Julian Hawthorne, John Luther Long, General Anson S. Cook, Thomas Nelson Page, H. S. Harper, J. W. Harper, Dr. R. F. Weir, and Richard Le Gallienne.

DION BOUCICAULT'S PLAYS.

His Earliest Success, "London Assurance," Followed by a Brilliant Train.

In the history of the theatre in the nineteenth century, the work of Dion Boucicault looms large. Actor, lecturer, pamphleteer, manager, and leading playwright of his age, Boucicault's dramas are more than pleasing memories of playgoers of the past generation. Few of the four hundred plays which Boucicault wrote, adapted and translated are seen on the stage today, although "London Assurance," "Arrah-na-Pogue," "The Colleen Bawn," "The Shaughraun," "The Corsican Brothers," "Kerry," and "The Octoroon" are among those that are still familiar. There is so much of humor, so much of pathos in his work, "it is so merry and clean," that the theatre of today surfeited with banal and neurotic dramas, might well turn to Boucicault for refreshment and entertainment.

In "Famous Actor-Families in America," Montrose J. Moses gives an interesting sketch of the distinguished playwright. While one marvels at the extraordinary industry of Boucicault, one feels like exclaiming with George William Curtis, "Ah, had the painter only taken more pains!" Of his first drama, "London Assurance," written when Boucicault was only nineteen, Mr. Moses says:

Boucicault has written his own account of his debut as a dramatist, colored with a tinge of pleasant romance; he has told in a minute way his feelings as he took the first play to Charles Matthews, who read it as a one-act piece. Surprised on seeing such a boy before him, Matthews encouraged him, though handing back the manuscript. Boucicault at the time thought that had the drama been a five-act comedy, Matthews might have taken it, so in a few days he remodeled it and astonished Matthews by his quick reappearance. The play, now a larger roll of manuscript, was read and accepted. But when put in rehearsal:

"Scene after scene," said Boucicault in his pen-picture, "was rewritten at the prompt-table and handed wet to the company. Thus the last speech of the play, which is technically termed 'the tag,' was composed and handed to Max Harkaway. The next day, or on some subsequent day, Vestris took the author aside and said: 'Farren wants to speak 'the tag.' I suppose you don't mind?' 'Well,' said the author, looking up with his Irish smile, 'will it not sound rather strange in the mouth of Sir Harcourt Courtney?' (Originally called Sir William Dazzle, the surname afterward used for another character.) 'Oh, never mind—I am sure the public will not. Bartley does not object, in fact, he approves.' And so it stood."

"'London Assurance' was made to order on the shortest possible notice," the dramatist continued. "I could have wished that my first appearance before the public had not been in this out-of-breath style; but I saw my opportunity at hand. I knew how important it was not to neglect the chance of production, the door was open, I had a run for it, and here I am!"

After the first productions of the play the youthful dramatist was accused of having stolen the plot from a drama by John Brougham. This charge was repeated often in later years. In fact, Charles Reade said:

"Like Shakespeare and Moliere, the heggar," meaning Boucicault, "steals everything he can lay his hands on; but he does it so deftly, so cleverly, that I can't help condoning the theft. He picks up a pebble by the shore and polishes it into a jewel. Occasionally, too, he writes divine lines, and knows more about the grammar of the stage than all the rest of them (the dramatists) put together."

Charles Reade was associated with Boucicault during the period between 1860 and 1872, and the novelist was himself accused of having joined in the playwright's plagiarisms. Mr. Moses writes:

In collaboration with Boucicault, he prepared a drama in 1867 from "Foul Play"; it was not only a failure, but it resulted in another accusation of plagiarism which followed closely upon its presentation. This attack Reade wholly denounced, and it is clearly seen that the public suspicion fell, not upon the novelist, but upon the playwright. The matter is fully considered in "Readiana," and excerpts produced from "Le Porte-Feuille Rouge," which was the bone of contention—the French model which was more than a "model." Afterward, Reade made another dramatic version under the title "The Scuttled Ship."

When that novelist was dramatizing "It's Never Too Late To Mend," he let Boucicault have the manuscript. A short while passed, and a letter arrived from Dublin:

"MY DEAR READE: I have your drama 'N. T. L. T. M.' There is in it a very effective piece, but, like the nut within both husk and shell, it wants freedom."

"1st. It will act five hours as it stands."

"2d. There are scenes which injure dramatically others which follow."

"3d. There are two characters you are fond of (I suppose), but can never be played I mean Jacky and the Jew."

"4th. The dialogue wants weeding. It is more in weight than actors—as they breed them now—can carry."

"Total. If you want to make a success with this drama, you must consent to a depleting process to which Shylock's single pound of flesh must be a mild transaction. Have you the courage to undergo the operation? I am afraid you have not."

The speed with which Boucicault worked is illustrated in this story of "The Colleen Bawn."

"The Colleen Bawn" followed his "Vanity Fair," which, produced by Laura Keane proved to be a failure; the actress had thereupon turned in distress to the dramatist. "What have you to put in its place?" she had queried. "Nothing," came the reply. But that night Boucicault stopped at a bookstore and purchased the above-mentioned volume, which he read from cover to cover through the early morning. Then he wrote in all haste to Miss Keane:

"MY DEAR LAURA: I have it! I send you seven steel engravings of scenes around Killarney. Get your scene painter to work on them at once. I also send a book of Irish melodies, with those marked I desire Baker to score for the orchestra. I shall read act one of my new Irish play on Friday; we rehearse that while I am writing the second, which will be ready on Monday; and we rehearse the second while I am doing the third. We can get the play out within a fortnight."

Writing, adapting, and translating four hundred plays in about forty-nine years, Boucicault was of necessity a rapid worker, and since a large number of these pieces found quick production, he and his wife did not have far to look in order to procure a wide range of roles.

The remarkable fact throughout his career, however, was that no matter whether good or bad, original or otherwise, the Boucicault drama was eagerly sought by the theatre because it was made for the theatre. As fast as the dramatist wrote, just so fast were his manuscripts given to companies for rehearsal. Boucicault himself declared in the presence of Stephen Fiske that "he was a lucky hag out of which some managers drew fortunes and some drew blanks." Jefferson succeeded in putting his hand upon "Rip"—he did more than that, for it was he who put Boucicault's hand in the way of doing it; Frank Mayo secured "The Streets of New York"; Chanfrau reaped benefit from "The Octoroon," and Rohson and Crane were fortunate with "Forbidden Fruit."

As a manager he studied his audiences carefully, and was wont to say that he preferred middle-class audiences of a certain size:

Boucicault aimed to win the popular taste; he was often heard to say that he preferred fifty-cent audiences to any other, since they came for legitimate amusement, and did not look upon the theatre as a kind of interlude—an indispensable accessory to dinner parties. Nor did he hesitate to proclaim, whenever opportunity presented itself, that the drama was being kept decent only through the sincerity of this fifty-cent body.

"I have been able," he wrote, "to compare results, and find that when an audience exceeds a certain size, it is very difficult to establish in it perfectly this fusion of minds * * * Wherefore I am led to believe that a group of more than two thousand persons is not so susceptible to psychic influences exerted by artists, as a group of less than that number. There is a limit to the genius of the actor as regards its reach over his audience; and no auditorium should exceed in size that limit."

Boucicault seems to have been forever rushing breathlessly from one task to another. An amusing incident of the busy dramatist's career is told in the following:

Boucicault was never to be outdone, whatever the circumstances. So intent was he during the rehearsals of "The Shaughraun" regarding the other characters in the cast that on the opening night, when he reached the theatre, he suddenly realized that he had wholly forgotten to pick himself out a costume for Con. So he rushed to the property room, and on with an old coat that had done service for Tony Lumpkin, and on with an old cap belonging to that same individual! Grabbing an odd pair of boots from a discarded chest—and he was ready! But disasters came thick and fast on this occasion. The second act called for a moon; just as the scene was about to begin, the stage orh exploded, and when the curtain rose the audience was amazed to find a black hole where the moon should have been. A burst of laughter showed their further appreciation of a slip in stage-management, for silver ripples quivered on the water—a case of moonlight with the moon left out.

Boucicault believed that "the Irish character had been associated with plays of a low, sensational class." He was a devoted Irishman as Mr. Moses points out:

Though closely identified with the history of American drama, he was himself an Irishman, both in sentiment and in appearance. His sense of humor shone genial in his plays, and as to the man personally, he was jovial in company and a moving spirit. His humor was pleasant and not in the least offensive, and he would say things in a broad brogue that came naturally. He knew well how to use the harney stone for he was ever ready to be agreeable.

As an Irishman, Boucicault was willing to stand by his remarks. A play of his was once staged called "Suil-a-Mor," and it brought down upon him the wrath of the English because of certain direct utterances expressed against the home government. A hue and cry was quickly raised and Boucicault was asked to eliminate the passages. "No," said the dramatist, "I mean just exactly what the lines convey. Rather than sacrifice my opinion, I'll withdraw the piece." This he did not have to do.

Early in his dramatic career, Boucicault sought a more equitable division of the profits of successful plays, and succeeded in establishing the royalty system in the United States and England. Mr. Moses writes:

We are often able to judge of a man by the estimate he makes of himself. Boucicault was not one to hide his talents under a bushel; he knew when to proclaim them from the housetops. Perhaps he was thrust into his rapid gait of work by the existing conditions of the dramatic copyright law, which, in America up to 1856, did nothing to protect the author. It was in 1856 that Congress decided the author did have the right to his own brain efforts, the right of production and the right to grant permission, without which it would be a legal offense to produce his plays. In France Boucicault had seen the dramatists prospering with a royalty system; for years he too fought for the same opportunity, and only succeeded finally by openly defying the Dramatic Authors' Society in England, and the managers in the United States.

This he proceeded to do about 1860 by sending forth more than one company in his own plays, and taking a proper commission for himself from the proceeds of each performance.

Boucicault, indeed, by these traveling companies of his, was instrumental in hastening the decline of the old stock system. In 1866 he preached his ideas to the French, who greeted them favorably, and by 1872 the United States had accepted them.

The royalty system was insisted upon by Boucicault after dire experience. Writing in 1879 he said:

To the commercial manager we owe the introduction of the hurlesque, opera-bouffe, and the reign of huffoonery. We owe to him also the deluge of French plays that set in with 1842, and swamped the English drama of that period. For example: The usual price received by Sheridan Knowles, Bulwer, and Talfourd at the time for their plays was £500. I was a beginner in 1841, and received for my comedy "London Assurance," £300. For that amount the manager bought the privilege of playing the work for his season. Three years later I offered a new play to a principal London theatre. The manager offered me £100 for it. In reply to my objection to the smallness of the sum, he remarked: "I can go to Paris and select a first-class comedy; having seen it performed I feel certain of its effect. To get this comedy translated will cost me £25. Why should I give you £300 or £500 for your comedy, of the success of which I can not feel so assured?" The argument was unanswerable, and the result inevitable. I sold a work for £100 that took me six months' hard work to compose, and accepted a commission to translate three French plays at £50 apiece. This work afforded me child's play for a fortnight. Thus the English dramatist was obliged either to relinquish the stage altogether or to become a French copyist.

Boucicault was a clever actor. It was said of him that in his own play, "Kerry," he acted "as if inspired by the genius of all that is great in Irish poetry, history and romance." His ideas on acting are given in this paragraph:

Even in acting—and he lectured many times upon the art—he averred that "could he taught only on the stage, a swimming can only be taught in the water and riding on horseback. All chamber tuition is worthless. Elocution and declamation are the last, not the first, lesson a young actor or actress should learn * * * I deny that (the art) * * * can be taught and practiced on a hearth rug. I deny that Antony can address an imaginary populace, that Romeo can make love to an absent Juliet."

Mr. Moses gives the following interesting biographical sketch of the dramatist:

The records of this dramatist's early life are contradictory. He was born in Dublin on December 26, 1822, and was christened Dionysius Lardner Boucicault after the great philologist and pamphleteer Dr. Lardner, who was satirized by Thackeray in "The Yellowplush Papers."

Samuel S. Boucicault was the father of Dion, and there is some indication that being a Frenchman, his name was spelled "Bosquet." This was further transformed into "Boursiquot," and once more changed to "Boucicault," which was the spelling retained until circa 1856, when the "r" was dropped.

On the mother's side, Boucicault received his greatest heritage; she was a Miss Darley, an Irish lady, and sister of the essayist and dramatist, George Darley, as well as of the Rev. Charles Darley, who wrote "Plighted Troth," a play which failed signally at Drury Lane. Boucicault appears to have shown some pleasure over this result, for his uncle had regarded his own first efforts as works of a schoolboy.

There are various records of his having attended London University, where he counted among his friends Charles Lamb, Kenney, a namesake of Elia. Pascoe gave Dublin as his school-center. Yet those who knew Boucicault, notably Stephen Fiske, wondered at his knowledge, and puzzled over how he secured his education.

In March, 1838, the first professional step was taken when Dion joined a dramatic company at Cheltenham, England, and was billed as Mr. Lee Morton. His maiden role was Norfolk in "Richard III." Fourteen years after he made his London debut. But before this, in 1848, he was a widower having been married since 1844 to a woman much his senior.

The public eye was already upon him at a surprisingly youthful age he had met success with the first of his dramas, "London Assurance," given its premiere at Covent Garden, on March 4, 1841. The name it bore proved to be a hasty substitution made just before the rise of the curtain for originally it was called "Out of Town." His first success was rapidly followed by other plays. "The Irish Heiress" was presented in 1842 and "Old Heads and Young Hearts" in 1844. Between these came "Alma Mater, or a Cure for a Coquette" (1842), which he was accused of appropriating from an unacknowledged source and his attempt to write a sentimental comedy at the age of twenty-one, bearing such a comprehensive title as "Woman, failed utterly. At the London Prince's Theatre, on the evening of June 14, 1853, Boucicault presented his own play, "The Vampire," it being his first appearance as an actor in that city. During this year he met Miss Agnes Robertson, who was supporting Mrs. Charles Keane, and who afterward became his wife.

Mr. Boucicault's American debut was made at the New York Broadway Theatre on November 10, 1854, when he played Sir Charles Coldstream in "Used Up." The same year Joseph Jefferson was managing John T. Ford's theatre in Richmond, Virginia, and he engaged Edwin Forrest and Mr. and Mrs. Boucicault to come to him. "The Shaughraun" was played in London on November 6, 1875, having been first produced at Wallack's Theatre on November 14, 1874. The ease with which Boucicault could shift his point of view here exhibited. Lester Wallack had commissioned him to write a play, but before it was completed another drama, more suited to his talents, had been purchased. So he went to Boucicault who had advanced some way in the mapping out of "Boys of Water," and laid the case before him. "I'll tell you what I'll do," suggested the ever-ingenious playwright, "I'll change the period of the piece, and, taking certain scenes from the manuscript, I'll build up a wholly different drama." This evolution resulted in the character of Collovala, poetic, and picturesque.

Boucicault had an interesting personality. Impulsive, extravagant, headstrong he had most of the faults and virtues of his Irish birth. We are given this contemporary opinion of him:

Let us stop for a moment and gather a few characteristics around Dion Boucicault. One grows older with the years, but it is typical of Boucicault that he blossomed all of a sudden, that he slipped early into whatever intellectual maturity he was to possess; and thereafter he became surer in his powers, without greatly intensifying his insight into human nature. Stephen Fiske called him an enigma, "a gay, semi-fashionable, semi-Bohemian" fellow. He was impulsive, nervous, a quick worker, and as ready to flare into a rage as he was to exhibit his Irish humor.

"I knew (him)," writes Clement Scott, "in the 'Colleen Bawn' days at the Adelphi, when he had a magnificent mansion and grounds at Brompton * * * I knew him in the days of 'The Shaughraun' at the same theatre, and I met him constantly at the tables of Edmund Yates (et al.) and I was also a frequent guest at his own table when he lived, as he ever did, money or no money, credit or no credit, 'en prince' at his flat * * * Dion was a born 'viveur,' a 'gourmand,' and 'gourmet,' and certainly one of the most brilliant conversationalists it has ever been my happy fortune to meet."

"He was," said the loyal Agnes Robertson, his second wife, "excessively fond of reading, and he was one of the best informed men of his time. He was very partial in his tastes to history; John Stuart Mill was his favorite philosopher; Goldsmith he preferred to all the poets, but he enjoyed Keats and Shelley also. He was well versed in the Bible, and I have often heard him in discussion with his brother William regarding the interpretation of texts which have been battled over by the theologians through the ages."

Mr. Moses gives in his volume sketches of the members of ten families prominent in the theatrical world, and more than a score of portraits illustrate the letter-press.

Published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York; price, $2.00 net.

King Edward sold the Windsor Castle collection of Whistler's etchings, some 130 in number, to an American art company last spring, and the pictures are now on exhibition in New York.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Justin Head, an Apache Indian, who had been educated at the government school at Carlisle, is charged with killing five persons in Arizona and is now a fugitive. There have been many instances of the failure of education to make an Indian good.

Mrs. Potter Palmer and six members of her family in a private car are making a three weeks' tour of California. The trip is being taken chiefly for the entertainment of the Prince and Princess Cantacuzene. The other members of the party are Mr. and Mrs. Honore Palmer, Potter Palmer, Jr., and Adrian C. Honore.

Professor Paul Milyoukov, the famous Russian liberal upon whom the government has issued a sentence of death, delivered a series of lectures in Boston at the Lowell institute in 1905. He was connected with the movement in Russia for a constitution and left this country suddenly last year in order to confer with the leaders of the liberal movement.

Baron Henri de Rothschild, the millionaire doctor of medicine, attended at the Academy of Medicine in Paris, where Dr. Poirier, at the close of a masterly lecture, expressed regret that France had no cancer institute. Baron Henri sent up a note to the lecturer expressing his pleasure at the lecture, and enclosing a "little cheque towards the preliminary expenses of the institute," which represented $20,000.

Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester (Consuelo Yznaga, widow of the Duke), is such a favorite of King Edward and Queen Alexandra, on account of her ready wit and amiability that no sooner had she landed in England from her cruise in the Mediterranean on F. W. Vanderbilt's yacht, the Warrior, than she received a wire from Balmoral commanding her to stay a few days. A few years ago the Duchess was asked by an American friend why she was so popular with royalty. "Well," she replied, "I am the court jester. I don't get a salary, but I feel sure I should earn one if there were any about."

Jacob H. Schiff, the banker, laid the corner-stone of a new synagogue in New York a few days ago, but before he was allowed to do so he became a member of Journeymen Stonemasons and Setters Union, No. 84. The press report of the incident states that with uplifted hand, the millionaire financier took a pledge not to work for less than seventy cents an hour, and never to have anything to do with a non-union job. He was initiated by William J. Skinner, business agent of the union, and then he got his card.

Miss Angelica L. Gerry received as a gift from her father, Elbridge T. Gerry, very recently, the deed for the mansion at No. 816 Fifth avenue, New York, worth more than $300,000. The house adjoins the Clarence A. Postley home at the corner of Sixty-third street, while the big Gerry mansion is at Fifth avenue and Sixty-first street. Miss Gerry is a noted whip. With her sister, Miss Mabel Gerry, she is a favorite at Newport, where both are prominent in the younger set. They are accomplished in music and have splendid voices.

Mrs. Levi Z. Leiter is to return to Chicago soon, accompanied by her two surviving daughters, the Countess of Suffolk and Mrs. Collins-Campbell, and by Lord Curzon. She will come to revise her will or make a new one in consequence of the death of her oldest daughter, Lady Curzon. The presence in Chicago of all the persons named is necessary, as the papers relating to Lady Curzon's property are in the hands of lawyers there. Joseph Leiter, the son, is to have things arranged so that the business can be concluded and the party enabled to return in time to spend Christmas in Great Britain. Mrs. Leiter is said to have aged greatly in the last year, and Lord Curzon to be in poor health.

Hotel del Coronado

A gem set in semi-tropical surroundings
Dryest marine climate known
No winter, but perpetual spring or early summer
Outdoor sports 365 days in the year
Golf, Polo, Tennis
Fishing, Boating, and Bathing
Choice cuisine of any hotel in the West
American plan only
All modern conveniences
All outside rooms
Send for illustrated booklet

MORGAN ROSS, Mgr., Coronado Beach, Cal.
H. F. NORCROSS, General Agent
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

"La Questa"

A LUSCIOUS OLD RED WINE

For Sale by

L. M. WALTER Corner California
and Devisadero Sts
McCAW BROS. - - - 401 Devisadero

Producer:

E. H. Rixford
Kohl Building, San Francisco

THE OCULARIUM

Perfect Fitting
Eye Glasses

At Moderate Prices
Lenses Replaced, 50c

Henry Kahn & Co
OPTICIANS

1309 VAN NESS AVENUE
Between Bush and Sutter

Lea & Perrins' Sauce

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Indispensable as a seasoning for Soups, Fish and Gravies

John Duncan's Sons, Agts., N. Y.

"The Secret of my Success"

LITERARY NOTES.

The Masses vs. The Millionaires.

One is rather startled to find the name of an editor of a humorous journal for the smart set—John Ames Mitchell, of Life—on the title page of a novel that might have been written by an intelligent anarchist. In "The Silent War," Mr. Mitchell pauses in his narrative of the woes of the proletariat to amuse us by artful persiflage, as if he would not be taken too seriously, but his lighter strokes only deepen the gloom of the somber shadings. A too timid millionaire, absorbed in the story, would probably rise from the reading with a new interest in club waiters and cocktails. It is by the use of the latter agents that artistic murder is accomplished in the novel.

"The Silent War" is the story of the revolt of the American people against the plutocracy. A People's League, having millions of members, is formed, and the revolution is to be brought about, not by the tigerish methods of the peasant uprisings of history, but by meeting capitalists on their own ground, and using their own weapons. The League proposes to elect the President and the law-makers, and needs $70,000,000 as a campaign fund. This immense sum they intend to collect from the rich men themselves, by the simple means of secret assassination if they refuse to be blackmailed. The juries, the police, the millionaire's business employees and his house servants are all members of the League, and there is no escape for the magnate who refuses to be mulcted. Four rich men in the story defy the people, and meet death, and a fifth, a man of many noble charities, is marked for death, when the love of a poor girl, and the gratitude of one of the conspirators, saves his life.

The illustrations by William Balfour Ker are striking socialistic studies, and are, in their way, quite as remarkable as Mr. Mitchell's unusual story.

Published by Life Publishing Company, New York; $1.50.

A Poet and a Prude.

'Tis a parlous task for a book reviewer to write a novel, but when the reviewer is Miss Mary Moss, of the Atlantic Monthly, and the story is as clever as "The Poet and the Parish," one's opinion of the tribe of critics is rather improved. Miss Moss's novel is a study of clashing temperaments, of the mating of two persons of different standards, tastes, and views of life. In real life, the romance would have speedily ended in the police or divorce courts, but in literature the poet must be allowed license in his actions as well as his verses.

When Felix Gwynne, author of erotic poems, man of the world, and unconventional to the last degree, married Adelaide Noel, a true daughter of a Puritanic family, one wonders with old Colonel Noel, what they are going to do with him. Felix plays ducks and drakes with the decorum of the Noel household. In their social wanderings, Felix does not disappoint the lionizing women who expect him to violate the proprieties of conversation, while Adelaide is expected to be grateful for remarks apropos "mortal women married to gods." No one is franker in expressing the relative merits of the couple and of his success with women than the poet himself. "Don't you realize that you are no match for me? If anything came between us, I have another passion to fall back on. Something with which you interfere."

One would not expect much harmony from a union of two so badly matched persons, but circumstances bring about a happy conclusion.

The dialogue is frequently delightfully humorous, and there is a deal of sly satire. Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

"The German Empire."

There has been no adequate account in English of the political construction of Germany until the recent appearance of Dr. Burt Estes Howard's "The German Empire." To the American student of world-politics, Germany in many respects is a perplexing government. Dr. Howard gives a clear and comprehensive review of the present state of this powerful and successful nation. The book shows the relation of the empire to the individual states; the exact power with which the Kaiser is vested; the part played in the organization of the nation by the two parliamentary bodies, the Bundesrath and the Reichstag; the functions of the Imperial Chancellor; the rights of citizenship under the German constitution; the status of Alsace-Lorraine; and the administration of the armed forces.

The Kaiser has none of the imperial power that his title suggests. The German Empire is a true state; sovereignty rests with the allied governments; and all authority exercised by the Emperor is delegated authority. Dr. Howard states that the restoration of the Kaiser title was a political stroke of Bismarck's, who did not want the world to think of the Empire as an "expanded Prussia." The author gives an account of recent legislation which has relieved the peculiar conditions in Alsace-Lorraine. The relation between the German Empire and Alsace-Lorraine is not that of a federal government to one of its member states, but that of a nation toward one of its provinces.

There is no discussion or sentiment in the book, the author's aim being to impart exact knowledge, and to give a study of the German Empire, from a juristic standpoint, since its beginning.

Published by the Macmillan Company, New York; $2.00.

New Publications.

The story of an art student in Paris, who receives a summons to pay a visit to a rich Washington aunt, and who sends a beautiful companion to impersonate her, is told in "The Impersonator," by Mary Imlay Taylor. The fraud is successfully carried out, and the complications which follow are vividly depicted. There is a charming love story and some admirable character studies in this clever novel. Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

"The Life of Alfred de Musset," by Arvede Barine, has been translated into English by Charles Conner Hayden. The biographer has been furnished with new information on the career of the author of "The Nights." The celebrated liaison of the poet and George Sand, is set forth entertainingly. The book was printed for subscribers only by The Edwin C. Hill Company.

Nine old-fashioned fairy tales, with a modern background, are brightly told in "The Wonder-Children," by Charles J. Bellamy. The curious adventures of these remarkable children will delight a normal boy or girl. The Macmillan Company; $1.50.

A most ingenious story is "The Slave of Silence," by Fred M. White. The book will be hugely enjoyed by those who like tangled plots and mystery tales. Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

"Truegate of Mogador," by Sewell Ford, is a volume of twelve refreshingly humorous stories. Very amusing are the adventures of the good people of Cedarton, N. J. Mr. Ford tells the stories with much literary art. The pictures by A. B. Frost add to the humor of the book. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50.

General A. W. Greely's "Handbook of Polar Discovery" has gone into a third edition. The volume represents more than 70,000 pages of original narrative, from which the author has compiled a resume of polar explorations from the earliest voyages to the present time. Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

A glance at our democratic institutions in the light of the experiences of the last hundred years; a consideration of the evils of machine politics; and the suggestion that we must revise our democratic government from its foundation, is the theme of "Organized Democracy," by Albert Stickney, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $1.00.

Calvin Dill Wilson has taken the first book of Spenser's "The Faery Queen," and rewritten it in prose for young readers. The result is a wonderful fairy tale. The volume is very attractively bound. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; $1.00.

LIBRARIANS TAKE NOTICE
PROBATE SALE

Full set (except 1856) of SAN FRANCISCO DIRECTORIES for sale, including Kimball's for 1850, Parker's for 1852-53, LeCount and Strong's for 1854, Langley's for 1858 to 1895 (both inclusive), and Crocker-Langley's from 1896 to 1904 (both inclusive); in good condition.

Address: JOSEPH HUTCHINSON
1117 Mission Street San Francisco, Cal.

PAUL ELDER & COMPANY

PUBLISHERS, BOOK SELLERS, ART DEALERS, STATIONERS
VAN NESS AVENUE, CORNER OF BUSH STREET, S.F. TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 646

☞ We have now ready as in former years a great variety of books and items of art interest, suitable for Holiday presentation.

☞ Our stock of fine books has lately been increased by the arrival from London of a number of rare extra illustrated books, standard sets and individual volumes in fine bindings.

☞ To the various lines heretofore found in our store, we have just added a complete stock of stationery, specially made and boxed. In connection with this we are better prepared than ever to execute orders for engraving and die stamping.

☞ Our publication department is now in New York and has reprinted from new plates most of the older and well known books, as well as a number of new books of decided interest. These may be had at the store on Van Ness Ave., as well as in our shop at Santa Barbara, which has lately moved into new and larger quarters on State Street.

L. KREISS & SONS

CABINET MAKERS
UPHOLSTERERS
DECORATORS

Dealers in Fine Mahogany, Early English Oak Furniture; reproductions of rare examples of Antique Fabrics of all important periods of English, French and Italian Arts in Tapestries, Brocaded Silks, Damasks, Embroideries, Etc.

Our stock is complete and contains many Odd Pieces suitable for Gifts.

1219-23 POST ST.

Above Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

We don't sell glasses off-hand. We fit them with a proper regard for the important part they play in your every-day life.

HIRSCH AND KAISER
1757 FILLMORE ST. Opticians

BRACELETS

THERE IS NO LARGER NOR
FINER STOCK OF THIS

The Most Popular
Form of Jewelry

THAN THAT OFFERED BY

Bohm-Bristol Co.

SOUTH-WEST CORNER OF
Van Ness Ave. and Sacramento St.

Holiday Books

FINE ART POETRY
HISTORY
FICTION JUVENILE

M. H. FAY

Importer and Bookseller
1534 Bush Street
Bet. Van Ness Ave. and Franklin St.

P. Centemeri & Co.

KID GLOVES

New Location

1551 Van Ness Ave.

Between Pine and California

San Francisco

ROBERTSON'S

NEW LOCATION

1539

Van Ness Ave., near Pine
"Next to the White House"

Mr. Robertson calls attention to the above address, which is very centrally located.

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

50 minutes from San Francisco. Complete Change of Climate
TIBURON OR SAUSALITO FERRY
All modern Conveniences

R. V. HALTON

Proprietor

LITERARY NOTES.

A Story of Arizona Ranch Life.

A story of Arizona life during the period of the Apache troubles, without war-hoops, gun-plays, picturesque gamblers, theatrical cowboys, impossible cavaliers, and Frederic Remington Indians, could be so unlike the typical romances of the Southwest, as to attract by its very novelty. And yet Frances Charles has succeeded admirably in "Pardner of Blossom Range," in depicting life in "the country God forgot," without using the conventional figures of Western fiction. "Pardner of Blossom Range" is the story of a winsome ranch girl, her delightful old grandfather, her wonderful horse, her army of suitors—every cow puncher within a day's ride—and a captain of cavalry. A very pretty romance begins with the advent of Captain Ferris into the household of Blossom Ranch. Ferris has been sent to investigate an Apache massacre, and is welcomed by old Jed Blossom, but his lonely, the granddaughter, looks askance at the military intruder. Holly hates all soldiers, and one in particular, who is alleged to be responsible for the death of a boy private, whose horse, Pardner, came into her possession. Nothing daunted, the captain plans a campaign to win the charming little vixen's affection, and wins. The interest in the story increases when Holly learns that he is the officer she hates. Captain Ferris proves that the accusation is groundless, however, and the unpleasant incident is explained to the satisfaction of all, including "Molly," the cook, who is a person of great self-importance. Besides the love interest, there are amusing and graphic descriptions of ranch life, with exceedingly life-like characters. The author's word pictures of the limitless grey desert, the hot blue sky, the barren hills, the silence and desolation of the great uninhabited spaces, are very striking. Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

Peixotto's Pictures of Italian Life.

A very beautiful holiday book is Ernest Peixotto's record of wanderings with pencil and sketch book, "By Italian Seas." The book is made notable by seventy-five exquisite drawings by the author. Mr. Peixotto ranks high as an illustrator, and has never done finer work than the sketches in "By Italian Seas." The artist reproduces with charming effect the everyday occupations, the amusements, the religious fetes, quaint architectural oddities, and the beauties of sky and sea. A villa with its gay approach, a medieval lantern, cypresses by the sea, fishing racks with painted sails, the Easter dance, Christmas toy shop, a Sicilian marionette-show—all the characteristic and colorful aspects of Italian life and landscape, are limned with daintiness of detail and admirable fidelity. Besides the studies of Italian life, Mr. Peixotto has pictured parts of Malta, Dalmatia and Tunis. The descriptive letter-press is excellent; many of the papers in the book were contributed by Mrs. Peixotto. The two wanderers set down their impressions in leisurely fashion, but we feel that the art, the language, the temperament, the history the Italians are familiar to them. The printing and paper and binding add to the attractiveness of this charming book. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $2.50 net.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

"Highways and Byways of the Mississippi Valley," by Clifton Johnson, just published by the Macmillan Company, is said to have many interesting notes of odd and out-of-the-way scenes along the great river, and the illustrations are from photographs taken during the author's travels in search of matter for the book. An inexperienced new author, Miss C. Whyte, has just won $1000 in prizes from Hodder & Stoughton, the London publishers. One price for $500 was offered for the best story for little children, another of the same amount for a girl's story, and, by a remarkable coincidence, Miss Whyte won them both. Her child's story, "The Adventures of Merrywink," is just out.

In its Living Masters of Music series the John Lane Company has brought out Wakeling Dry's volume on Giacomo Puccini, which pictures the composer and describes his operas with appreciation and discernment.

Noel Williams has found a subject for a fresh book of historical memoirs in Queen Margot, the wife of Henry of Navarre. It will be published by Harpers in their series of monographs on French history. The period dealt with is specially interesting and dramatic, for it includes the Massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Among the literary biographies of the season that of Sir Leslie Stephen, by Frederic William Maitland, announced by G. P. Putnam's Sons, should have the attention of the large circle who have profited in other days by the writings of the critic and essayist.

Sir Clements Markham has made a book on the life of Richard III which promises to unravel some of the mysteries and refute some of the fabrications that have been common possessions since the time of the first Tudor king, who took particular care to blacken the reputation of the great Duke of Gloucester and sovereign.

A book for nature lovers is almost ready for publication by Henry Holt & Co. It is "A Log of the Sun," by C. William Beebe, Curator of Birds in the New York Zoological Park, author of "The Bird," &c. The 200 illustrations, of which fifty-two are in colors, are from the pen of Walter King Stone.

The new Thackeray coterie or Titmarsh Club, held its first dinner in London Sunday evening November 4. The day was chosen to give the theatrical members an opportunity to attend.

Maxim Gorky and Mme. Maria Andrevna are in Naples for the winter. The Russian author registered himself as M. Makrof on his arrival, as he desired seclusion.

Jack London on Waterloo.

The charge made by Stanley Waterloo, that Jack London in his latest novel, "Before Adam," plagiarized Waterloo's book, "The Story of Ab," is regarded by London as something of a joke. London laughs at the accusation, but freely admits that he got his idea for "Before Adam" from Waterloo's book, says the Examiner in an interview with the Californian novelist. In fact, he says that the inconsistencies in Waterloo's book prompted him to write his own, which in a way is an answer to "Ab."

"Of course, both books deal with the same subject, the evolution of man," said London, "and the field is so limited that books necessarily touch upon points that are identical. But Waterloo, while he attempts to deal with the scientific phases of the evolution of man, is unscientific in the extreme. The evolution of man from brute was a process that took thousands of years—hundreds of generations—yet he attempts to crowd it all into one generation. The discovery of artificial fire, the taming of the horse and the dog, the invention of the bow and arrow, the development of human speech—all these, which took centuries and centuries in their development, he brings about during the life of one man."

"My book is on the same theme and covers much of the same ground, but I have endeavored to show, as faithfully as possible, the gradual evolution of man from the animal. If in choosing for my book the same theme as Waterloo's I have been guilty of plagiarism, then the same charge may be made against every author. It might just as truthfully be said that every writer who produces an historical novel is guilty of plagiarism; that every author who chooses for a subject a theme that has already been touched upon by another author is a plagiarist."

STAGE GOSSIP.

Dramatic Notes.

Julia Marlowe is said to have attained the highest point in her theatrical career in her impersonation of Joan of Arc.

The Victory Theatre in San Jose has been leased to Robert G. Barton, of the Barton Opera House, Fresno, for two years at $450 a month rent. Under the new manager the house opened Thursday evening with "The College Widow." The Victory has been closed since the earthquake.

Creston Clarke, who is a favorite in New York, closed a two weeks' engagement in the Park Theatre in that city last Saturday in "The Ragged Messenger." Unlike his former productions this play is modern in plot and time, and is a big success.

White Whittlesey will remain in the East this winter. He is appearing in Boston in a play called "The Road to Yesterday," originally christened "A Midsummer Eve," by Evelyn Greenleaf Sutherland.

Kyle Bellevue made a dashing, swagger Brigadier Gerard in the production at the Savoy Theatre, New York, of the play made from Arthur Conan Doyle's military romances, but the piece was not a success. The critics praised the actor's art with little disagreement.

Sarah Bernhardt opened her season in Paris, November 10, with a five-act drama entitled "Sainte Therese," by Catulles Mendes. Madame Bernhardt as Sainte Therese played with cleverness and vigor, and the piece, which lends itself to splendid sacerdotal effects of staging, is most artistically mounted.

Musical Notes.

In this sesqui-centennial year of the central figure of the trio of classic symphonists, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, it was eminently fitting that the fifteenth and final concert by the University Orchestra in the first year of its existence, last Thursday, in the Greek Theatre, should include, as chief number in its programme, the third of that group of immortal works penned in the six weeks between the 26th day of June and the 10th of August, 1778—Mozart's last three symphonies: in E flat, in G minor, and the Jupiter. The G minor was played in the Greek Theatre at the time of the Mozart Festival last spring; the Jupiter, a few weeks ago. The great companion, the Symphony in E flat, this Mozart year appropriately concluded a list to which the community may point with pardonable pride, as the first offering of the new horn University Orchestra, as yet in its swaddling clothes. Several months will pass before another symphony is heard in the Greek Theatre, but plans are making for the spring series, inaugurating the second year, which promises to be big with treasures gathered from the storehouses of the masters, old and new.

The Orpheum.

Charles F. Semon, better known as the thin half of the musical comedy team of Falke and Semon, will make his first appearance in San Francisco as a single entertainer at the Orpheum this Sunday afternoon. The Musical Avoles have no equals as xylophonists. The lady and two gentlemen comprising the organization made a great hit on their last appearance here. Lina Pantzer, a dainty bit of femininity and a member of the famous acrobatic family, will offer the bounding wire act that has won her fame. Nick Long and Idalene Cotton will present their new and original comedietta "Managerial Troubles," and Trovollo, the exceptionally clever ventriloquist, will continue his comedy drama, "The Hotel Office." The Knight Brothers and Marion Sawtelle, the Kita Banzai troupe of acrobatic marvels and Orpheum Motion Pictures, showing the latest novelties will complete a striking bill for the Thanksgiving holidays. The grounds of the Chutes, where the Orpheum is located, have many new improvements.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

UNION SQUARE
SAN FRANCISCO

Have you had Lunch in the FAMOUS GRILL ROOM
IN MAIN BUILDING

JUST THE PLACE TO MEET YOUR FRIENDS FOR BUSINESS OR PLEASURE

Amusements.

ORPHEUM

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee Nov. 25
Matinee Every Day Except Monday

A Vaudeville Holiday!

CHARLES F. SEMON; Dillon Brothers;
The Musical Avoles; Miss Lina Pantzer;
Trovollo; Knight Brothers and Sawtelle;
Kita Banzai Troupe; Orpheum Motion Pictures and Last Week of Nick Long and Idalene Cotton.

PRICES—10c, 25c, 50c. Down town Box Office
at Donlon's Drug Store, Fillmore and Sutter Sts.
Phone, West, 6,000.

CHUTES AND ZOO—Open daily from 10 a. m. till midnight. Admission 10c; Children 5c.

RACING!
NEW CALIFORNIA
JOCKEY CLUB
OAKLAND TRACK

Six or more Races each Week Day
RAIN OR SHINE

Races start at 1:40 P. M. sharp

For Special Trains stopping at the Track take the
S. P. Ferry, foot of Market Street, leaves at 12, thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 p. m.
No smoking in last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.
Returning trains leave the track after fifth and last races.
PERCY W. TREAT, Sec.
THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

THE Waldorf Hair Store

1528-30 Bush Street
Near Van Ness Ave.
BRANCH STORE
3461 Sacramento St.

Most Complete and Varied Assortments of HUMAN HAIR West of New York, and the Most Perfectly Appointed Establishment for

Marcel Waving, Ladies' Hair Dressing, Shampooing, Manicuring,
Dyeing and Bleaching

Special Department of Dermatology

Ladies' and Gentlemen's Wigs a Specialty
Special Appointment by Phone
EMERGENCY 620

J. S. DINKELSPIEL

Importer of
Diamonds, Precious Stones

1021 Van Ness Ave.
San Francisco, Cal.

Fine Set Pieces a Specialty

JOHN G. ILS & CO.

Manufacturers
High Grade French Ranges

Kitchen and Bakery Outfits

624 WASHINGTON STREET
San Francisco, Cal.

VANITY FAIR.

It is now more than a dozen years since the great French dressmakers issued the fiat that the fashions in the days of the Directory, the Consulate, and the early Empire were to be worn again. The idea was seized upon with eagerness, and the short waists, the eccentric lappets and hats, the classic garments of our great-grandmothers, reappeared in Paris. Now Paquin, the celebrated Parisian designer, is reverting to Empire lines.

The man of today shows no inclination to return to the extravagance in costume of the Muscadins and Incroyables coats, short-waisted to the hips, chins hidden in folds of muslin, beribboned knee-breeches, or trousers wide as women's skirts, hair falling in long ringlets, and watch-chains with trinkets falling on either side of the waistcoat. There is something incongruous in women choosing to be clothed in the same trappings. In those days a masquerade of eccentric costumes and of transparent garments came into vogue. The Incroyables ladies wore redingotes, and waistcoats, and vast neckties fastened with pins, heavy chains and enameled watches, immense hats, beribboned, beplumed, and blonde wigs. The Merveilleuses wandered about in diaphanous draperies, their throats, necks, and arms bare.

A craze for the antique had set in; tunics, jewels, head-dresses were all copied from Greek and Roman models. The painters, David, Prudhon, Gerard formed the taste of the day in classic art. The beautiful Mme. Tallien wore at a ball a transparent gown, the folds falling like the drapery of a statue by Phidias; her golden garters could be seen through the diaphanous texture; a girdle of gold, the clasp formed by an antique gem; cameos at the shoulders holding the drapery of an almost sleeveless tunic; every toe of her stockingless feet, shod in purple sandals, was laden with rings; on one arm, a bracelet of gold fashioned like a serpent, the head of which was formed of a single emerald. Mme. Pauline Leclerc, Bonaparte's sister, appeared at a ball as an animated Greek statue of a Bacchante. The lady's hair was dressed with bands of spotted fur simulating that of a tiger, surmounted by grapes of gold. Her fine India-muslin dress bordered with a gold wreath of vine-leaves; the short sleeves adorned with more cameos; a girdle of gold fastened by an antique-carved gem was placed under the bust; bracelets of gold and of cameos on the arms. No wonder those who saw her said the salon grew brighter when this fair vision glided in.

The pagan bareness of attire which is such a marked feature of the real Directory costume became modified as the influence of religion grew. Paris went wild with delight in 1799 as a bevy of veiled young girls publicly, for the first time since the revolution, appeared before the altar as communicants. The bridal dress became a pattern of modest attire. It was usually of India muslin embroidered with sprigging and open work, made with a train, high in the neck, short in the waist. The front breadth, the hem, and the sleeves were embroidered. The high frill was made of English point lace; the small cap, of Brussels lace garlanded with orange blossoms. The long veil enveloped the wearer from head to foot. This delicately virginal dress, suggestive in its softness and mystery, contrasts favorably with some of the bridal dresses of today, gowns that might be worn as ball dresses; hair elaborately "done up," as on conquest bent. The old habit of presenting the bride with a corbeille de mariage was revived, and when, in 1800, Mlle. Pirmont (afterwards Mme. d'Abrantes) married General Junot, she was one of the first lucky brides thus distinguished. She gives a glowing account of all the dainty stores of feminine attire that met her delighted eyes of sixteen, when, on the eve of her wedding, the great box in pink Gros de Naples, embroidered in black chenille arrived. A great regard for the fineness of their linen distinguished the men and women of that day. It was the true note of elegance that the embroidery, the sewing, the perfume used should be exquisite, and the names of the fashionable lingeres are handed down to us. The pink box contained under-linen, gaufered and embroidered as only Mlle. l'Olive could embroider; handkerchiefs, petticoats, morning-jackets (short-waisted with open sleeves, and training white skirts, all embroidered at the hem) India-muslin peignoirs, night-jackets, night and morning caps, of every shape and color; and all this pretty finery edged and trimmed with Valenciennes, Mechlin, or English point lace. The wedding-casket, or corbeille, was shaped like a large vase covered with white and green velvet, embroidered in gold; the foot, of gilt bronze, was filled with the husband's offerings of India cashmere shawls, veils of English and Flemish point lace, Turkish stuffs brought by the general from Egypt for his future bride. India muslin, worked with silver thread, all the pretty trifles, the ribbons, the fans, the artificial flowers, the jewels dear to women's hearts. Directory and early Empire gems have a cachet of their own. Ladies collect them now, and they are a part of the revival of the period. It was an age of jewels, spoils brought back by Napoleon's generals from Eastern campaigns, topazes large as small apricots, necklaces and parures of cats-eyes, combs of pearls and diamonds, the inevitable, long-handled eyeglass of tortoise-shell incrustated with diamonds, sets of cameos, and medallions containing miniature portraits surrounded by brilliants and engraved antique gems.

The fashions of the day were influenced by Napoleon's restless career. The expedition into Egypt brought into favor everything Eastern. India cashmere shawls worth eight thousand, ten thousand, or twelve thousand francs, formed part of every fine lady's wardrobe. The style with which she draped the folds about her figure is interpreted as a subtle expression of her personality. Mme. Recamier, too poor to enhance the witchery of her beauty with the sparkle of gems, wore her cashmere shawl with the air of a goddess. Mme. Tallien wound hers with classic grace over a girdled peplum. Mme. Bacciochi, half muse, half pedant, founder of a society for the literary women of her day, draped herself as a sybil in her mantle as she lectured to an audience of blue-stockings. The effect of the scarlet shawl and the Greek sleeveless tunic were enhanced by the wreath of gold laurel-leaves placed under the turban of gold-and-silk embroidered muslin twined round her majestic head. The fashion of wearing turbans came in after the campaign in Italy. Mme. Mechlin, beautiful as Guido's "Cenci," appeared wearing one of fine white muslin that had the effect of a snowy cloud above her brow, from which escaped a few stray ringlets. Mme. de Stael's turban is memorable with its jeweled aigrette and its ample folds. The turban, except in a modified form, has not yet appeared on the feminine heads of today.

The Directory merged into the Consulate, and Josephine, as plain Mme. Bonaparte, held a sort of court at the Tuileries and at Malmaison. She was middle aged, and yet a charm belonged to her which made her seem young among women half her age. With the tact which is part of genius for dress, Josephine exchanged muslin, fitted for the young, for the more dignified flow and sheen of silk and satin draperies. She kept to the last the slender figure of the Creole, a fact it will be well for all stout women to remember when they contemplate following the fashion she set in dress. Her passion for flowers influenced the fashions of her time. Flowers decked her dresses, her hair, her bonnets. All her ladies wore flowers. At small dancing parties all the women who danced usually wore white crepe dresses (tulle was not worn in those days) classically made, with a glimmer of diamond clasps at the shoulders, and wreaths of flowers on their heads. In the daytime the coal-scuttle bonnet or more properly speaking, the hat trimmed with feathers or flowers, was a characteristic feature of the walking costumes. It did not strike the wearer that the headgear and the classic draperies made an incongruous ensemble. The quaint redingote, brought into fashion in the dawning days of the Directory by the Incroyables, with its huge lappets, big buttons, and short waist, gradually disappeared, and the long, flowing, round mantle and narrow pelisse took its place. The muff, large as a pillow of fur, appeared on the scene. Under the guidance of Josephine, luxury and splendor increased. The Empire was an age of splendor. The ladies of the court wore, to please their mistress, a quantity of diamonds in wreaths, in bands, in ears of corn. Their court dresses cost at least fifty louis each; the masses of jewels with which they decked themselves were almost embarrassing, gold chains twining six or seven times round the neck, rings on every finger, earrings with three pendants, lockets covered with diamonds, three or four bracelets on each arm, diadems, long gold pins, and cameos in the hair. Josephine, with her passion for luxury, delighted in all this glitter round her. She was an easy prey to every tempter that approached her with some new personal adornment. With an allowance of six hundred thousand francs she was always in debt.

The sex owes to Sarah Bernhardt the thirty-two button glove, the revival at that time of the Empire dress, the Directory sash, and the long boa, dear to the hearts of our grandmothers. She set the fashion for Theodora hair-pins and Tosca hats, and, in fact, wielded an influence over the world of dress beyond that exercised by any other woman in the world since the days of the Empress Eugenie.

The Minneapolis Journal recently celebrated its 21st anniversary under its present management, and an entire Minneapolis theatre was filled by the employees of the paper and their families. After the first act a miniature "extra" was issued bearing on the play and containing humorous "local news" concerning the audience.

Wells Fargo & Co. EXPRESS

On and after November 19th, offices of the General Manager, Superintendents Tariff and Foreign Departments, formerly at 1033, 1035 and 1037 Franklin street, will be located at 31 Second street. Purchasing and Supply Department, formerly at Ferry Depot, will be at 41 Second street.

Principal offices for transaction of local business will be continued at Corner Golden Gate avenue and Franklin street.

Ferry Depot,
Third-street Depot.

For the accommodation of patrons branch offices have been established at 39 Second street (near Mission).
1824 Geary street (near Fillmore).
3410 Nineteenth street.
308 Clement street.

A. CHRISTESON
General Manager.

Notice of Assessment Fireman's Fund Insurance Company

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that at a meeting of the Directors held on the 7th day of November, 1906, an assessment of three hundred (300) dollars per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately to Louis Weinmann, the Secretary of said corporation, at its office No. 401 California Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the tenth day of December, 1906, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on the twenty-sixth day of December, 1906, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

LOUIS WEINMANN,
Secretary of the
FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY.
Office: 401 California St., San Francisco, California.

Spend Your Thanksgiving

Make your plans to spend Thanksgiving at Hotel del Monte and avoid all home cares. You can leave San Francisco Wednesday at 3:00 o'clock and enjoy a few days, vacation, returning Sunday or Monday. Special round trip rates. For more details address
GEO. P. SNELL, Manager,
Del Monte, California.

At Hotel del Monte

ANNOUNCEMENT

Marie L. Sweeney

Formerly of 121 Post

Is Now Located at

1536 Bush Street

WITH A COMPLETE STOCK OF EXCLUSIVE STYLES IN

MILLINERY

HOTEL COLLINGWOOD

35th St., between 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY

New fire-proof hotel, located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.

Positively exclusive. Service a la carte.

Goodyear Rubber Company

Have Returned to Their Old Home, Where They Were Located Before the Fire,

573-579 Market St., near Second
Tel. Temporary 1788

EDUCATIONAL

MISS HAMLIN'S

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Formerly at 1849 Jackson St., is now at 22 Pacific Ave., near Webster St. Mid-term begins October 15. Accredited. Address

Miss S. D. Hamlin
2230 Pacific Avenue San Francisco

PORTLAND

OREGON

St. Helen's Hall

A girl's school of the highest class. Corps of teachers, location, building, equipment—the best. Send for catalogue.

School opens September 17, 1906

U. REVEL, A. M.

Post-Graduate from Florence, Italy.

ITALIAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

918 Alice Street Oakland

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL

Palo Alto, Cal. Home and Day School for Girls Intermediate and Primary Departments. Certificate admits to Stanford, Vassar and Wellesley. Number limited. Reopens August 20th.

MR. HUGO MANSFELDT

Announces his removal to 2090 Fell St., corner of Shrader. Telephone West 1736.

MLLE. ELEANORE JOSEPH

(Late from Paris and Berlin)

SINGING AND PIANO

1915 Baker St., near Sacramento San Francisco

G. B. GALVANI

Vocal Teacher

814 OAK STREET OAKLAND, CAL

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia; two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's former property. For circulars, address Miss SYLVIA EASTMAN, Principal, Ogontz School, P. O., Pa.

Mathematics and English.

University and preparatory subjects; no pre-prescribe courses, but assistance given in any manner either personally or by correspondence. Miss C. I. Williams, M. S., Mrs. G. S. Manchester, M. S., 21 El Granada Bldg., Bancroft Way, Berkeley, Cal.

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors Supply-houses, Business Men and Corporations.

Allen's Press Clipping Bureau
Kohl Building

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Gen. Phil Sheridan was at one time asked what incident in his life caused the most amusement. "Well," he said, "I always laugh when I think of the Irishman and his army mule. I was riding down the line one day when I saw an Irishman mounted on a mule which was kicking rather freely. The mule finally got his foot caught in the stirrup, when, in the excitement Pat remarked: "'Well, begorra, if you're goin' o git on I'll be gittin' off!'"

In the State of Washington, a railway bridge had been destroyed by fire, and it was necessary to replace it. The bridge engineer and his staff were ordered in haste to the place. Two days later came the superintendent of the division. Alighting from his private car, he encountered the old master bridge-builder.

"Joe," said the superintendent, and the words quivered with energy, "I want this job rushed. Every hour's delay costs the company money. Have you got the engineer's plans for the new bridge?"

"I don't know," replied the bridge-builder, "whether the engineer has got the picture drawn yet or not, but the bridge is up and the trains is passin' over it."

Julian Trask, formerly Labor Commissioner of New Hampshire, stammers greatly in his speech and this peculiarity is well known throughout the State. One day he was approached by a stranger, who said he had a son who stuttered. He was anxious to have the lad cured and asked Mr. Trask for advice regarding the matter. The Labor Commissioner reflected gravely for a few moments and then responded with all the emphasis he could command: "S-s-s-shoot him!"

A Wall-street man once suddenly evinced a great interest in nautical matters, and despite his inexperience was made the commodore of a yacht club in Maine. One day the newly fledged yachtsman shouted to an officer of a certain craft: "Have you weighed anchor?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then," thundered the new commodore, "why the deuce don't you announce he weight?"

There was once a funeral in Nebraska and the preacher who had been asked to deliver the eulogy was a stranger in town and did not know the departed sister. So, after he had said all that he could, he suggested that if anybody else could say a few words about the poor dead lady it would be well.

Three or four made appropriate remarks. Then there was a pause. At last one old brother arose and said:

"Well, if we're all through speaking about the departed sister, I will now make a few brief remarks on the tariff."

General Sherman once possessed an Irish servant whose forte was asking questions and trying to find out the why and wherefore of everything he was told to do. During a battle an orderly one day approached the general and told him that his favorite horse, Ross, had been struck by a cannon ball and killed.

Calling his Irish servant the general said, "Go skin Ross."

"Why, sir, is Ross dead?" began the nan.

General Sherman rose up in his wrath, saying: "Never mind whether he is dead or not—I told you to go out and skin him." The man returned about three hours later and Sherman hailed him with the words: "Where have you been? Does it take you three hours to skin a horse?"

"No," answered Mike, "but it took me about two hours to catch him."

Rider Haggard, the author of "She," telling a good story apropos of that novel. Not long ago he heard that a ballet, based on his romance, was to be produced at Budapest, and he wrote, asking for programmes and photographs. He received a letter in reply from the manager, saying that he had believed that the illustrious author was dead, as obituaries had appeared in the Hungarian newspapers. Mr. Haggard wrote again, and asked that the report of his death might be contradicted, but the manager replied that the editors refused to publish the contradiction, as they believed it to be a mere dodge to advertise the ballet.

A Chicago hotel had a night watchman who did not take very kindly to a system whereby he was required to go through the hotel at certain hours and touch a set of electric buttons, thus indicating his whereabouts at a given time. So a pedometer was given to him, which would register every step he took.

All went well for a time. One morning, however, the watchman was missing. On search being made, he was found asleep in the engine room, and the pedometer so attached to the piston-rod of the engine that with every stroke it registered a step. It had been traveling all night, and when taken off it registered two hundred and twelve miles.

ARGONAUTS FOR OUR FILES.

To complete the office files of the Argonaut the following numbers are required. In answer to notices in previous issues, many subscribers have kindly forwarded copies of the paper, and some of the volumes are now complete. We would be glad to have any of the following numbers from any disconnected copies of the Argonaut that our readers have and are willing to part with. We do not ask or expect that our subscribers will break complete sets to favor us:

Numbers Required to Complete an Argonaut File.

- Volume VI, 1880—Nos. 6, 13, 15, 17, 18, 22, 24, 26.
- Volume VII, 1880—Nos. 3, 8, 14, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24.
- Volume VIII, 1881—Nos. 2, 11, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26.
- Volume IX, 1881—Nos. 1, 3, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.
- Volumes X and XI, 1882—All numbers.
- Volumes XII and XIII, 1883—All numbers.
- Volumes XIV and XV, 1884—All numbers.
- Volume XVI, 1885—All numbers.
- Volume XVII, 1885—Nos. 1, 2, 7, 10, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26.
- Volume XVIII, 1886—Nos. 1, 9, 10, 26.
- Volume XIX, 1886—Nos. 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23.
- Volume XX, 1887—Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 26.
- Volume XXI, 1887—Nos. 1, 3, 4, 8, 11, 13, 22, 23.
- Volume XXII, 1888—Nos. 3, 7, 11, 18, 25.
- Volume XXIII, 1888—Nos. 3, 7, 10, 11, 25.
- Volume XXIV, 1889—No. 6.
- Volume XXV, 1889—Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19.
- Volume XXVI, 1890—Nos. 21, 23.
- Volume XXVII, 1890—No. 1.
- Volume XXVIII, 1891—Nos. 1, 7.
- Volume XXIX, 1891—Nos. 8, 12, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22.
- Volume XXX, 1892—Nos. 6, 20, 22, 24.
- Volume XXXI, 1892—Nos. 2, 3, 7.
- Volume XXXII, 1893—No. 16.

Argonauts for Our Files.

Among the many who have very kindly sent us papers and to whom we extend our thanks are the following:

- Mr. F. W. Purmort, Van Wert, Ohio.
- Mrs. Charles Fernald, San Francisco.
- Mr. M. H. Lazear, Santa Barbara.
- Mr. J. C. Rowland, University Library, Berkeley.
- Mrs. F. Roeding, San Francisco.
- Mr. Edgar F. Coursen 658 Lovejoy St., Portland.
- Miss Ellen Atkinson, Brunswick, Me.
- Mr. F. W. Jones, San Gabriel, Cal.

A woman has been arrested in Paris carrying in her arms a four-years-old child which had been trained to snatch watches and scarf-pins as its mother carried it through the streets. The child was seen to grab two watches and seven pins in less than half an hour.

The First National Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Corner of Bush and Sansome Streets here presents its statement showing the condition of the bank on the 12th of November, 1906:

Resources

Loans and Discounts.....	$10,421,816 73
United States 2 per cent Bonds of 1903.....	1,974,000 00
Premiums on United States Bonds.....	30,000 00
Other Bonds and Securities.....	28,629 75
Banking Premises.....	224,000 00
Cash and Sight Exchange.....	5,799,602 45
	$18,478,048 93

Liabilities

Capital.....	$ 1,500,000 00
Surplus and Profits.....	1,689,730 44
Circulation.....	1,486,800 00
Deposits.....	13,801,518 49
	$18,478,048 93

Since the 18th of April our Deposits have increased $3,492,531.

The Accounts of Banks, Corporations and Individuals are invited

SAFE DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT

Special advantages are offered in our Safe Deposit Boxes and Storage Vaults for the care of valuable papers, jewels and silverware

French American Bank

Union Trust Building (Third Floor)

Ready to accommodate its customers and do a general banking business. We will collect on insurance policies for those wishing our services.

THE FRENCH SAVINGS BANK

occupies offices in the same building.

Officers—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Bocquerez, Vice-President. Directors—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergerot, E. J. DeSaba, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, J. J. Mack, Geo. Belaney, Leon Kaufman.

Our Branch Bank is Now Open

at No. 810 Van Ness Avenue, near Eddy St.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....	$ 2,552,719.61
Capital actually paid up in cash.....	1,000,000.00
Deposits, June 30, 1906.....	38,476,520.22

F. Tillmann, Jr., President; Daniel Meyer, First Vice-President; Emil Rohde, Second Vice-President; A. H. R. Schmidt, Cashier; Wm. Herrmann, Asst. Cashier; Geo. Tourny, Secretary; A. H. Muller, Asst. Secretary; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

Board of Directors:

F. Tillman, Jr., Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, N. Ohlandt, J. W. Van Bergen, E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

Helping the Homeless

The Continental Building and Loan Association

Has helped build up several interior towns and cities of California but for the next few years its funds will be used to help restore the burned homes of San Francisco

Dr. Washington Dodge, President
Gavin McNab, Attorney.
Wm. Corbin, Sec'y and Gen'l Mgr.

Office: Corner Market and Church Streets

A. Zellerbach & Sons PAPER DEALERS

Now Located at

Volkman Bldg., 416 Jackson St., San Francisco
Branch: 514 Eleventh St., Oakland

FULL SUPPLY OF ALL KINDS OF PAPER

SAVINGS

Savings deposited with us, subject to our liberal rate of interest, accumulate rapidly. Open an account to-day at one of our Branches.

West End Branch

1531 Devisadero St., near Post

Mission Branch

927 Valencia St., near 21st

Uptown Branch

1350 Geary St., West of Fillmore or at our

Home Office

California Safe Deposit and Trust Company
California and Montgomery Streets
San Francisco, U. S. A.

Mutual Savings Bank

710 Market St., Opposite Third
SAN FRANCISCO

Guaranteed Capital.....	$ 1,000,000
Paid-up Capital.....	300,000
Surplus.....	320,000
Assets.....	10,000,000

Interest paid on deposits.
Loans on approved securities.

Officers—President, James D. Phelan; First Vice-President, S. G. Murphy; Second Vice-President, John A. Hooper; Secretary and Cashier, Geo. A. Story; Asst. Secretary and Asst. Cashier, C. B. Hobson; Attorney, Frank J. Sullivan.
Directors—James D. Phelan, John A. Hooper, Frank J. Sullivan, Jas. M. McDonald, S. G. Murphy, James Moffitt, Robt. McElroy, Charles Holbrook, Rudolph Spreckels.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The engagement is announced of Miss Stella McCalla, daughter of Rear-Admiral Bowman H. McCalla, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. McCalla, to Mr. Frank Stayton, of London.

The engagement is announced of Miss Alice Meyer, daughter of Mr. J. H. Meyer, of Menlo Park, to Mr. Frederick D. Hammond.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Chandler Howard have issued invitations to the wedding of their daughter, Gladys, to Mr. Charles Whittlesey Atkinson, on Thursday afternoon, the twenty-second of November, at Christ Church, Yokohama.

The marriage of Miss Emily Rosenstirn, daughter of Dr. Julius Rosenstirn, to Mr. Sydney Josephs, took place on Saturday last at the Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

Mr. Edward M. Greenway entertained at a dance on Tuesday evening last at the Palace Hotel, in celebration of his birthday anniversary.

The first dance of the Friday Cotillion Club, under the direction of Mrs. Ynez Shorb White, took place last (Friday) night at the Palace Hotel.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin and the Baroness von Schroeder entertained at a tea on Thursday afternoon of last week from four to seven o'clock, at Mrs. Martin's house on Broadway, on which occasion Miss Janet von Schroeder made her formal debut. Assisting in receiving the two hundred guests who called were Mrs. J. Downey Harvey, Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Mrs. Lansing Kellogg, Mrs. Gaston Ashe, Mrs. C. Fred Kohl, Mrs. C. O. Alexander, Miss Anita Harvey, Miss Alice Hager, Countess Naselli, Countess Fabbri, Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt, Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, Mrs. Bowie Detrich, Mrs. James Keeney, Mrs. Robert Oxnard, Mrs. Chauncey R. Winslow, Miss O'Connor, Miss Genevieve Harvey, Miss Maizie Langhorne, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Louise Boyd, Miss Marian Huntington, Miss McKinstry, Miss Cadwallader, Miss Emily Wilson, Miss Charlotte Wilson, and Miss Maude Bourn.

Dr. and Mrs. James Ward Keeney and Miss Mary Keeney will entertain this (Saturday) afternoon, at a tea from three to six o'clock, at which Miss Keeney will make her debut. Among those assisting in receiving will be Mrs. Hyde-Smith, Mrs. George Pope, Mrs. Alexander Garceau, Mrs. William Taylor, Mrs. Walter Martin, Mrs. Augustus Taylor, Mrs. Robert Oxnard, Mrs. Fred McNear, Mrs. C. R. Winslow, Mrs. Frank Griffin, Miss Laura McKinstry, Miss Emily Wilson, Miss Linda Cadwallader, Miss Gertrude Hyde-Smith, Miss Julia Langhorne, Miss Charlotte Wilson, Miss Janet von Schroeder, Miss Maizie Langhorne, Miss Louise Boyd, Miss Marguerite Barron, Miss Margaret Hyde-Smith and Miss Genevieve Harvey.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Van Loben Sels and Miss Van Loben Sels entertained at a large reception and dance last (Friday) night at the Claremont Country Club in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Mauritz Van Loben Sels.

Mrs. J. R. K. Nuttall was the hostess last week at a luncheon in honor of Countess Lalande (nee Parrott) who is visiting here. Among those present were Mrs. Timothy Hopkins, Mrs. Frederick Sharon, Mrs. Norman McLaren, Mrs. Louis Parrott, Mrs. James Otis and Mrs. George M. Pinckard.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a resume of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Prince and Princess Andre Poniatowski (formerly Miss Elizabeth Sperry) have been spending a brief time recently in London, but have returned to their home in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Clark, who have been at Hotel Del Monte since the spring, will return shortly to their home in San Mateo for the winter.

Miss Jennie Crocker arrived last week from New York in her private car, and is at her home in San Mateo.

Mrs. Henry F. Allen has returned from a stay of several weeks at Santa Barbara and Coronado.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis McComas (formerly Miss Marie Louise Parrott) have gone from England to Paris, where they have taken an apartment for the winter.

Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla has been a visitor in the city recently from her home in Santa Barbara.

Mr. and Mrs. Latham McMullin have gone East for a month's stay. On their return they will go to San Rafael to spend the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sadoc Tobin returned on Thursday of last week from a stay of several weeks in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker were due to arrive this week from New York, where Mr. Crocker went to meet Mrs. Crocker and their family on their return from Europe.

Mrs. Joseph B. Crockett went down recently to Paso Robles for a brief stay.

Miss Elizabeth Livermore left on Tuesday of last week for Santa Barbara where she will spend the winter.

Mrs. Howard Huntington has arrived from Los Angeles and is the guest of relatives in Berkeley.

Miss Alice Herrin has returned from a visit to friends in Fresno.

Miss Jeannette Hooper spent last week in Grass Valley as the guest of Miss Elizabeth Foote.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack London have been the guests of Mr. George Sterling at Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Prof. C. H. Gilbert, head of the Department of Zoology at Stanford, and Prof. J. O. Snyder, have returned to Palo Alto after making their submarine survey in Monterey Bay for the United States Fish Commissioners.

Mrs. W. H. Patton, who has been in New York for the past year, sailed on November 20th for Europe, with Miss Marion Chenery, going by way of Naples. They will spend the winter in Florence.

Miss Virginia Vassault, who has been abroad for the past year arrived recently in New York and will return soon to this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin, who are at present in Paris, will leave shortly for Pau, where they have apartments for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. James V. Coleman have been in San Francisco for a brief visit from Santa Barbara, where they are to spend the winter.

Mr. Clarence Warren Stoddard, who has been staying at Congress Springs for the past six months, has gone to Monterey.

Miss Ardella Mills and Miss Elizabeth Mills left on Saturday last for the East, where they expect to spend the winter.

M. Fakharoff, a titled diplomat of St. Petersburg, with his wife and Mm. C. A. Kondratovitch and A. Glouchanousky, of the Russian army, spent a few days at Del Monte last week on their way around the world.

Mr. Clarence Follis left on Monday for New York where he will spend the winter.

Mrs. A. H. Payson, who has returned from a trip to Southern California in her motor car, is now at Del Monte.

Mrs. Edward Pringle, Miss Nina Pringle and Miss Hess Pringle, who have recently returned from Europe, are now in Mexico and will return to California early in December.

Mrs. A. D. Grimwood has returned to her home in Fruitvale after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. J. Bryant Grimwood in this city.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gerberding left on Saturday, November 17, for a two month's visit to New York.

Miss Lydia Hopkins has recently been the guest of Mrs. William Babcock in San Rafael.

Gen. Wm. M. Graham has recently gone to Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mrs. A. L. Bancroft will leave shortly for an eastern trip and will probably be away from California for several months visiting friends and relatives.

Mr. F. W. Dohrmann has sailed for Germany to be absent from this city for several months.

Mrs. Henry F. Allen, who has been spending several weeks at Coronado, has returned to her home on Pacific avenue.

Mr. F. W. Zule is about to leave on a trip to New York City.

Mrs. E. F. Preston went down from Woodside to Del Monte during the week.

Mr. Horace G. Platt has been spending a few days at Del Monte.

Visitors during the week at Del Monte include Mr. R. M. Tobin, Mr. and Mrs. T. Bonnett, Mr. A. R. Crothers, Dr. Wm. Crothers, Mr. Walter H. Cline, Mr. P. M. Loneragan, Mr. John G. Treanor, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Webster, Mr. and Mrs. M. R.

Inne, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Ingalls, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Botton, Mr. J. A. Bouvier, Mr. Frank Preston, Mr. Ralph H. Bollard, Mr. Henry Clark, Mr. F. H. Weeks, Mr. L. H.

Love, Mr. and Mrs. F. Pier, Miss Va Duayne, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Patter, Mr. N. W. Kingman, Mrs. Waldeman Weir and Miss M. Enery.

The White House TOY DEPARTMENT

DOLLS

A Full Line dressed and undressed, including Stockinette, Papier Mache, Rag, Kid and Unbreakable.

Doll Repairing Department

The repairing is in the most skillful hands and promptly attended to.

BOOKS

A carefully Selected Stock of Toy Picture and Story Books of every description, from Mother Goose, Nursery Rhymes and ABC Books to the Latest Publications by the best known Authors, and Illustrated by the Leading Artists of the Day.

SKATES

A Large Variety of all Makes from Sidewalk Skates at 75c to Ball Bearing Skates at $6.50.

Raphael Weill & Co., Inc.

CANTRELL & COCHRANE'S world renowned

Belfast Ginger Ale

Beware of Substitutes

WILLIAM WOLFF & COMPANY

248-258 Mission St. - - - San Francisco, Cal.
Pacific Coast Agents

Any Solid Silverware

that passed through the fire, of which there is a fragment left,

Perfectly Restored

To any person having this work to be done I can show wonderful results at my shop, having restored some of the choicest silver in the city.

Specialty of trophies and presentation cups. Suitable designs submitted on application.

Gold and Silver Plating

JOHN O. BELLIS
Manufacturing Silversmith

1624 California Street Near Van Ness Ave

If you are going East use the California Limited

The Finest Train Across the Continent

Palace Pullmans, Observation, Library, Smoking, Dining Cars.

Every luxury will be found on this train.

See the
SANTA FE AGENT

FERRY BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

ROYAL Baking Powder

Absolutely Pure

A wholesome cream of tartar baking powder. Makes the finest, lightest, best flavored biscuit, hot-breads, cake and pastry.

Alum and alum-phosphate powders are injurious. Do not use them. Examine the label.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Lieutenant-General Arthur MacArthur, U. S. A., in addition to his position as commander of the Pacific Division, has been assigned to the command of the Department of California.

Brigadier-General Frederick Funston, U. S. A., formally took command on November 13th of the Southwestern Division, the headquarters of which have been moved from Oklahoma City to St. Louis.

Orders have been issued from Washington, D. C., that Brigadier-General John J. Pershing, U. S. A., be detached from the command of the Department of California and proceed to Manila, via Tokio. He will there take command of the Department of Visayas, relieving Major-General Jesse M. Lee, U. S. A.

General Pershing, who returned on Saturday last from a fortnight's trip East, sailed on the liner Korea on Tuesday last.

Colonel John L. Clem, U. S. A., Chief Quartermaster of the Department of California, has been granted one month's leave of absence, to take effect on November 27. Colonel Clem will leave for Texas to join Mrs. Clem, who will return to the Presidio of San Francisco with him.

Major George S. Young, Eighteenth Infantry, U. S. A., was promoted on October 30th to be lieutenant-colonel, and has been assigned to the Twenty-first Infantry, U. S. A., stationed at Fort Logan.

Major Robert L. Bullard, Twenty-eighth Infantry, U. S. A., has been promoted to be lieutenant-colonel, to date from October 31st, and has been assigned to the Eighth Infantry, U. S. A.

Major George F. Downey, Paymaster, U. S. A., has been assigned to duty as assistant to the Chief Paymaster, Camp Columbia, Havana, Cuba.

Captain Benjamin M. Purcell, U. S. A., who reported recently at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for examination for promotion, was found physically deficient and will probably be retired as a major.

Captain John J. Bradley, U. S. A., acting-judge advocate of the Department of Columbia, has been announced as judge advocate of that department.

Captain William Chamberlaine, General Staff, U. S. A., has been announced as assistant to the Chief of Staff of the Pacific Division, with station at San Francisco.

Captain William C. Wren, Quartermaster, U. S. A., has been assigned to duty as assistant to the Chief Quartermaster, Camp Columbia, Havana, Cuba.

Captain Edgar T. Collins, Quartermaster, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed without delay to St. Louis, Missouri, to verify and ship to the respective stations of the Sixth Infantry, property left at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and afterwards shipped to Powder Depot at St. Louis, Missouri. Upon completion of his duty, Captain Collins will proceed to his proper station, Fort William Henry Harrison, Montana.

Captain Robert L. Hamilton, Twenty-second Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted six months' leave on account of sickness.

Captain A. W. Bjornstad, Twenty-eighth Infantry, U. S. A., who is on duty with his regiment in Cuba, was recently granted 5 days' leave of absence, with permission to visit the United States.

Lieutenant Claude S. Fries, Twenty-eighth Infantry, U. S. A., reported recently to Brigadier-General John J. Pershing, U. S. A., for appointment as aid-de-camp on the latter's staff.

Contract Surgeon Ernest K. Johnstone, U. S. A., went to Fort Missoula, Montana, on duty with the Third Battalion, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., and upon the completion of that duty will return to his proper station at the Presidio of San Francisco.

Contract Surgeon John T. H. Slayter, U. S. A., formerly on the transport Thomas, went to Fort William Henry Harrison, Montana, on duty with the Headquarters Band and First Battalion, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A.

Third Lieutenant R. C. Wrightman, U. S. R. C. S., has been ordered to report to the president of a sub-board at San Francisco for examination for promotion.

In spite of her tender nature Miss Helen Gould has a caustic wit. One day she was showing some children visitors the treasures of her home. "Here," she said, "is a beautiful statue—a statue of Minerva." "Was she married?" asked a little girl. "Oh, no, my child," said Miss Gould, smiling, "she was the goddess of wisdom."

Specially adapted to Asthmatics; always relieves, generally cures. Brooks' Homoeopathic Cough Syrup; 25c, at druggists.

A. Hirschman

Jeweler and Silversmith. Now at 1641 Van Ness Avenue, bet. California and Sacramento Streets.

The great astrologer pointed to an ominous group of stars. "They tell me that you will be robbed by a dark man before another moon," whispered the prophet. "Have you any idea who this dark man can be?" The domestic man smiled sadly. "The coal man, of course," he sighed.—Chicago News.

Drs. Barkan & Sewall

Specialists for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat are now located at 1700 California street, corner Van Ness Avenue.

First Church Member—How is your choir getting along? Second Church Member—We are thinking of asking Taft to become provisional governor.—New York Sun.

Korn The Hatter

Now at 926 Van Ness Avenue Near Ellis Street.

OLD POODLE DOG

Hotel and Restaurant

NOW OPEN

The appointments of our new establishment are complete, and in every sense what is expected to-day of the oldest and best known French Restaurant in the world. Formerly at Bush St. cor. Grant Ave. Now at 824-826 Eddy St., near Van Ness.

Phone for reserve, EMERGENCY 63

Ben Sheldon, veteran clerk of Fremont County, Wyoming, was defeated at the recent election by a big majority by Ralph Kimball. It was the result of a campaign conducted by the young women. Several months ago a girl employed in the county clerk's office was discharged because she insisted on wearing a peek-a-boo waist.

W. & J. SLOANE & CO.

are now showing complete lines of

Carpets, Rugs, Furniture, Office Desks, Upholstery, Draperies, Linoleums, Window Shades, Etc.

at their new store at the corner of

VAN NESS AVENUE AND SUTTER STREET

Nordhoff Grill

1545 Pine Street
Below Van Ness Ave.

Finest and Largest Dining Room in the City

Merchants' Lunch 11 A. M. to 2 P. M. Daily

Ladies' Afternoon Teas
and Dinner Parties a Specialty

SUNSET ROUTE

2 TRAINS
DAILY

SAN FRANCISCO — NEW ORLEANS

Making Close Connections at New Orleans with Trains for Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Washington, and New York.

Also

With Southern Pacific Steamship Line New Orleans to New York.

Dining and Observation Service
Tourist and Pullman Sleepers

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

Ready for business at 1165 O'FARRELL ST., bet. Franklin and Gough
Pianos Tuned, Repaired, Moved and Stored
SOHMER-CECILIAN PLAYER-PIANOS

Come to us ONLY
For Good Knit Goods

ALL MODERATELY PRICED

Men's and Women's

Underwear

Hosiery

Highest Grades of German,
French and Scotch Hosiery

KNITTED BLOUSES
SWEATERS
SHAWLS
BATH ROBES

BED SLIPPERS
ABDOMINAL BANDS
INFANT SILK CAPS
CARDIGAN JACKETS

HUNTING AND GOLF COATS
LOUNGING ROBES
CROCHET SKIRTS
ATHLETIC and Bathing Suits

Gantner & Mattern Co.
KNITTERS

Corner Van Ness and California Street
Mills, Laguna, Grove and Ivy Ave., S. F.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"I wonder what that Chinaman is doing up so late." "Shirts, I suppose."—New Orleans Times - Democrat.

All the world's a stage—but the majority of us sit in the gallery and throw things at the performers.—Kansas City World.

Teacher—"Tommy, spell 'through.'"
Tommy—"Shall I spell it according to precedent or President?"

Ferdy—"Why did you stop calling on the Mainchance girl?"
Algy—"Why, the whole family seemed too glad to see me!"—Life.

Jones—"See the wicked artist painting on Sunday."
Jenks—"He might do worse." Jones (scrutinizing picture)—"I'm not so sure of that."—Judge.

Longhow—"What I say is true. Besides, 'Seeing is believing,' you know. Wise—Not always. Longhow—Oh, yes. Wise—No. I see you, for instance."—Philadelphia Press.

"Paw, when there's a big hanquet, why do they always have spoiled cheese to wind it up with?" "Because, my son, it makes you forget the earlier courses."—Chicago Tribune.

"Describe as nearly as you can," said the judge, "the assault the prisoner made on you." "It wor just a common ordinary hrick, sor," replied the defendant.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Miss Ascum—"And do you really think it is possible for a man to love two girls at the same time?"
Mr. Gailey—"Sure! provided it isn't also at the same place."—Philadelphia Press.

"I don't see why Dashup never gets along as a salesman. He's the glihbest talker I ever knew." "That's just it. He's so smooth everybody suspects him."—Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Cityman—"I should think you would die of ennui out here."
Uncle Silas Corn-tassel, of Oatmealville—"No, sir; chills an' fever seems to be the prevailin' ailment."—Philadelphia Record.

"Is that all the work you can do in a day?" asked the discontented employer.
"Well, suh," answered Erastus Pinkley. "I s'pose I could do mo', hut I never was much of a hand foh showin' off."—Washington Star.

"Remember, the eyes of the public are upon you." "Yes," answered Senator Sorghum, "that's what worries me. A man is so closely watched in these times that he can't get away with anything."—Washington Star.

Rollingstone Nomoss—"When people has hydrophobia de very thought o' water makes 'em sick." Thirsty Thingumbob—"Is dat so? I bet I've had it all me life an' didn't know what was de matter wid me."—Philadelphia Record.

"I want a husiness suit now," said Slopay. "I was thinking of something in the way of a small plaid."

"And I," replied the tailor, "can't help thinking of something in the way of a small check."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Bjones—"Why the grouch?" Psmith—"My wife called me a fool." Bjones—"Cheer up, it may not be true." Psmith—"But it is. She proved it. Went and dug up a hunch of my old love letters, and read 'em to me."—Cleveland Leader.

"I can marry a rich girl whom I do not love, or a penniless girl whom I love dearly. Which shall I do?" "Follow your heart, man, and be happy. Marry the poor one. And say—er—would you mind introducing me to the other?"—Cleveland Leader.

Miss Dubley—"She was hraggin' about how successful her dinner party was. She said it wound up 'with great eclaw.' What's 'eclaw,' anyway?"
Miss Mugley—"Why I guess that was the dessert. Didn't ou never eat a chocolatz eclaw?"—Philadelphia Press.

Boy (after watching old sportsman miss a couple of rockets)—"Have you shot often, uncle?"

Uncle—"Yes, my boy, a great deal. At one time, in Africa, I used to live hy my gun." Boy (thoughtfully)—"Did you. And is that why you're so thin?"—Punch.

"John," said Mrs. Worthington at the supper table the other evening. "I read in the paper today of a man who had one wife too many; the rest of the article was missing. How many wives do you suppose the man had?" "One, probably."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

"Our Henry's doin' real well in town," said Mrs. Wayhack, proudly. "He's runnin' a hotel now an' it's a big one." "Land's sakes!" exclaimed Mrs. Korntop. "Yes. Got a letter from him this mornin', an' he sez: 'I'm a hotel-runner now, an' it's a real swell place.'"—Philadelphia Press.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

Nothing New.

It's Hearst and Bryan and Parker,
It's Taft and Teddy and Root,
It's Beveridge every hour of the day
So husily tooting his toot;
It's trusts and tariffs and Cuba,
Panama, Patrick and Thaw;
It's Fairbanks, Cannon and Addicks,
Jerome and Murphy and Shaw,
The world of the old grows weary,
It longs for the new and strange,
It's sick and tired of the same old thing,
And it cries out loud for a change!

It's Tarbell and White and Steffens;
It's Bangs and Howell and Twain;
It's "Crisis" and "Pit" and "Jungle,"
And "Jungle" and "Crisis" again;
It's Dixon and Booker and Tillman,
It's negro and cotton and oil;
It's laughter and preaching and praying,
It's sorrow and suffering and toil;
It's always the same thing over,
And always the same to do,
The world goes dry and none answer the cry
When it cries out loud for the new.
—Baltimore Sun.

As It Happened.

She was comely, very comely,
And he gazed upon her dumbly,
With a feeling of affection mixed with awe.
"Speak," he cried, "my queenly heauty,
Tell me what shall be my duty."
Then she murmured, "Twenty-three"—
He twenty-thraw.

Once again he came a-wooing,
Came with tingling ardor suing,
For the greatness of his love could not be hid.
But, alas, his hopes were shattered,
And his dreams of joy were scattered,
For she told him to "skiddoo,"
And he skiddid.

Judge.

MOTHERS BE SURE AND USE "MRS. WINSLOW'S Soothing Syrup" for your children while teething.

German astronomers of the observatory of Berlin foretold that during the month of August there would be violent seismic disturbances in the zone comprising the site of Valparaiso, reports the Mexican Herald. A Valparaiso mercantile concern had contracted in Berlin for a large electric plant to arrive there in August, but the Berlin firm declined to send the machinery, etc., for the reason that the German astronomers were looking for trouble in Chile.

Something that concerns the Baby. When teething begins, every mother should have on hand a packet of Steedman's Soothing Powders.

A form of postage stamps with the names of the cities for which the stamps are issued printed on the face as part of the stamp design is proposed under the terms of the bids for a new issue for the next four years, opened in the purchasing agent's office of the Postoffice Department in Washington a few days ago.

NEXT SUNDAY GO TO BYRON HOT SPRINGS.—You can leave Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, returning Sunday afternoon or Monday morning. Two days at the Springs, and the entire expense of the trip is $7.50. This includes the railway fare, transportation from railway station to hotel and return, a delightful ride of two and a half miles, accommodations at the beautiful Byron Hot Springs Hotel, and use of the wonderful mineral baths, all for $7.50. Try it.

OUR STANDARDS

Sperrys Best Family.
Drifted Snow.
Golden Gate Extra.

Sperry Flour Company

Connecticut Fire Insurance Co. OF HARTFORD

ESTABLISHED 1850

Cash Capital$1,000,000.00
Cash Assets5,340,136.94
Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,414,921.16

Benjamin J. Smith
Manager Pacific Department:
525 THIRTEENTH ST., OAKLAND
San Francisco Office:
2310 CALIFORNIA STREET

THE LATEST STYLES IN
Choice Woolens

H. S. Bridge & Co.
Merchant Tailors
1176 O'Farrell Street

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

Have Plenty of Every Kind of

PAPER

Phone Temporary 1273
473 TO 475 SIXTH STREET
San Francisco

For YOUR

BREAKFAST

GERMEA

At All Grocers

The Johnson-Locke Mercantile Co.

AGENTS

714 Broadway, Oakland

Mt. Tamalpais Railway

Via Sausalito Ferry—Foot of Market St.

Lv. San Francisco		Leave Tamalpais
W'kday	Sun.	Sun.	W'kday
8:25 A	8:25 A	10:40 A	1:05 P
9:50 A	9:50 A	1:05 P	2:30 P
1:45 P	11:00 A	2:30 P	4:30 P
1:45 P	1:45 P	4:30 P	Saturday
Saturday	4:35 P	5:45 P	9:30 P

Legal Holidays, Sunday Time

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Steamship Lines

AMERICAN LINE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—SOUTHAMPTON
New YorkNov. 17 | Philadelphia.....Dec.
St. LouisNov. 24 | St. PaulDec.

Philadelphia—Queenstown—Liverpool
HaverfordNov. 24 | MerionNov. 1
NoordlandDec. 1 | HaverfordDec. 2

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT LINE
NEW YORK—LONDON DIRECT

MinneapolisNov. 17 | MesabaDec.
MinnehahaNov. 24 | MinnetonkaDec.

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE
NEW YORK—ROTTERDAM, VIA BOULOGNE

Sailings Wednesdays as per sailing list.
Noordam Nov. 21, 10am | Statendam Dec. 5, 10am
N. Amsterdam RyndamJan. 19, 7 am
.....Nov. 28, 3 pm | PotsdamJan. 2, 6 am

RED STAR LINE
NEW YORK—ANTWERP—PARIS

KroonlandNov. 21 | FinlandDec. 1
VaderlandDec. 5 | ZeelandDec. 20

WHITE STAR LINE
NEW YORK—QUEENSTOWN—LIVERPOOL

BalticNov. 21 | BalticDec. 1
OceanicDec. 11 | MajesticDec. 2
CelticDec. 11 | CymricDec. 1
.....Jan. 1 | OceanicJan. 1

Boston—Queenstown—Liverpool.
| ArabicDec. 1

G. N. KOEPEL, Pass. Agt. Pacific Coast.
Room 207 Monadnock Bldg., San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

ORIENTAL S. S. Co. have opened their general offices at 217-221 Brannan Street

SAN FRANCISCO

S. S. Hong Kong MaruNov. 9, 1906
S. S. America Maru (Calls at Manila) Nov. 30, 1906
S. S. Nippon Maru (Calls at Manila) Dec. 28, 1906

Steamers will leave wharf, corner First and Brannan streets 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Higo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, corner First and Brannan Sts. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Thos. Cook & Son

Now Located

1168 Broadway, Oakland
And North Nave, Ferry Building
San Francisco

AUTOMOBILES

Runabouts = = = $700
Reo Touring Cars = $1400

Immediate Delivery

J. W. LEAVITT & CO.
441 Golden Gate Ave.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Stoves and Ranges

ADAPTED FOR BURNING: COAL, WOOD, GAS, GASOLINE AND OIL

REFRIGERATORS

Complete Kitchen Outfits for Hotels, Restaurants, Clubs and Households

CORNER POLK AND TURK STS.

PHONE EMERGENCY 427

The Argonaut.

Vol. LIX. No. 1551.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 1, 1906.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10; payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscription to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 1711 San Pablo Avenue, Oakland. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications intended for the Editorial Department thus: "Jerome A. Hart, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal." To insure consideration, manuscript submitted for publication, must be typewritten.

Address all communications intended for the Business Department thus: "The Argonaut Publishing Company, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal."

Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Buildings, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, in Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, 11015 Pennsylvania Avenue.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear, and by the Denison News Company on its boats and rains.

Published at San Francisco, California. Temporary Office, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, California.

THIRTIETH YEAR

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

GEROME A. HART - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The Passing of Shafter—The Shooting of the Looters—California and the Japanese—Under Which King—San Francisco Labor Needs—Permitting Policemen to Resign—San Francisco's Soiled Linen—Selling Official Influence	265-268
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR	268
HOROUGHREDS AT THE SHOW: New York Society in Review at the Annual Horse Fair	269
HELD UP BY A WOMAN: How the San Luis Obispo Stage was Stopped by a Female Highwayman	270
DISCHARGED WITHOUT HONOR: Three Companies of Negro Troops Dismissed by Peremptory Order of the President	271
POLITICO-PERSONAL	271
S H. G. WELLS SEES US: Impressions Received by a Trip to America "in Search of Realities"	272
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All Over the World	273
CURRENT VERSE: "How Long the Road," by Charlotte Wilson: "The Return," by John Burroughs	273
TERARY NOTES: New Publications—Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip	274-275
PAGE GOSSIP: Dramatic Notes—Musical Notes	275
UNITY FAIR: G. Bernard Shaw's Ladders of Life—Providence Charity Mis-delivered—Ethics of Motoring—Paris Distractions and Ambitions—The Kaiser in an Omnibus	276
CORRYETTES: An Automobile Doom—The Court Terrified—Unfortunate Client—Not Cloakroom Tickets—Daniel's Consolation—Throwing in a Spire—Sold the Boots Unsold—Too Hot for Real Babies—Mrs. Langtry's Reminders	277
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	278-279
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS	280
THE TUNEFUL LIAR	280

The Passing of Shafter.

The life, the military career, and the death of the late General William R. Shafter would seem to show that modesty is not a valuable asset to a soldier.

General Shafter entered the army at the age of sixteen as a lieutenant of Michigan volunteers. He fought through the Civil War, was wounded, and was captured. But his gallantry had been so conspicuous in the engagement that his Confederate captors allowed him to retain his horse and side arms. After he was exchanged he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, and was mustered out of the volunteer service at the close of the war as colonel. He was then commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the 41st United States Infantry, and he remained a lieutenant-colonel thirteen years. He was promoted by President Hayes in 1879 as colonel of the First United States Infantry, and he remained a colonel for eighteen years. During all of this time he was a worthy soldier, a good disciplinarian, and an honorable man.

Fortune, they say, knocks once at every man's door. She had not knocked at Shafter's during the weary years on the frontier during the nearly two decades he wore a colonel's eagles. But in 1898 she rapped. General Nelson A. Miles had been selected to lead our invading armies forth to capture Havana. But it was suddenly announced that Cervera's fleet had entered the land-locked harbor of Santiago. It was necessary at once to send a force there to operate on land in co-operation with Admiral Sampson. General Miles declined this command, thinking that the theatre of war would be around Havana. Secretary of War Alger was a Michigan man; Senator Burrows was a friend of Alger, and he urged the Secretary to put Shafter in command of the Santiago expedition. So the President appointed General Shafter.

Probably there never was a military expedition which went forth with so many journalistic "war commissioners," so many war correspondents, so many "litterateurs," so many camera men, and so many plain ordinary reporters as went with the Shafter expedition. There were enough of them to doom any expedition to failure. They nearly settled Shafter's. If Shafter had flung them all ashore before the expedition started, or if after it started he had put them in the stoke hole and kept them there, he would have been wiser. But he did not do so. Hence there has ever since been waged a campaign of newspaper slander against Shafter. The numerous "war commissioners," war correspondents, "litterateurs," and camera men all took offense at Shafter for failing to provide for their peculiarities of dress, deportment, and diet, and so they have been taking it out of him ever since. The irascible Sherman during the Civil War banished all newspaper men from within his lines, and threatened to hang them if they returned. Shafter was more lenient. Never in the history of war has there been such gross misconduct by non-combatants as took place on the part of these camp-followers during the Shafter expedition. It came to a climax when one Sylvester Scovel, a correspondent of the New York World, had the effrontery actually to strike General Shafter for excluding him from the roof of the building on which the United States colors were being hoisted when Santiago fell. There is not one general in five hundred who would have allowed the man to live a day. But Sylvester Scovel escaped with a couple of days' imprisonment and then went off scot free.

All of the newspaper war correspondents, "war commissioners," and camera men expressed profound dissatisfaction with General Shafter's campaign in their letters at the time. Every man-jack of them wrote a book when he came home. We have them now. They occupy some seven linear feet upon our shelves, and we are glad and proud to say that we have read none of them and never intend to. But we know from hearsay that they all knock Shafter.

Despite the knocking of the "litterateurs," the "war commissioners," and the plain war correspondents, Shafter succeeded in accomplishing what he set out to do. He scared Cervera's fleet into sailing out of Santiago harbor, which led to its destruction by the American squadron; he forced the Spanish troops around Santiago to surrender; he occupied the city of Santiago; and his campaign caused Spain to sue for peace. These are the plain facts of the case. The only test of capacity in war as well as in peace is success. Shafter's orders were: "Go with your force to capture the garrison at Santiago, and assist in capturing the harbor and fleet." What he was sent to do he did.

Yet ever since a perfect mosquito swarm of correspondents has attempted to show that Shafter did not do the things he did; that somebody else did them; that it was not the Army but the Navy that captured Santiago; that it was not the operations in Cuba but those at Manila that caused Spain to yield; that General Shafter was not actually in command at the battle of El Caney; that it was a "colonel's battle"; that the engagement at San Juan Hill was fought by the rank and file; that Shafter was fat; that Shafter was sick; that Shafter was prostrated by the heat; that they did not like Shafter anyway. If all these things be true, it would have been wise for our Government to send to the Philippines some generals who were fat, sick, and liable to heat prostration. For General Shafter accomplished what he was sent to do in a few weeks, and in the Philippines the lean and healthy generals worked for more than twice as many years without accomplishing as much as he.

As to the attempt to make it seem that General Miles was in command at Santiago—he having arrived there eight days after Cervera's fleet was destroyed—the fact remains that Shafter never relinquished his command, refused to do so, and was in command of his army up to August 25th, when he returned to the United States.

Much has been made of the fact that on July 3d General Shafter wired to Washington that he contemplated falling back to a position on high ground. This dispatch was followed immediately by a message to the Spanish commander in Santiago, General Linares, requesting him to remove all non-combatants, foreigners, women, and children, as the American army would begin shelling Santiago by ten o'clock of the following day. This caused so much alarm, and so great was the pressure by the foreign consuls, that the Spanish commander surrendered the city. This has been scornfully called a "bluff." What of it? In war it makes little difference how the results are accomplished. Shafter accomplished results.

Shafter's despatch concerning "falling back" has been persistently garbled and distorted. In it he said:

"We have the town well invested on the North and East, but with a very thin line. Upon approaching we find . . . the defenses so strong that it will be impossible to carry it by storm with my present force, and I am seriously considering withdrawing about five miles and taking up a new position on the high ground . . . at Sardinero, so as to get our supplies by railroad."

The rest of the despatch contains not a hint at despondency, and implies a siege instead of storming the city. Probably the sentence in this despatch which no newspaper general would have written was this: "The behavior of the troops (regulars) was magnificent." This was indiscreet.

Yet we end as we began by remarking that Shafter's besetting sin was modesty. If he had known one-hundredth part as well how to sound his own praises as some of the tin-horn heroes whose self praises have since rung down the corridors of fame, he would stand much higher in the esteem of the American people today. But he was merely a modest soldier who construed his task in life to be his duty. If it meant remaining quietly in the background for a fifth of a century while juniors were being jumped over him, he remained silent and did his duty. If he were told to "go and capture the garrison at Santiago," he went and captured it. Think what meed of fame has been given by the American people to lesser heroes. Think of Winfield Scott with his manly beauty, his whiskers, and his "hasty plate of soup." Think of McClellan with his record of reverses and his strategic "changes of base."

To such an extent did the depreciation of the press go that it became more than a newspaper fashion to sneer at Shafter. Not long after the Spanish War a banquet took place in a South-western city at which was present that grim soldier, General Chaffee. One of the speakers was unwise enough in the course of his "after dinner remarks," to sneer at Shafter as lacking courage. General Chaffee was not on the programme, but he promptly rose and sharply rebuked the speaker. "I will not listen in silence," he said, "to any such reflection. Shafter is a man of flawless honor and of iron courage."

And so he was. Not only was he a man of iron courage, but he was a good soldier, and a patriotic citizen.

But General Shafter was too modest, altogether too modest. The successful soldier has no use for modesty. Shafter was the first American general in fifty years who had forced the army of a civilized power to strike its flag. Yet the conqueror of a few hundred Apaches or half a thousand naked Igorrotes in the Philippines gets greater honor from the American people than they accorded to Shafter.

The Shooting of the Looters.

The stories of the dreadful slaughter among the looters at the time of the San Francisco disaster die hard. True, the report of the War Department shows that there were neither any soldiers or any other persons shot by the United States troops, and very few by anybody else. True, the San Francisco coroner reports that all the bodies passing through his hands came to death from other causes than gunshot wounds. But the weird story still continues to crop up. Its latest appearance is in the Philadelphia Press. That journal tells some hair-raising tales of long lines of looters who were stood up in line and shot down by the military.

These remind us of the terrible tales told by the late Colonel Cremony, a soldier of fortune and a San Francisco Bohemian long since dead and gone. The Colonel had experienced many adventures in a fiery youth and stormy middle age, which tales he loved to dilate on in the winter of his days, which, like old Adam's, was frosty but kindly. Like other elderly gentlemen who have in their youth been slayers of men, the Colonel's tales lost nothing in their telling. He was fond of relating his experience when he once commanded a company of Mexican troops. He had given an order which the soldiers refused to obey. "Do you know what I did?" the Colonel would inquire in stentorian tones. Then, snatching up whatever might be handy—tongs, poker, or mayhap a billiard cue—he would shout, "I presented my weapon at the breast of the first mutineer and ran him through the heart." Whereupon, with the stamp of an old fencer, the Colonel would wipe imaginary gore from a shadowy blade and restore it to an imaginary scabbard. If the listener failed to be duly impressed, the Colonel killed two mutineers. In the wee small hours when his listeners were wooed by slumber or semi-saturated with strong liquors, the Colonel has been known to kill six. But as he advanced in years and grew more blood-thirsty and more garrulous, he has been known to run every man in his company through the heart. He would go from right to left of the line, leaving nearly a hundred Mexican veterans lying bloody and grim on their backs, in their bare-footed tracks, their toes pointing up at the sky.

This story is told without any intention of reflecting on the veracity of the Philadelphia Press. But we would advise that journal, if it continue to tell these tales of shooting looters, to shoot more of them. It costs no more. It will terrify more Ogontz girls. And it will be much more impressive to the reader.

California and the Japanese.

The Eastern press seems to be discussing, with not a little heat, whether California shall or shall not admit the Japanese to her schools. We doubt whether the press or people in the East will have much to do with settling this question, but we have no doubt at all about the uselessness of heat. The discussion need not be an angry one. It is a pure, cold question of law that is involved. California has a law which makes it obligatory on her school boards to provide separate school houses for children of Indian, Chinese, or Mongolian blood. That law still stands on the statute books. It is a duty of the School Board to enforce it. They are enforcing it. They will continue to do so. That law, we beg to assure our Eastern friends, will be enforced until it has been set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States.

We are informed that Secretary Root thinks that this school law of California is void under Article VI of the Federal Constitution, which says that "All treaties made or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." But Secretary Root and those who believe with him will have to prove that the treaty with Japan was made "under the authority of the United States." Who gave the United States Government any right to make a treaty running counter to the reserved and acknowledged rights of the States? To attempt to enforce any such treaty runs counter to the Constitution itself. There is no power in the federal government which has not been delegated to it by the individual States. These federated commonwealths never gave to the federal government the right to regulate their schools. In many States the white and colored races are taught in separate schools. If the Southern States can segregate the races in its schools, why may not California do so? If the United States Government can set aside the school law of California by which she segregates the white, yellow, and black races in her schools, then the United States can set aside the school laws of the Southern States which segregate the white and black races. Does the present administration consider it wise or feasible to attempt forcibly to mingle white and colored children in the schools of the South?

If the treaty which Secretary Root looks upon as "the supreme law of the land" gives the Japanese the right to demand admission for their children to the public schools of California, then that clause of it is unconstitutional. Such a provision in a treaty is absolutely null and void and the national government would have no right to enforce it. For Secretary Root to hold that an unconstitutional clause requires only to be included in a treaty and ratified by the Senate to become "the supreme law of the land," is very peculiar law and more peculiar logic. The President can not change the Constitution. The Senate can not change the Constitution. It can only be changed by three-fourths of the States of the American Union. Were Secretary Root's very peculiar ideas of law to hold, it would be unnecessary to submit any contemplated change in the Constitution to the States of the Union. It would only be necessary to incorporate the desired clause in a treaty with some pocket power like the Republic of Panama. That government is said to be extremely accommodating toward the present administration. It would approve of such a treaty. Then when the Senate had approved of this treaty and the President had signed it, you would have the Constitution changed while you wait.

How simple! How direct! How admirable!

The idea is indeed magnificent, but it is not constitutional.

Secretary Root's unconstitutional plan of amending the Constitution under the Sixth Article would arouse not only the unanimous opposition of the Southern Senators, but the determined opposition of many Senators from the North. The plan is not new. In 1845 an attempt was made to abrogate the customs duties levied by Congress. This was to be effected by treaties under which the President and Senate could conclude new conventions with foreign governments. The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives reported that such treaties would be inoperative and that such duties could only be changed by act of Congress.

The right to make treaties is vested in the President and Senate, but the treaty-making power does not embrace all subjects. It is a trust power delegated to the federal government. It can not go outside of its strict limitations. The President may make a peace treaty, but he can not make peace on terms violating the territorial integrity of a State of the Union. He can not make a treaty invading the rights of any of the States reserved to them by the Tenth Amendment. He can not make a treaty affecting the right secured expressly to the people, such as habeas corpus, bills of attainder, and so on. The President can not make a treaty naturalizing foreigners for that right is controlled by Congress. The President can not make a treaty affecting the people's rights in matters concerning bankruptcy, patents, copyrights, or postal service. In the District of Columbia there exists a public school system where Congress has provided by law for the segregation of white and colored children, and placed them in different schools. The President can not make a treaty with the Republic of Liberia, admitting its children to the public school of the District of Columbia.

As to the power of the Sixth Amendment, on which Secretary Root relies, Judge Cooley, in his Principles of Constitutional Law, says:

"The Constitution itself never yields to treaty or enactment. It may be amended according to its own permission only. The Constitution imposes no restriction upon this power [the treaty making power of the President and Senate], but nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution or robs * * * any of the States of its Constitutional authority."

Story on the Constitution, Section 1908, agrees with Judge Cooley. Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Root apparently do not agree with these eminent jurists. They believe that the power of amending the Constitution has been conferred on the President and two-thirds of the Senate. If this contention of Secretary Root be correct, the President and the Senate could make a treaty with Germany by which a subject of the Kaiser would be eligible to the Presidency. Yet the Constitution restricts that office to native-born citizens of the United States. Why is it any more absurd to say that a treaty could be made setting aside that provision than that a treaty could be made with Japan robbing California of her constitutional authority to control her schools? Under the federal constitution California has the right to separate children of Indian, African, Chinese, Japanese, or Mongolian descent from her white children, just as she has the right to separate girls from boys, to separate men from children, to separate those who have been convicted of crime from those who are honest, or to separate infected children from those who are in good health.

Judge Story in his Commentaries on the Constitution says that the treaty-making power "is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of a State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to force the destruction of other powers given in the same instrument." And Chief Justice Marshall thus held in one of his decisions:

"A treaty is in its nature a contract between two nations, not a legislative act. It does not generally affect, of itself, an object to be accomplished, but is carried into execution by the sovereign power of the respective parties to the instrument. But when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political not to the judiciary department, and the Legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for a court."

The foregoing citations show plainly that if Secretary Root is right in his contention that under Article VI of the Constitution the federal government can coerce California into seating American and Japanese children at the same desks, he differs markedly with Judge Story, Judge Cooley, Justice Marshall, and other great jurists. But he also differs with a famous predecessor in his own chair. In 1840 a Canadian named McLeod was jailed at Lewiston, New York, for the murder of an American, Amos Durfee. The British government at once demanded the release of McLeod. The Department of State replied that McLeod's offense was committed within the territory of the State of New York; that it came within her jurisdiction; that in such matters every State was perfectly independent; that therefore no federal intervention would be allowed. Thereupon, Lord Palmerston, then secretary of Foreign Affairs, addressed a note to Daniel Webster, then Secretary of State, "demanding the immediate release of Alexander McLeod." The British government stated that it "would not admit for a moment" the doctrine that the federal government could not interfere. Secretary Webster saw at once that he was in an embarrassing predicament. He could not interfere federally in the criminal jurisdiction of the State of New York; neither could he render up McLeod to the British government, as the Department of State had no power over McLeod's person. He therefore droittly evaded the issue by providing for McLeod the most eminent counsel, hurriedly secured his acquittal, and thus the incident was closed.

A similar affair took place under the administration of Benjamin Harrison. A number of Italians were killed by mobs in the State of Louisiana. The Italian government preferred claims for reparation and indemnity. The Department of State was obliged to admit that no way existed by which the State of Louisiana could be deprived of her jurisdiction over these criminal acts. When Italy asked what would be done if she sent a ship of war to the Mississippi to demand satisfaction, the reply was that the United States would resist the invasion by force of arms. Although the United States admitted the wrong done by the State of Louisiana, it also admitted its inability to remedy at wrong or to make reparation therefor. The matter was finally settled by our government paying what was practically blood-money to the families of the murdered men. Italy winked at the stain on the money, and the incident was closed. When a number of Chinese were slain by striking coal-miners in Wyoming, the demand of the Chinese government for reparation and indemnity was refused, as the Department of State alleged that it had no jurisdiction over criminal offenses in Wyoming. But as there is always a small "secret service fund" at the disposal of the Secretary of State, this was dipped into for the purpose of salving over the wounds of the relatives of the murdered Chinese. Here again our federal government admitted its inability to coerce the States of the Union in matters affecting their police powers, and at the same time admitted the injury done to subjects of foreign nations by paying for the injuries.

Immediately after the murder of the Italians in Louisiana an attempt was made by the Harrison administration to have a federal statute passed giving the federal courts jurisdiction over criminal offenses committed against the person of non-naturalized foreigners, even when within the territory of the States. The attempt to pass this statute failed. This shows plainly that the American people do not desire to yield to the federal government one iota of the rights which they reserved to themselves before the thirteen colonies adopted the Constitution. This was even more plainly foreshadowed when certain of the States originally signing our Constitution withheld their assent until it was agreed that certain amendments should be added. We inherited a treaty with great Britain made in 1783 providing for the payment of debts due by Americans to British merchants, as well as the protection of loyalists or "Tories" in life, liberty, and property. Inasmuch as our merchants had not the slightest desire to pay their old debts to British traders, and as many Americans were occupying in peace and comfort the estates belonging to Tories, on which they had "squatted," it was considered by the citizens of the States extremely unwise to accept the provisions of any such treaty. Had the Constitution explicitly declared that the States should be forced in certain matters to comply with treaties made by the President and Senate, that document would never have been adopted. This has brought upon us some severe criticism by writers on international law. Yet despite these criticisms Congress has always refrained from passing laws giving the President or the federal judiciary the power to enforce treaties when they run counter to the laws of any State of the Federal Union.

Those who may be disposed to criticize this journal for not condemning what they may consider as a dishonest and immoral attitude, must bear in mind that other nations are not free from reproach. Nearly all the great powers of Europe refuse to recognize our naturalization laws; they deny the right of expatriation; they imprison citizens of the United States within their frontiers when they consider them subject to military duty. Under the existing treaties our government should demand their freedom; but it does not do so; it is silent. It is not many years since the United States Government complained to the German Ambassador at Washington concerning the sentence imposed by a Bavarian court on one Louis Stern of New York. Not even an apology was the result; the Ambassador, by authority of his government, replied that he would "decline to see the administration of justice within a State of the German Federal Union, the right to administer which belongs to the princes of the German Federal Union, treated in the form of a diplomatic claim."

Thus we see, whatever the treaties, that there are restrictions on foreigners in every land. It is so in Japan. She is assuming that her subjects are entitled to all the rights in California of citizens of California. Yet there are many limitations imposed on the liberty of an American in Japan, one of which is the right to acquire land. Japan forbids an American to acquire title to real property. She can not complain if the Japanese in California is forbidden the privilege to be educated in the public schools side by side with American children.

There is absolutely no ground for the contention that a wrong is being done to Japanese children by the existence of the California school law. They are not even forbidden an education; they are educated at the public expense. The law only provides that they shall be in separate schools.

There remains nothing of the case presented with so much heat by our Eastern contemporaries, except what they call "the moral responsibility." This, according to their idea, would seem to be that California is doing a great moral wrong by injuring Eastern trade. This is a mixture of ethics and shop-keeping which does not appeal to the California mind. We of the West think more of our own flesh and blood than we do of the dollars of New England cotton-spinners or New York counter-jumpers. If, to gain the Japanese trade, we must seat our children side by side with the descendants of an alien, Asiatic, pagan race, we are quite willing to lose that trade. We do not give all the reasons. There is much to be said on this branch of the discussion, but it can not be printed with the same plainness as what we have said on the legal and Constitutional side. As, however, our Eastern contemporaries seem to think that California is peculiar in her view of Oriental assimilation, we would like to point out to them that exactly similar ideas exist among two other colonies of our great Anglo-Saxon family situate on the Pacific seas. One is immediately to the north of us in the Dominion of Canada. Another is the great insular domain in the South Pacific, Australia and New Zealand. In these colonies the laws are very rigid against Chinese immigration. In Australia they amount to practical exclusion. British Columbia as yet has succeeded only in clogging but not stopping the stream of Oriental immigration. But so bitterly is she opposed to it, that if the Imperial government does not desist in its attempt to coerce its Pacific colonies into accepting "Imperial ideas" in point of Orientalism, it will find some day that British Columbia, if not the whole Dominion, will cut loose from the British Empire. We may point out to our Eastern contemporaries the fact that an Imperial government attempted for many months to establish a Chinese industrial colony in the South African mines. Such hideous, such unnatural, such shocking revelations have been made of the moral conditions in these Chinese colonies, that now all men in Parliament agree, whether Conservative, Liberal, or Labor that these Chinese colonies must cease to exist, that Chinese immigration must stop. Yet this is not a prejudice against Oriental labor; it is simply the result of knowledge acquired by contact with Orientals. Our Eastern friends must not forget that we in California have been cheek by jowl with the Asiatics for half a century.

Again we say to the Eastern journals that there is no occasion in this question for a hurling of epithets or for angry discussion. Some of them consider it odd that California and Californians should seem at this juncture so extremely placid. The reason that we in California are calm in the presence of this crisis is: First, because we know we are right; second, because we hope to convince our countrymen that we are right; third, that if we fail so to convince them, we will, whatever they do or say, do what we know to be right.

Under Which King?

Captain Karl Reichmann of the United States Army has written a letter declaring that he was not appointed a member of the General Staff of our army, because he is of foreign birth. Waiving all other questions as to Captain Reichmann's availability, the fact that he would write such a letter ought to exclude him from the general staff. That branch of our army is entrusted with the military secrets of the United States. Within its circle there must be no babblers. Captain Reichmann may be a good soldier and a skillful strategist, but he is not silent enough. He knows two languages at least, English and German. He should take pattern after the great soldier, Von Moltke, who was silent in seven.

This raises an unique and interesting question in American life. Since the foundation of this nation, we have all of us been trained to believe that every American is just as loyal as every other American, no matter whether he is native-born or naturalized. This may be theoretically true. Is it practically true? Is it true in time of war, as well as in time of peace? If this country becomes embroiled in war with Germany, will its German-born soldiers and sailors fight against their Fatherland? Or will they fight against their step-father land? And if they do fight against the land which gave them birth, will they win the pure and unalloyed admiration of Americans for doing so? And if a man may transfer his allegiance and his loyalty by swearing something and signing a piece of paper, how about an American? May he transfer his allegiance and his loyalty? May an American become a subject of King Edward? If Great Britain should come to fight us, will the naturalized Americo-Briton fight against us, his brothers? And if so, what would we say to him? What would we do to him if we caught him? And does the same reasoning apply to men from other countries as applies to us?

San Francisco's Labor Needs.

At the 26th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, recently held at Minneapolis, President Gompers in his annual report made the following statement in regard to the labor situation in San Francisco:

Of course, in the rebuilding of San Francisco the number of workmen in the building trades has been largely augmented; but from reports made to our headquarters it is clearly shown that there is now an abundant number there to perform the work required, and that it is inadvisable for workmen to go there in the hope of finding further employment; that the cost of living, including rent, has largely advanced and that an overabundance of workmen would necessarily tend to lower wages, particularly when they can not find employment.

There is no man in San Francisco who does not know that this statement is false. If he is a mechanic, he knows it is false; if he is a contractor, he knows it is false; if he is an architect, he knows it is false; and if he is a land owner who wishes to erect buildings, he is more than certain it is false. As a matter of fact, there are not workmen enough of any kind to perform the labor which is waiting for them in San Francisco. It seems remarkable that the statement could be made to an intelligent body of workingmen, it is so falsely foolish and so foolishly false. Eight square miles of buildings were destroyed by the fire of last April. How can it be expected that the number of workingmen usually present in San Francisco, increased only by the slight migration toward this city in the past six months, could cope with such a colossal task? The desire of the land owners of San Francisco is to re-erect their burned buildings as rapidly as possible. To bring about this result they are paying the highest wages ever known in the history of the world. In many cases they are paying an enhanced rate over the Union rate by an agreement with the individual Unions, and are paying in addition a premium over that enhanced rate to get the contractors to speed their work. Under such circumstances it would take all of the surplus workingmen from a dozen large cities like New York, Philadelphia and Chicago to meet the demand in San Francisco. Yet, as a matter of fact, all of these cities have employment for all of their workmen, and have sent no appreciable surplus here.

Probably Mr. Gompers has been misled by interested parties. We can not believe that he would deliberately make false statements to the Federation of Labor at such a juncture as this. But we can assure him, the Federation of Labor over which he presides, and the country at large, that the statements are utterly false.

Permitting Policemen to "Resign."

The San Francisco Police Commissioners have refused to accept the resignation of Policeman J. C. Laws, who is accused of robbing a wounded man, while in his charge, of $120 some weeks ago. It is not proved that the police officer is guilty of this crime, but if he is guilty, then all the more reason for holding up his resignation. The Commissioners had better see that he is tried, and if found guilty, sentenced; then they may dismiss him in disgrace. Laying aside this case, it may be generally remarked that in the past the Police Commissioners, the Chief of Police, the Police Captains, and the patrolmen themselves all seem to think that policemen are subject to "a higher law," and that a policeman who gets drunk, steals, or murders may salve over his offense by "resigning." We hope that the present Commissioners will convince policemen that they are not only subject to the same laws as the rest of us, but that they are held to even a stricter accountability by reason of their being officers of the law.

San Francisco's Soiled Linen.

At a meeting of the Trans-Mississippi Congress in St. Louis on November 22d, the California delegates were angered and mortified by doubts expressed concerning the disposition of the San Francisco Relief Fund. In the course of a speech Mr. John Barrett, Ambassador from North America to South America, remarked on the disappearance of sums of money, intended for the Relief Fund, by "theft and graft." Delegate John P. Irish of Alameda County repudiated this charge, and stated that the present crusade in San Francisco against grafters was purely political, and was levelled at politicians and not at the Relief Committee.

This is entirely true. It is unfortunate that the San Francisco dailies in their crusade against grafters—which, as Mr. Irish states, is political—should have so extended it as to create the impression throughout the United States that the Relief Fund had been subject to grafting. The San Francisco dailies have, in fact, made distinct allegations to this effect, but we do not believe them, and we do not think that San Franciscans believe them. The various charges of appropriating specified remittances have all resulted in finding the missing money. In most cases it had been subscribed in Eastern cities, but had not been forwarded, and therefore had not yet been received here. The only specific case that we can find where the money did disappear, is that of a remittance of $1085 from Searchlight, Nevada, shipped in currency by Wells Fargo & Company, and addressed to Mayor Schmitz. After a search extending over some months, Wells Fargo & Company have themselves paid the money to the Relief Corporation. This would seem to be an admission that they lost it themselves, and were making the loss good. We do not believe Mayor Schmitz misappropriated this money, and we do not think the community believes it either. We have had business dealings with Wells Fargo & Company for many years, and our knowledge of that corporation justifies us in the belief that it never had and never has the slightest intention of making good any loss which was not the result of its employees' negligence.

Selling Official Influence.

A queer story has come up in the tangled tale of graft and bribery now filling the San Francisco daily papers. It is stated that the proprietors of Marchand's, an old established San Francisco restaurant, were forced to pay $1,000 before they could obtain a license from the Police Commissioners for reopening their place. The Board of Police Commissioners stands well in the esteem of San Francisco's citizens. Two of its members are men of the very highest character, while the others, although not standing so high socially and financially, still are looked upon as good citizens. That such men should have sold a license for a sum like $1,000—which divided up among them would amount to very little—seems certainly strange. The most surprised men in the community are the Police Commissioners themselves. They state that the delay in granting the license was merely because application was made to establish the place in a residential district; the Commissioners wished to be perfectly sure that the presence of a restaurant with a license to sell liquor would not be obnoxious to the residents, and that it was not to be conducted in an objectionable way. These facts ascertained, they granted the license. They now state candidly, that if the Marchand people paid $1,000 for the right to go into business, it was money thrown away, for they could have had it for nothing.

This recalls the famous story of a judge in a Western State. For many years common rumor said that his decisions were for sale. He had a thrifty brother, who was in the habit of approaching clients having cases pending before his brother, the judge. He sounded them cautiously, and in many cases got a rise. Being shrewd as well as thrifty, he always approached the clients on both sides.

No open accusation ever smirched the honor of the upright judge. No charge of graft ever was lodged against the thrifty brother, for he played fair. If he had taken money from Smith, the loser in the case of Smith vs. Jones, he invariably returned Smith his money. If Brown defeated Robinson in his brother's court, Robinson likewise got his money back. Thus the thrifty brother acquired a reputation in his community for honesty, whatever the people thought of the upright judge.

Years passed away, and the thrifty brother suddenly died. After a decent interval for mourning, the upright judge was one day approached by a suitor before his court. The result was a row and a scandal which made the ears of the community ring. Then the curious fact developed that for many years the thrifty brother had been selling the upright judge's decisions without consulting his honor in any way. He had adopted the simple expedient of giving back to the unsuccessful litigant his money and keeping the money of the other fellow. Time, which sets all things right, thus proved that the upright judge was really upright.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Argonaut a Certificate of Character.

Just before the earthquake and fire of last April the Argonaut had packed up a large number of magazines, pictorials, and other periodicals to ship to our soldiers in the Philippines. As the officers' clubs and the reading rooms in Manila are well provided with reading matter, we have been in the custom of forwarding such packages to remoter posts in other parts of the archipelago. As the easiest way of distributing such reading matter, we sent it to such of our army subscribers as were stationed in the islands, preferably to the enlisted men, as the officers generally are able to purchase reading matter for themselves.

A few days before the disaster we had packed over a dozen large sacks full of this reading matter. One lot was directed to Charles W. Graves, Chief Musician of the Twenty-first Infantry, then stationed in Samar, with the request that he would distribute same to such of the men in his command as cared for reading matter. It is no great merit to give to distant soldiers reading matter for which one no longer has need. But it takes not a little time and pains to pack, label, and ship such material. This batch was all duly packed and labeled. But it never went. With everything else in our office it was destroyed.

As we had mailed a letter to Musician Graves, notifying him to look out for his package when it reached Manila we were obliged to write again, telling him not to trouble himself. In a letter just received we find that he has been transferred from an archipelago off the coast of Asia to the great continental divide, a post in Colorado. We ask his pardon for printing his letter. We do it for several reasons; one is to show the high character of many of the enlisted men in our army; another, that, as he says: "Owing to the frequent expensive moves now made by the army," he is obliged to discontinue his second copy of the Argonaut, which had been sent to a friend; the third reason is to point out the fact that a soldier on the very meagre sum paid by Uncle Sam can afford to subscribe for two copies of an expensive journal like the Argonaut, which he has "read for more than twenty-three years, and that he considered "being a subscriber to the Argonaut as almost equivalent to a certificate of character."

The Argonaut receives many letters from its subscribers and has taken the liberty of printing more of them than usual during the last six months, in order to acknowledge their kindness and their loyalty. But it has received few which have pleased us more than this epistle from Chi Musician Graves of the Twenty-first Infantry, U. S. A.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY,
FORT LOGAN, COLO., NOV. 11, 1906.

DEAR ARGONAUT:—Your kind letter of the 6th at hand was very thoughtful of you to remember us with books and periodicals and they would have afforded a lot of pleasure to our men in Samar and I am grateful for the intention. Their burning was the only personal loss sustained in the disaster. It may seem strange to you but the wreck of your beautiful city caused us much sorrow when we got the news last April, and really saddened our return to the States. I speak for the whole regiment in this matter, as I heard general expressions of regret from all classes of officers and soldiers.

Owing to the frequent expensive moves now made by the army I can not afford to take two copies of the Argonaut, so please discontinue the subscription to—

I have read the Argonaut religiously for more than 23 years, first in the post library at old Fort Shaw, Montana, and later as a subscriber. It has followed me everywhere and I have made several converts. Being a subscriber to the Argonaut is almost equivalent to a certificate of character.

Thanking you for your courtesy,

I am yours sincerely,

CHARLES W. GRAVES.

The Atlas Insurance Co.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Nov. 16, 1906.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—In your issue of November 17, in the record of "Suits against Insurance Companies," you note a single action against the Atlas. Although the action has been settled at a figure which the Atlas estimated as the attorney fee it would have to pay for defending the action, and the case dismissed, the fact is that the assured had no claim against the Atlas, because they had surrendered the policy for cancellation before the fire, and the books of the Atlas show this. Unfortunately, the policy itself with the endorsement of the assured was burned, and the assured, taking advantage of the circumstance that the primary evidence of cancellation could not be produced, made claim against the Atlas, and, when payment was refused, commenced suit.

Yours truly,

W. C. SHARPSTEIN,

Attorney for Atlas Assurance Company.

Boycotting Roosevelt Ballots.

The following remarkable circular letter has been received by a machinery house that does a large business with Spanish America. In sending us the letter, they say: "Knowing the Argonaut has a large circulation among Republicans who are inclined toward Roosevelt, we are giving you this opportunity of saving the commerce of the United States in South America by notifying the public of our grave danger. It may be that you will not consider this communication really serious, but it is apparently intended to be so taken."

In effect, the circular letter received by our correspondent is so extraordinary in nature that it seems like a joke. It may be that it is an elaborate hoax. If so, its originator has gone to a vast amount of trouble over his joke. However, it is printed as it was received, and readers may draw their own conclusions:

GRAN TEMPLO DE CARACAS, Sept. 12, 1906.

We beg to inform you that the Sublime Brotherhood of the Zaques has issued a resolution according to which the American manufacturers who vote the Roosevelt ballot in the next presidential election will be excluded from the South-American trade.

Strong measures will be taken to enforce this resolution. Our boycott organization is much better than in China. We count already 117 boycott stations, entirely independent from South American governments. We are organized on a military basis, and obey the voice of only one chief.

Those firms, which can give us evidence of adopting the Bryan ballot can be sure of our efficient co-operation to increase their trade in these Southern countries. We will give them every available facility free of charge!

The triumph of Democracy is the only salvation for the United States. Otherwise the Roughrider and his followers are going to play havoc with the happiness and prosperity of the great nation.

The Southern countries are ready to shake hands with American Democracy and to look upon her as our good sister. We have already the pledge of her sincerity. Her voice has been always heard in behalf of our interests and mutual regards of sympathy have been exchanged in more than one occasion. Those sentiments should be increased and strengthened. The South tenders a hearty welcome to all good American citizens who are disposed to fraternize with us and to treat us on an equal basis.

If we have had, up to the present time the privilege of being treated as friends by the cordial American people, we do not feel disposed to give up this honor of our greatest esteem. We endeavor therefore to eliminate those troubles which threaten a deep disturbance of our friendly relations with the United States.

President Roosevelt has said in some recent speeches that the Latin-American countries are bound to disappear for two reasons: first, because they are Latin, and second, because they are small.

This gratuitous provocation needs no reply from our part. We submit the matter to your sound judgment and to the unbiased appreciations of the American people in general. The maintenance of cordial relations which is in our mutual interest, deserves indeed, the co-operation of the Pacific and industrious citizens.

We therefore, invite you to refuse your help to the painful candidate whose discredit is so large that has roused throughout this land the greatest suspicions and the worst kind of feelings, and whose crooked ways are jeopardizing the future of your happy and prosperous nation.

Done in this our Grand Temple of Caracas in this day 12th of September of 1906, by order of the Great Zipa, Son of the Sun, Great Master of the Sublime Brotherhood and Sovereign of all tribes which inhabit the America from Mexico to Fireland.

JURY ARY.

Comendador of the S. H. Z.

In Sweden the depot waiting rooms are provided with beds for passengers, and porters call the travelers ten minutes before the arrival of trains.

THOROUGHBREDS AT THE SHOW.

New York Society in Review at the Annual Horse Fair.

Greatest of events in New York society, the one that ushers in the "season," the annual Horse Show opened at Madison Square Garden yesterday in a glory of black and gold, and while the exhibits and attendance were remarkable in the early hours of the day, the exhibition in the evening far outshone any previous opening. The highest anticipation had been indulged in, particularly by the world of purveyors who build upon this yearly period of lavish expenditure, and none had looked for such a profusion of favors as the first day and night showered upon all present or interested. Indications were distinctly favorable far in advance. High bidding marked the caution of the arena boxes, a method of allotment that had not been used for years. In all the really fashionable supper-rooms tables have been reserved for weeks. It was certain that not only those whose names are familiar to all readers of Manhattan gossip, but those who take advantage eagerly of the one opportunity to gaze at close range upon the society leaders, were seriously intent upon the show. The appearance of the immense assembly last night discounted all forecasts.

Many changes have come to this yearly exhibition since its successful inauguration in 1883, in the old Madison Square Garden. It is not the same show nor the same place, though the names are unchanged. The new Madison Square Garden, with its Giralda tower, the building planned by the late Stanford White, is better fitted for the manifold purposes of this event. The National Horse Show Association continues its original programme with a few improvements and a steadily increasing list of events in the ring, but the institution has broadened until it is no longer a New York City monopoly. Prize-winning horses come from Chicago and farther west, from Toronto and Montreal; society people of Baltimore, Washington, and Pittsburg meet in the promenade and look on from the boxes. It has grown to real national importance. It is more dignified, a greater show of dress and fashion than the Saratoga races, but it is no less cosmopolitan. There are all sorts in the throng, but they are all well dressed, all on parade. Each one may fancy himself or herself mistaken by the nearest spectator for a member of some charmed circle, and there is an uplift in the thought.

Of the animals who furnish the motive of this great gathering of those who really care only to see people or to be seen by them, there might be written pages of admiring description. It will convey no idea to the one who merely reads of them to say that the 1700 horses to be seen at one time or another in the ring are valued at much more than a half-million dollars. They represent every type of horseflesh, from ponies to carriage horses, from jumpers to pacers. Beautiful, all of them, the pick of breeders' favorites, silken-coated, fine-skinned thoroughbreds, most of them with more intelligence in their eyes than in those of the blank-faced grooms or even the imperturbable whips who handle the reins so deftly. And the care that is given them, and the equipment that sets off their appearance and capabilities bespeak more than mere expense. They win attention in spite of counter-claims, but they deserve more than the scattering applause that follows feats of quickness and exact training or the award of the cherished blue ribbon.

After a preliminary trial of saddle horses in the ring yesterday morning, and some exercising of fancy-bred stock, the judging began. Hunters and jumpers, ponies in harness, harness tandems, ponies under saddle, and roadsters and road rigs took up the three hours before the luncheon recess. In the afternoon there were pairs of ponies in the ring and some of the handsomest turnouts were shown. Reginald Vanderbilt secured second prize with his Frocks and Frills, but the first prize was won by W. H. Moore's Beulah Bennett and Bracelet. Mr. Moore, formerly of Chicago, is one of the most enthusiastic and most heavily interested exhibitors. He has more than $100,000 invested in the stock which he has entered in the various classes. He has won the most coveted prize of the show—the Waldorf-Astoria Cup—twice, with his fine horse, Forest King, and will try for it again this year with the same animal. Should he be successful the trophy is his to keep. Twenty of the finest horses in the show will compete for the cup. Among those acknowledged to be close to first place are the entries of Reginald and Alfred G. Vanderbilt and Miss Giulia Morosini. In the jumping event yesterday, Canadian horses won, the first prize going to Lord Minto, owned by George Pepper of Toronto, and the second to Confidence, the property of Captain W. H. Evans of Montreal.

Attractive as are the prize-winners in the contests, they are not the chief attraction. In the evening, especially, the occupants of the arena boxes have four-fifths of the attention of the spectators. In the list of box-holders are such names as William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Reginald and Alfred Vanderbilt, Mrs. Eben Wright, Oliver Harriman, Mrs. Henry Siegel, Elbridge T. Gerry, A. J. Cassatt, Henry Seligman, Senator George Peabody Wetmore, Judge E. H. Gary, Commodore F. G. Bourne, Harry Payne Whitney, E. Francis Hyde, Paul A. Sorg, and Elisha Dyer, Jr. These represent many outside the prominent families of Manhattan, and show how wide the interest is in the exhibition. A box costs something more than $500, on an average, and that is only a small item in the expense of those who have entries in the contests. Even for those who enjoy the affairs as they do the opera, there is costly outlay. The young people, the debutantes and their set, may go in the morning or afternoon in simple elegance, but the evening display is the most extravagant expression of modes and ornaments. Furs and velvets, silks and laces, feathers and jewels, are seen in striking and bewildering combinations. Night after night new gowns are displayed, Parisian creations without doubt, and the exhibition is unique each evening with kaleidoscopic changes. The men are not entirely out of this feast of adornment. Fancy waistcoats, beyond the earlier fancies of ex-Lieutenant-Governor Woodruff, are in distinct favor during the day, and at night they give way to low-cut white ones, such as have never permitted a broader expanse of shirtfront to reflect the rays of the myriads of incandescent lamps.

The suppers that round out the full day of society dissipation are by no means the least of the enjoyments. A dinner is a necessity as has been said, the later refection is distinctly luxurious. The half-dozen best known of the New York restaurants are familiar names to all who have ever visited the metropolis. Those places are never without their crowds of patrons, but on the nights of the horse show they entertain the greatest throngs of guests whose orders are admirably fashioned to please caterers and waiters. It is reported that some of the enthusiastic horse owners expend one-third of a big income at the horse show; it may be set down as a certainty that many of those who join the supper throngs at the restaurants, to be even more seemingly intimate with wealth and fashion for an hour, spend a week's income on the terrapin and broiled quails, the salads and the champagne, that are indispensable accessories to the brief space of princely entertainment.

FLANEUR.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20, 1906.

A strange piece of legal casuistry is reported from Louisiana, where the State supreme court appears to have held that a statement which is not only true, but even sincerely commendatory, may be libelous. A New Orleans newspaper, learning that a reputable physician had effected a remarkable cure, published without consulting the physician a glowing account of what he had done. He thereupon brought suit for libel, claiming that the account of the cure—which he did not deny in any particular—was calculated to injure him professionally by giving rise to the idea that he had sought it and had "advertised" his skill, thereby placing himself among the "quacks," since medical etiquette forbids advertising. The trial court held for the defendant, that is the newspaper. But the supreme court appears to have sustained the whole theory of the plaintiff's contention.

It is not generally known that Nelson's death was the origin of the black silk handkerchief which the sailor wears under his broad blue collar, tied in a loose knot in front, says the London Court Journal. The scarf or handkerchief was first worn as mourning for the great admiral and by some means or other it was retained and eventually became a part of the naval man's uniform. The white stripes around the broad blue collar are unintelligible to the average individual, but they have a very significant meaning. They represent the victories at the Nile, Copenhagen, and Trafalgar.

Marrying a girl against the wishes of her parents is, next to murder, the most severely punishable crime in Lapland.

HELD UP BY A WOMAN.

How the San Luis Obispo Stage Was Stopped by a Female Highwayman.

Some years ago my business, at certain periods of the year, carried me pretty frequently up and down the road between San Luis Obispo and Soledad, on the Salinas River, as I had interests to look after in both neighborhoods. At such times, it was necessary for me to carry, now and again, considerable sums of money to pay off hands and do other things connected with my business. Of course the only practical way to do this was either to carry the money on my person or to send it by Wells-Fargo. Sometimes I did the one, sometimes the other, for though stage robberies were almost unknown in that section, I thought it as well not to show my hand, and so sometimes simply packed the coin in my saddle bags or in some of the many ways known to old-timers, and trusted to my pistols for protection. Now I look back upon it, I am surprised that such a lonely and uninhabited section, as the country lying between Monterey and San Luis Obispo was then, was not more frequently the scene of highway robberies.

At about the end of winter, I had occasion to make a trip from the neighborhood of Jim Low's—as the next station south of Salinas Crossing at Soledad is called—to San Luis Obispo on business. It was partly to get money to pay my shearers and others—all that neighborhood then was little better than a vast grazing ground for sheep and cattle, and March was one of the busiest months in the year for both classes of stock-raisers, the cattle-men being engaged in branding, and the sheep-men very frequently in shearing. I calculated that about fifteen hundred dollars would see me through, and so, as I say, about the end of March I rode into Jim Low's, and leaving my horse there, boarded the south-bound stage for San Luis when it came along.

The rivers were running pretty high that spring, I remember, and we had some difficulty in crossing the San Antonio some miles below, the sands having shifted at the regular crossing. However, we got to the Pleito Ranch all right, where we changed horses, took dinner, and again started on our journey. There was, however, one more river to cross, and that was the Nacimiento, lying between the Pleito and San Miguel, after which it was plain sailing clear into San Luis Obispo. I happened to be the only passenger in the stage that trip, and while the driver and myself were discussing the feasibility of risking the passage, a man, whom I recognized as a rancher who lived close by, rode up and advised us not to try it, as his own wagon had been nearly carried down the stream that morning. He added that if we liked, we could put up at his place all night. As the past two days had been clear, there was every probability that the freshet would go down before morning, and after a brief consultation we decided to do so.

"We shall have to pay, though," said the driver to me, with a wink as he turned his leaders from the bank; "and pretty roundly, too—mind that. Old Williams is a hard one. I've got stalled here once or twice before, and the company gave me h—l for it, you bet. It's just nuts for the old man to ketch the stage in a tight place. Did you notice how he was layin' for us as we come up? But the river's too high this trip to fool with, and I aint a-goin' to risk my life for no company, leastwise for no such wages as I'm gittin'!" and with a vicious crack of his whip to the off leader, he turned into the yard where our host was awaiting us.

I was not surprised at the caustic remarks of the driver, as old William's parsimony was the talk of the country side, although rumor had it that he was worth many thousand dollars in cash, besides herds of cattle in the foothills and roaming along the Salinas.

We passed the time as best we could till supper was called, when we went in and were received by our host's wife, a woman of about forty years of age, who had meanwhile been doing the cooking in the kitchen. The meal was really a good one, plentiful in every respect, and well cooked. Mrs. Williams's conversation and demeanor, too, were courteous and pleasant, though one could see by her face she was a woman of determined character.

After supper we were shown the sleeping accommodations, which consisted of a single apartment, or loft, on the second story of the house, directly under the roof. At each side of the room, at intervals of about four feet, were spread six camp beds, twelve in all, for Old Williams's ranch had been the supper stopping-place of the up stage some years before, until his inordinate charges caused the stage company to remove its patronage to the Pleito Ranch. We had our pick of the beds, and I turned in and was presently fast asleep.

I am anything but a heavy sleeper, however, and can not have slept long before I was awakened. Some persons were talking close by, and as I was sleeping on the bed next a partition wall, and as the voices were male and female, I reasoned that they must proceed from the family bedroom of Mr. and Mrs. Williams.

"Marthy," said a voice that I at once recognized as that of old man Williams, "I tell you I kaint afford it. You'll ruin me with your extravagances. What with your house bills, and your dress bills, an' your gallivantin' about, an' your trips to town, I'm s'prised you should dream of such a thing. Five hundred dollars for a trip to Frisco! Why, you must be crazy!"

"It's you that's crazy, you old hunks," replied the female voice in scornful tones; "it's six years since I've been to anywheres hut San Luis. Do you think I'm agoin' to toil and slave to make money for you all my life, an' get no good out of it? I put my foot right down here, and say I won't. I'm goin' to Frisco to spend a month with my sister, an' I'm not agoin' to be laughed at when I get there, you can just bet your sweet life. Five hundred dollars an' not a cent less. Why, I hain't got a rag fit to be seen in—hain't had these six years, an' I don't propose to stand it no longer."

"But who's goin' to take charge of the ranch, Marthy, when we're both away?" queried the old man, querulously; "it'll go to rack an' ruin sure."

"Why, wouldn't Mr. and Mrs. Jeffreys be glad to come? Hain't I asked them and hain't they said so? An' hain't they got Tom an' Bill to help 'em and old man Morgan to do the chores? What're ye talkin' about?" disdainfully rejoined the female voice.

"I see it all, Marthy," rejoined old man Williams; "it's all beca'se I've got to go to the hay that you want to go too. But mine's hisness, an' you know it. Ther ain't no 'arthy use of you goin', 'cept to spend money. Now look a-here, Marthy, there's four hundred dollars, as you know, nes'ry to meet that little bill of Baxter's for that las' hit o' land. My stagin' back an' forrud, twenty-five dollars each way—that's fifty. Two days in town, two dollars—kain't do it a cent less 'cept Baxter treats—them cities is orful 'xpensive. Now there's four hundred and fifty-two dollars got to be paid. An' you want five hundred more for nothin' at all!" Here the old man groaned as if his heart would break.

"Nothin' or no nothing," replied Mrs. Williams decisively, "I'm goin' to hev it. Don't you forget that."

"Well, well, Marthy," said the old man, after a pause, in what was evidently meant for a soothing and mollifying key, "you was allus a good gal. I'll see what kin be done. Them banks in San Luis is orful close, though. You mustn't 'spect too much."

"Don't give me none o' your games," rejoined his hetter-half sternly; "you tried that once afore, an' if you go for to try it agin, you'll try it once too often. Mind what I'm a-tellin' ye."

After this the voices ceased, and as the snoring had also ceased at last I managed to fall asleep.

Next morning we found the river had gone down according to expectation, and after paying our bills for man and horse—which were certainly pretty steep—we resumed our journey at day-break, supplemented, however, by another passenger in the person of old man Williams.

"No foolin' now, Si," shouted his dame as we drove out of the yard; "five hundred or nothin'."

"Aye, aye, Marthy," replied her spouse; "I'll be back to-morrer evenin'."

Well, we got into San Luis without further mishap about noon, taking extra horses at Santa Margarita to get us over the hill and make up for lost time. In order not to delay the passengers who had arrived from Santa Barbara and southern points the night before, it was decided that as we had lost half-a-day, the same stage would start on its return trip in the course of an hour. As the only business I had to do was to draw money, I was perfectly ready to start the same afternoon. While I was in the bank getting my coin, old Williams came in and also made out a draft. I was a little curious as to the amount, and purposely hung around to see what was paid him. I noticed that the clerk counted him out just four hundred and fifty-two dollars.

At one o'clock we left San Luis, again taking extra horses to see us over the hill. There were now four passengers, old Williams, a well-known land owner in Santa Barbara, a whiskey-drummer, and myself. As the weather was cold, we all got inside the coach, and enlivened the tedium of the route as well as we could in the various ways known to old stagers. By the time we got to San Miguel it was quite dark, and as we approached the Nacimiento River about an hour afterward, I noticed that old Williams's trepidation, which had been noticeable for some time past, became more apparent than ever. As the horses plashed out of the stream on the further bank, I remarked that the old man had retired into the furthest corner of the coach, had muffled his head in a travelling rug, and was snoring heavily.

As soon as we gained firm ground the driver whipped up and the stage bowled past the approach to old Williams's house at a lively pace. Not, however, before a female figure, in whom by the coach-lantern I recognized Mrs. Williams, had looked into the stage and detected her recreant spouse, muffled as he was, in the corner.

"I saw ye, Si," she shouted after us, as we bowed along; "ye can't fool me. I thought ye'd try to play me, you old whelp, but wait a bit—the rest of her speech was lost in the distance."

From the Nacimiento Crossing to the Pleito Ranch is some ten miles, and here the north-bound stage in these days always stopped to change horses and let the passengers eat supper. Half-an-hour afterward we resumed our journey. We began to get livelier under the influence of the good cheer to which we had done ample justice. The colonel from Santa Barbara was particularly entertaining. The drummer's best samples circulated freely, and even old Williams joined in the general exhilaration, when, all of a sudden, the coach drew up with a jerk which nearly threw us out of our seats and the familiar muzzle of a double-barreled shotgun was thrust in at the window.

"Never mind throwin' down the box, Jim," shouted a voice which I fancied I had heard before "that ain't what I'm after. Come, pile out on the road, you galoots inside, an' be quick about it. Wake up, old man," continued the voice, ironically evidently addressing old Williams, who had shrunk back into his corner dead with terror.

It is needless to say we obeyed the injunction with alacrity. People always do under such circumstances. But who shall depict our astonishment when we saw that this daring road-agent who had stopped us was a woman, and still more to my surprise I saw it was neither more nor less than Mrs. Williams.

"Hold up yer hands, gents," said our captor quietly; "tain't you I'm after; it's you, ye good for nothin' nincompoop," she continued, addressing her husband, as she covered him with the shot-gun "Jest shell out that money ye got today at the bank—all—every cent of it."

With trembling hand old Williams drew from his breast an old leather pocketbook, and handed it to his spouse who opened it and glanced at the contents, still keeping the gun leveled in our direction.

"Four hundred an' fifty-two dollars," she said slowly, after a careful scrutiny; "I thought so, ye're forty-eight dollars short. Hain't ye got no more?"

"Not a cent, Marthy," returned the terror-stricken man, "as God's my witness."

"Well, ye kin horrow it off some o' them gents. They know ye're good for it," returned his ohndurate spouse.

The whole situation was so ludicrous that we other three passengers and the driver burst into a roar of laughter. I immediately reached for my purse, but the colonel was before me, and with a low bow and benignant smile, tendered his. The woman accepted it with the utmost gravity, and took from it two twenties, a five, and three dollars in silver.

"This," she said solemnly, as she returned the purse, "is a loan to the old man. Never fear. He'll pay. I'll make him. Now, Si," she continued turning to her husband, "you'll find my horse tethered over thar. Git on his back an' go to San Luis for more money. I'm goin' to Frisco in this yer stage, if them gents has no objections. I'll meet you up thar."

We, gallantly, simultaneously, and unanimously assured her we had none. Two minutes afterward we were bowling along merrily again as if nothing had happened. Mrs. Williams was the lion, or rather the lioness, of that trip. She had, of course mounted on horseback after the stage passed the ranch, with the intention of overtaking us while we were taking supper at the Pleito, which she did with the above result.

None of us, I think, ever gave the business away not even the colonel, though he relished the joke hugely. Few people care to confess that they have been stood up by a woman.

DISCHARGED WITHOUT HONOR.

Three Companies of Negro Troops Dismissed by Peremptory Order of the President.

Three companies of negro soldiers have been discharged from the United States army without honor. When these companies were stationed at Fort Brown, Texas, last August, certain members of them shot a citizen and wounded a policeman of the neighboring town of Brownsville. General Garlington, Inspector-General of the army, was unable to discover the offenders, because, as he reported, the men "appeared to stand together to resist the detection of the guilty." In his report to the President he recommended that orders be issued discharging, without honor, every man in the three companies serving at the date of the disorder, and forever debarring them from re-enlisting in the army or navy and from employment in any civil capacity under the government. The President adopted the recommendation. This is the official order:

By order of the President the following named enlisted men who, on August 13, were members of B, C, and D companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, which took part in the trouble which occurred in Brownsville, Texas, on the night of August 13, 1906, will be discharged without honor from the army by their respective commanding officers and forever debarrd from re-enlisting in the army or navy of the United States, as well as from employment in any civil capacity under the Government.

The order was received at Fort Reno, Okla., on November 14, and came as a great surprise to the negro soldiers. In a few minutes the 170 men affected by the order had gathered to talk over the situation:

"Well, I'm satisfied," remarked one of the younger soldiers. "I'll be glad to get out of this place on any terms. I'd just as soon be discharged that way as to be kept inside the garrison lines a prisoner, as we've all been since August."

"You boys don't know what you're talking about. I can't believe it, I can't believe it," said an old negro who had seen 20 years of service in the army. "Men, there's nothin' that could be done to us that would be worse than this. I don't know what we old fellows will do. I don't believe the President meant it that way."

Press reports gave these particulars of the result of the President's order:

The negro soldiers dismissed by the President were formally dismissed at El Reno, Okla., on November 18. Many of the men, some of whom had been in the service more than 20 years, shed tears when they gave up their arms. Monday the dismissed troops had battalion drill without arms. The Second Battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, under command of Major Charles J. T. Larke, from San Antonio, is in camp just outside the garrison limits of Fort Reno. The negro troops have shown no disposition to be ugly.

Hardly had the news of the President's judgment been made public when a shower of protests began to descend upon the War Department at Washington. Not alone from the colored people, North and South, but from prominent whites, many even in official circles, came earnest requests for a suspension of the order. President Roosevelt as away on his trip to Panama, and nothing could be done by the members of the Cabinet. Meetings were held in New York, Boston, and other cities to discuss the matter, and many speakers criticized harshly the manner in which the order was made as well as its terms. These are significant paragraphs from the World's report of the meeting in New York:

After President Roosevelt had been scored by Gilchrist Stewart, a negro Republican orator, the Republican County Committee last night unanimously adopted these resolutions:

"Whereas, There has been issued by the War Department of the United States, acting upon the instructions of the President as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, an order discharging dishonorably, without trial, three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, United States Infantry; be it

"Resolved by the Republican County Committee of New York County, That we deplore the sacrifice of this battalion of a gallant regiment; and be it further

"Resolved, That we respectfully ask the President to rescind said order immediately, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the War Department and that we request due representation of this action to be made by the Republican Congressmen of this county to the War Department immediately."

A motion to sidetrack the resolutions by referring them to the Executive Committee was voted down with a majority. Some of the clauses which Chairman Parsons succeeded in having chopped out referred to the forty years of gallant service of the negro regiment, and to the written code of honor among soldiers which prevented the troops from "peaching" on their comrades, as the president desired. Another charged the drastic action of the President to the influence of Col. Garlington, a South Carolinian by birth, whom Mr. Stewart charged to be animated by race prejudice.

The meeting of protest at Faneuil Hall, Boston, attended by 400 people who cheered the severe charges made against President Roosevelt for his action:

William Lloyd Garrison declared it was time for the colored people to organize for lawful self-defense. Edward E. Brown, in a voice choked with emotion, said that the colored people of Boston would be false to their consciences, their mothers and fathers, and to the ten millions of their race if they did not utter a protest against what seems to be an unjust decision of the chief executive of the nation.

Mr. Grimke declared that Roosevelt was afraid to have the order issued before election, because he feared that Hughes would lose the 40,000 colored votes in New York. "Let us tonight as colored men shatter that idol," declared Mr. Grimke. "I now take the image of President Theodore Roosevelt, throw it and shatter it in the dust."

Editorial comment is free on the order of dismissal, and there are few efforts to uphold the extreme action of the President. The New York Evening Post says:

To our mind, Mr. Roosevelt has established a most pernicious precedent, besides doing a grave wrong to many innocent servants of the country. In his desire to let the South see that he is as ready to punish the misconduct of blacks as of whites, he has leaned over backwards. We sincerely hope that he may yet revoke an order which not only will increase his unpopularity with the army, but which reflects upon his good judgment.

In its criticism of the order the New York World raises a point of authority:

In army circles as well as outside them President Roosevelt's wholesale order of dishonorable discharge against every man in three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry is indignantly condemned. Aside from its injustice and inexpediency, its legality is challenged by competent authorities. As commander-in-chief of the army the President has absolute power to discharge any enlisted man without trial, but has he legal authority to make that discharge "dishonorable" at his caprice?

This is the sustaining declaration of the New York Outlook:

By this drastic action notice is served, first, upon non-commissioned officers that they are responsible for keeping informed as to the temper and conduct of the men under them; second, upon the private soldiers of the army that the United States will not tolerate them when they cease to be protectors of the people and become instead disturbers of the public peace and a menace to the lives of citizens; and, third, upon the colored population that the worst service they can do their race is to shield the members of the race who have become enemies of the community of the Nation. Unquestionably by this action some brave and innocent men will greatly suffer; but they are the victims of a false race loyalty.

Secretary Taft notified the President by cable of the flood of protests and received in reply a message from Porto Rico, where the President was at that time. This was reported in these words:

A telegram was received from the President in which he declines to suspend the order discharging the troops unless there are new facts of such importance as to warrant him. He states that the action was taken after due deliberation, and that the only matter to which he can pay heed is the presentation of facts showing the official reports to be in whole or in part untrue, or clearly exculpating some individual. If any such facts later appear he can act as he deems advisable, but thus far nothing has been introduced to warrant the suspension of the order, and he directs that it be executed.

Among the soldiers dishonorably discharged are non-commissioned officers who by long and faithful service would have soon been entitled to the benefits of the retired list. Six of the discharged men, according to the records, have medals of honor and thirteen certificates of merit. Some of these colored soldiers have seen service on the Western frontier, in Cuba, and in the Philippines. Three privates have been dishonorably discharged at Fort Riley, Kan., from the Ninth Cavalry, in which they re-enlisted this fall after their term of enlistment in the Twenty-fifth Infantry expired.

A very full house assembled at the French Chamber of Deputies to hear M. Clemenceau, the new premier, read his declaration of policy. Reading from the tribune, M. Clemenceau stated that the country had not changed in its desire to maintain peace with foreign nations—a dignified peace. Republicans were able to point to the fact that not once during the twenty-five years the republic had been in existence could it be accused of doing anything to endanger the peace of Europe. At the same time, so long as the peace of the civilized world is founded on force of arms, it is impossible for France to disarm. M. Clemenceau went on to say that an important part of the defensive power of France resided in the international understandings which France had concluded with other nations. Among the internal reforms which M. Clemenceau promised to undertake are the abolition of military courts-martial, complete secularization of all schools, workmen's old-age pensions, the purchase by the State of the Western of France Railway, an income tax, and the strict maintenance of the law separating Church and State.

A man who fails to raise his hat when a funeral is passing in Chester, England, is liable to fine and imprisonment.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

Senator Wetmore in Rhode Island, and Senator Dryden in New Jersey, are threatened with displacement when their terms expire.

The Jewish American, which William R. Hearst started on the East Side in New York on October 15 for political purposes, quit business November 15. The employees received notice that the paper had been suspended.

Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture, is the nestor of the cabinet, and is now the only member who was one of the original group composing it at the beginning of Mr. McKinley's administration. Secretaries Root and Hitchcock were each members of Mr. McKinley's cabinet, but both entered it toward the close of his first term.

Edwin S. Stuart, the newly elected Governor of Pennsylvania, is manager of Philadelphia's most famous book store—Leary's. He is said to know more about the market value of old books than any other man in the United States. Mr. Stuart is also President of the Union League Club, the first of that league of organizations formed in the country.

Politicians gathering in Washington since the election say that unless Speaker Cannon very soon gives indication that he is going to take a more friendly view of the proposal to revise the tariff, and particularly give assurances that if re-elected speaker he will reorganize the Ways and Means Committee in favor of the revisionists, there will be started in the next few weeks a movement to depose him in the Sixtieth Congress, and put a new man in the chair who will take a more kindly view of the tariff revision sentiment.

District-Attorney Jerome, of New York, has at length made his report to Governor Higgins on the Mutual Life Insurance Company investigation. It is a voluminous document of 14,000 words, but further reports will be made on the other companies. The conclusions of the district-attorney are that there is no State law under which insurance officials can be proceeded against criminally for acts now or formerly in common practice, some of which were made public during the recent legislative inquiry, except in the cases of two officers of the Mutual Life, against whom specific charges of forgery and larceny have been filed.

Ex-Governor B. B. Odell, Jr., is frank in his criticism of President Roosevelt's interference in the New York campaign. An Associated Press report credits him with saying:

"I think the President's interference was on a par with every other instance of Presidential interference in State politics. It was disastrous to the party, just as the interference of President Arthur was disastrous, and as every other such movement has been disastrous from the days of De Witt Clinton to the present time. The people of this State have always resented the interference of a President of the United States in their local elections. I think the interference of President Roosevelt did more harm than good."

Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, the lawyer who has been elected Lieutenant-Governor of New York, is descended from the Astors through his mother, Margaret Astor Ward, whose great-grandfather was the original John Jacob Astor. He is a cousin of Col. John Jacob Astor and of William Waldorf Astor. His father was John Winthrop Chanler, at one time a Sachem in Tammany, and for several terms a congressman. Mr. Chanler is 37 years old. He was born in Newport, R. I., and at 21 married Miss Alice Chamberlain, in London. Mrs. Chanler was one of the guests invited to the dinner given by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt in honor of Prince Henry—an event which for the time being pruned the Four Hundred down to about 40. Mr. and Mrs. Chanler have three children.

Secretary of the Navy Charles J. Bonaparte, in a recent interview published in the Baltimore News seriously suggested the establishment of a legalized "boss" in each political party in each of the States and cities, the "boss" to be empowered to select the candidates for the various elective officers, thereby doing away with nominating conventions. He said:

"He ought to be elected annually by the legal voters of his party, at a primary held under all the sanctions of law, and at which only this one office, or rather position, should be filled. I think it probable that no one of the persons who have been known as bosses since I have known something about politics would have been elected at such a primary. Now by a legalized 'boss' I mean an individual authorized by one of the parties to choose all the candidates of that party for elective offices within a designated territory—to do intelligently, deliberately, and carefully the work which is supposed to be done by nominating conventions. Of course, every facility should be afforded for making independent nominations, whether within the organized parties or without."

AS H. G. WELLS SEES US.

Impressions Received by a Trip to America
"in Search of Realities."

H. G. Wells, author of fantastic romances of the time-to-come, started from his pleasant English country home early last spring for the United States, on "a search after realities," and to attempt to answer a tremendous problem: What is going to happen to the United States of America in the next thirty years or so? Mr. Wells stayed two months, and has written his impressions in an entertaining, but not always convincing, volume, "The Future in America." At the outset, the author prepares the reader for the serious character of the book, and disabuses "his mind of the idea that in writing of the Future in America, I'm going to write of houses a hundred stories high and flying-machines in warfare, and things like that." The Chinese peril, the trusts, the blacks, the socialists, the immigrants; New York's architecture, Boston's culture, Chicago's so-called sordidness—all of our familiar problems, perils, and institutions are glanced at hastily, and commented on positively.

New York's boasted skyscrapers had an effect of immense incompleteness on the imaginative tourist, and he believes that New Yorkers would welcome a fire like the San Francisco disaster, which would enable them to rebuild a bigger and a better city:

At a bright table in Delmonico's today at lunch-time, my host told me the first news of the destruction of the great part of San Francisco by earthquake and fire. It had just come through to him, it wasn't yet being shouted by the newsboys. He told me complacently of dislocated water-mains, of the ill-luck of the unusual eastward wind that was blowing the fire up-town, of a thousand reported dead, of the manifest doom of the greater portion of the city, and presently the shouting voices in the street outside arose to chorus him. He was a newspaper man and a little pre-occupied because his San Francisco offices were burning, and that no further news was arriving after these first intimations. Naturally the catastrophe was our topic. But this disaster did not affect him, it does not seem to have affected any one with a sense of final destruction, with any foreboding of irreparable disaster. Every one is talking of it this afternoon, and no one is in the least degree dismayed. I have talked and listened in two clubs, watched people in cars and in the street, and one man is glad that Chinatown will be cleared out for good; another's chief solicitude is for Millet's "Man with the Hoe." "They'll cut it out of the frame," he says, a little anxiously. "Sure."

But there is no doubt anywhere that San Francisco can be rebuilt, larger, better, and soon. Just as there would be none at all if all this New York that has so obsessed me with its limitless bigness was itself a blazing ruin. I believe these people would more than half like the situation. It would give them scope, it would facilitate that conversion into white marble in progress everywhere, it would settle the difficulties of the elevated railroad and clear out the tangles of lower New York. There is no sense of accomplishment and finality in any of these things, the largest, the finest, the tallest, are so obviously no more than symptoms and promises of material progress, of inhuman material progress that is so in the nature of things that no one would regret their passing.

Despite the foregoing reflections, Mr. Wells, later in the book, makes this astonishing statement:

New York is not simply more interesting than Rome, but more significant, more stimulating, and far more beautiful, and the idea that to be concerned about the latter in preference to the former, is a mark of finer mental quality is one of the most mischievous and foolish ideas that ever invaded the mind of man. We are obsessed by the scholastic prestige of mere knowledge and genteel remoteness. Over against unthinking ignorance is scholarly refinement, the spirit of Boston; between that Scylla and Charybdis the creative mind of man steers its precarious way.

If New York impressed him with its incompleteness, Boston, he says, produces an immense effect of finality. This is Mr. Wells's idea of "the spirit of Boston":

I do not know why the full sensing of what is ripe and good in the past should carry with it this quality of discriminating against the present and the future. The fact remains that it does so almost oppressively. I found myself by some accident of hospitality one evening in the company of a number of Boston gentlemen who constituted a book-collecting club. They had dined, and they were listening to a paper on Bibles printed in America. It was a scholarly, valuable, and exhaustive piece of research. The surviving copies of each edition were traced, and when some rare specimen was mentioned as the property of any member of the club there was decorously warm applause. I had been seeing Boston, drinking in the Boston atmosphere all day. I know it will seem an ungracious and ungrateful thing to confess (yet the necessities of my picture of America compel me), but as I sat at the large and beautifully ordered table, with these fine, rich men about me, and listened to the steady progress of the reader's ever unrhymed sentences, and the little bursts of approval, it came to me with a horrible quality of conviction that the mind of the world was dead, and that this was a distribution of souvenirs.

Indeed, so strongly did this grip me, that presently, upon some slight occasion, I excused myself and went out into the night.

I wandered about Boston for some hours, trying to shake off this unfortunate idea. I felt that all the books had been written, all the pictures painted, all the thoughts said—or at least that nobody would ever believe this wasn't so. I felt it was dreadful nonsense to go on writing books. Nothing remained but to collect them in the richest, finest manner one could. Somewhere about midnight I came to a publisher's window, and stood in the dim moonlight peering enviously at piled copies of Izaak Walton, Omar Khayyam, and all the happy immortals who got in before the gates were shut. And then in the corner I discovered a thin, small book. For a time I could scarcely believe my eyes. I lit a match to be the surer. And it was "A Modern Symposium," by Lowes Dickinson, beyond all disputing. It was strangely comforting to see it there—a leaf of olive from the world of thought I had imagined drowned forever.

The capacity of Boston, it would seem, was just sufficient, but no more than sufficient, to comprehend the whole achievement of the human intellect, up, let us say, to the year 1875 A. D. Then an equilibrium was established. At or about that year Boston filled up.

One of our major faults, as a people, is that we are undisciplined, the author avers. And Chicago especially, is "one hoarse cry for discipline." Here is his unpleasant picture of Chicago:

In smoky, vast, undisciplined Chicago, growth forced itself upon me again as the dominant American fact, but this time a dark disorder of growth. I went about Chicago seeing many things of which I may say something later. I visited the top of the Masonic Building and viewed a wilderness of sky-scrappers. I acquired a film of memories of swing bridges and viaducts and interlacing railways and jostling crowds and extraordinarily dirty streets; I learnt something of the mystery of the "floating foundations" upon which so much of Chicago rests. But I got my best vision of Chicago as I left it.

I sat in the open observation-car at the end of the Pennsylvania Limited Express, and watched the long defile of industrialism from the Union Station in the heart of things to out beyond South Chicago, a dozen miles away. I had not gone to the bloody spectacle of the stock yards that "feed the world," because, to be frank, I have an immense repugnance to the killing of fixed and helpless animals. I saw nothing of those ill-managed, ill-inspected establishments, though I smelt the unwholesome reek from them ever and again, and so it was here I saw for the first time the enormous expanse and intricacy of railroads that net this great industrial desolation, and something of the going and coming of the myriads of polyglot workers. Chicago burns bituminous coal, it has a reek that outdoes London, and right and left of the line rise vast chimneys, huge blackened grain-elevators, flame-crowned turnpikes and gauntly ugly and filthy factory buildings, monstrous mounds of refuse, desolate, empty lots littered with rusty cans, old iron, and indescribable rubbish. Interspersed with these are groups of dirty, insanitary-looking wooden houses.

Even amidst the sombre uncleanness of Chicago one sees the light of a new epoch, the coming of new conceptions, of foresight, of large collective plans and discipline to achieve them, the fresh, green leaves, among all the festering manure, of the giant growths of a more orderly and more beautiful age.

Our philanthropists, it appears, add to the general confusion by their promiscuous giving:

American cities are being littered with a disorder of unsystematized foundations and picturesque legacies, much as I find my nursery floor littered with abandoned toys and battles and buildings when the children are in bed after a long, wet day. Yet some of the gifts are very splendid ones. There is, for example, the Leland Stanford Junior University in California, a vast monument of parental affection and Richardsonian architecture, with professors, and teaching going on in its interstices; and there is Mrs. Gardner's delightful Fenway Court, a Venetian palace, brought almost bodily from Italy and full of finely gathered treasures.

All this giving is, in its aggregate effect, as confused as industrial Chicago.

As we journey with the author to Washington, we cherish a secret hope that here, at least, he will be impressed with the fitness of things. But, alas, he finds our national capital to be only "a magnificent, empty city." His impressions of Washington follow:

In all Washington there is no clearing-house of thought at all; Washington has no literary journals, no magazines, no publications other than those of the official specialist—there does not seem to be a living for a single firm of publishers in this magnificent empty city.

I went about the place in a state of ridiculous and deepening concern. I went through the splendid Botanical Gardens, through the spacious and beautiful Capitol, and so to the magnificently equipped Library of Congress. There in an upper chamber that commands an altogether beautiful view of long vistas of avenue and garden to that stupendous unmeaning obelisk (the work of the women of America) that dominates all Washington, I found at last a little group of men who could talk. It was like a small raft upon a limitless, empty sea. I lunched with them at their Round Table, and afterwards Mr. Putnam showed me the Rotunda, quite the most gracious reading-room dome the world possesses, and explained the wonderful mechanical organization that brings almost every volume in that immense collection within a minute of one's hand. "With all this," I asked him, "why doesn't the place think?" He seemed, discreetly, to consider it did.

And that is the great trouble with the people of America, Mr. Wells believes: We don't think. He does some ineffectual thinking for us on all our troublesome questions—from the corruption of the plutocracy to our repudiation of Maxim Gorky. Here is a big suggestion:

I came away from Washington with my preconception enormously reinforced, that the supreme need of America, the preliminary thing to any social or economic reconstruction, is political reform. It seems to me to lie upon the surface that America has to be democratized. It is necessary to make the Senate and the House of Representatives more interdependent, and to abolish the possibilities of deadlocks between them, to make election to the Senate direct from the people, and to qualify and weaken the power of the two-party system by the introduction of "second ballots" and the referendum.

Mr. Wells sums up the result of his observations somewhat contradictorily:

After all is said and done, I do find the balance of my mind tilts steadily to a belief in a continuing and accelerated progress now in human affairs. And in spite of my patriotic inclinations, in spite, too, of the present high intelligence and efficiency of Germany, it seems to me that in America, by sheer virtue of its size, its free traditions, and the habit of initiative in its people, the leadership of progress must ultimately rest. Things like the Chicago scandals, the insurance scandals, and all the manifest crudities of the American spectacle, don't seem to be more than relatively trivial after all. There are the universities, the turbines of Niagara, the New York architecture, and the quality of the mediocre people to set against these.

As he is steaming out of New York harbor, the "prophetic habit of mind" inspires the following characteristic bit:

And suddenly as I looked back at the sky-scrappers of lower New York, a queer fancy sprang into my head. They reminded me quite irresistibly of piled-up packing cases outside a warehouse. I was amazed, I had not seen the resemblance before. I could have really believed for a moment that that was what they were, and that presently out of these would come the real thing, palaces and noble places, free, high circumstances, and space and leisure, light and fine living for the sons of men.

And so, Mr. Wells leaves us as he found us, with perils confronting us, and problems unanswered. But with all our vexations we are grateful for entertainment, and his picturesque criticisms give us that.

Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $2.00 net.

MORE THAN FIFTY YEARS AGO

HUNTER WHISKEY

WAS PUT UPON THE MARKET, AND EVERY YEAR ADDS TO ITS SPLENDID REPUTATION. RIPPENED BY AGE, ITS MELLOWED EXCELLENCE REMAINS ABSOLUTELY UNSURPASSED. IT IS TO-DAY

FIRST OVER THE BARS

CHARLES M. REYNOLDS CO.,
Agents for California and Nevada,
912 24 Folsom St., San Francisco, Cal.

Hotel del Coronado

A gem set in semi-tropical surroundings
Dryest marine climate known
No winter, but perpetual spring or early summer
Outdoor sports 365 days in the year
Golf, Polo, Tennis
Fishing, Boating, and Bathing
Choicest cuisine of any hotel in the West
American plan only
All modern conveniences
All outside rooms
Send for illustrated booklet

MORGAN ROSS, Mgr., Coronado Beach Cal.
H. F. NORCROSS, General Agent
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

P. Centemeri & Co.

KID GLOVES

New Location

1551 Van Ness Ave.

Between Pine and California
San Francisco

ANNOUNCEMENT

Marie L. Sweeney

Formerly of 121 Post

Is Now Located at

1536 Bush Street

WITH A COMPLETE STOCK OF EXCLUSIVE STYLES IN

MILLINERY

Goodyear Rubber Company

Have Returned to Their Old Home, Where They Were Located Before the Fire,

573-579 Market St., near Seco
Tel. Temporary 1788

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria, has decided to visit New York this coming winter. He is at present on the continent maturing his plans for a great campaign. While staying in London he had frequent interviews with George H. Cornell of New York, with a view to securing introductions in the United States.

Chief Pleasant Porter of the Creek nation is the only Indian railroad president in America. His railroad is the Indian Central. It filed its charter at Guthrie. It is capitalized at $15,000,000 and contemplates the construction of 460 miles of railroad in Indian Territory and Oklahoma within the next two years.

Charles M. Schwab, who has had built a $5,000,000 chateau in the metropolis, was recently asked if he found New York fascinating, and why he had chosen to live in that city. His answer was: "Business is my excuse. My business interests center here—that, for me, is a compelling reason. Otherwise, I would much rather live in Pittsburg than in New York."

Cecil Arthur Spring-Rice will probably be the next Ambassador to this country from Great Britain. Spring-Rice is at present in Persia, having succeeded Sir A. H. Hardinge at Teheran. Before that he was first secretary of the embassy at St. Petersburg. He was born in 1859 and was educated at Eton and Balliol, Oxford. In 1904 he married Florence, daughter of Sir Frank Lascelles.

John Burns, the labor cabinet minister, is now comfortably settled in his new and larger home in Lavender Gardens, London. His precious books he moved personally. Mr. Burns's books are his greatest treasures. Since his very early days he has collected books on the history of England, books of travel and volumes of vital statistics. To this day he can be seen diving into the three-penny boxes of second hand booksellers. Mr. Burns did not occupy the whole house at Lavender Hill. For some years the top floor was tenanted by the widow of a chimney sweep.

Major Dreyfus, when reporting for duty to Lieutenant Colonel Bouisson of the general staff learned that he was to be especially intrusted with the arrangements for mobilization in case France were invaded from the north. In other words, the former prisoner of Devil's Island is to have full charge of that department of the service which he was once accused of betraying.

Oren Root, a nephew of the Secretary of State, while scarcely over 30 years of age, was recently appointed vice-president of the Metropolitan Street Railroad Company of New York. Root started at the bottom of the ladder. He began with a construction gang as a laborer and later, before going into the offices of the company, he acted as motorman and for several months rang up fares.

Winston Spencer Churchill, the parliamentary secretary of the Colonial Office, is going to the West Indies about Christmas to study the resources of the islands, especially the prospects of extending cotton growing with the viewpoint of possible government aid. The Duke of Marlborough and Sir Alfred Jones, president of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, and others interested in the islands will accompany Mr. Churchill.

Robert William Allen, a British school boy, son of an officer in the Indian army, achieved international fame in Bayerne, in the Canton of Vaud, Switzerland, by painting a statue of General Jomini, vermillion, to celebrate his departure for a vacation. He was pursued by the outraged officials of the town, captured at Lausanne, brought back and put in prison, narrowly escaping injuries at the hands of an angry mob that awaited his return. His trial is soon to take place.

CURRENT VERSE.

How Long the Road.

The woman-need is gone that made thy kiss
My manna, and a heaven of thine eyes;
The patience-preaching years have made me wise,
Till, in the woods and fields, the sturdy bliss
Of fellowship and work, I cease to miss
The throbbing ache of those old ecstasies,
Save to remember with a wan surprise,
Sometimes, how long the road that led to this.

But to be sure that somewhere, strong and whole,
Thou livest, striving, noble though beset,
Master again of the essential soul,
I doubted when my cruel wounds were wet—
This long my deepest, direst need of thee,
O, once beloved! it is granted me.
—Charlotte Wilson in Metropolitan Magazine.

The Return.

He sought the old scenes with eager feet—
The scenes he had known as a boy;
"Oh, for a draught of those fountains sweet,
And a taste of that vanished joy."
He roamed the fields, he mused by the streams,
He threaded the paths and lanes;
On the hills he sought his youthful dreams,
In the woods to forget his pains.
Oh, sad, sad hills; oh, cold, cold hearth!
In sorrow he learned thy truth—
One may go back to the place of his birth—
He can not go back to his youth.
—John Burroughs.

Among all the translations of Homer, that by Alexander Pope remains the most popular.

IT IS EASY WITH ELECTRO SILICON
to Clean and Polish
SILVERWARE
Send address for a FREE SAMPLE, or 15c. in stamps for a full box. Electro-Silicon Soap has equal merits.
The Electro-Silicon Co., 30 Cliff St., New York.
Grocers and Druggists sell it.

Spend Your Thanksgiving
Make your plans to spend Thanksgiving at Hotel del Monte and avoid all home cares. You can leave San Francisco Wednesday at 3:00 o'clock and enjoy a few days, vacation, returning Sunday or Monday. Special round trip rates. For more details address
GEO. P. SNELL, Manager,
Del Monte, California.

At Hotel del Monte
These trade-mark cross lines on every package
Cresco Grits and
(Formerly called WUTEN GRITS)
BARLEY CRISTALS,
Perfect Breakfast and Dinner Health Cereals.
PANSY FLOUR for Cakes, Biscuits and Biscuits.
Unlike all other goods. Ask grocers.
For book of samples, write
FARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N. Y., U. S. A.

THE OCULARIUM
Perfect Fitting
Eye Glasses
At Moderate Prices
Lenses Replaced, 50c
Henry Kahn & Co
OPTICIANS
1309 VAN NESS AVENUE
Between Bush and Sutter

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE
THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE FOR STEAKS, CHOPS, COLD MEATS, FISH, SOUPS, SALADS, GRAVIES, etc.

THE PEERLESS SEASONING.
John Duncan's Sons, Agts., New York

LITERARY NOTES.

Bright Story by a New Author.

The title of Christina Gowans Whyte's story, "The Story Book Girls," and the announcement that the tale won a prize offered by a literary journal for "the best story for young girls," give one an erroneous impression that it was written for children. Bright and wholesome and entertaining as the story is, it is hardly intended for girls under, say, the age when the mystery and perils of the split infinitive, which is the subject of an amusing episode in the story, are understood.

The four lassies of the tale live at the west end of a town, and dream dreams about four other girls at a still further west. The latter were grown up, social leaders, and "sat in their own carriages." The younger girls, who did not ride in carriages, created an existence for the Story Book Girls which would have astonished them considerably had they known. So far as practicable they took their ideas of fashions and deportment and accomplishment from the elder girls, and carried them into effect, most of the time surreptitiously, and always with ludicrous results. The Story Book Girls and the children meet, and while there is some disappointment at first, the climax is a charming surprise.

Miss Whyte is a new writer of whom it is safe to predict a brilliant future. She has a graceful and facile style, and possesses a rare sense of humor, which illumines nearly every paragraph of her story.

Published by The Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

Garden Verses.

"All the Year in the Garden," edited by Esther Matson, is a nature calendar for those who love to "come together in so fragrant a cause as that of praising gardens." The hook is made up of selections for every day in the year from authors who have celebrated the beauty of nature. Most of the selections are from the poets, from Horace to Austin Dobson, who have written in praise of a hit of ground "where the sweet flowers lie." The garden has had its poet laureate in every age and in every race, and the compiler has brought together a well-chosen body of passages. Every month has its hard who has sung its glories. "Firstly thou, churl son of Janus;" "Wan February with weeping cheer;" "March, month of many weathers;" "proud pied April;" "flowery May;" "bright and merry June;" "fervent July;" "August, flushed and warm;" "September, all glorious with gold;" "gorgeous, bright October;" "russet-robed November;" and "shrunk December"

When up the garden walk in vain
We seek for Flora's lovely train.

The hook is handsomely bound, and is illustrated from photographs. Published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York; $1 net.

"Why They Married."

An amusing little hook is "Why They Married," by James Montgomery Flagg, whose "If: A Guide to Bad Manners," was so well received last year. The hook consists of drawings of fifty types of couples and below each sketch is a quatrain giving the reasons why that particular couple entered the holy bonds of matrimony. For instance, below a picture of a merry-looking bride and groom is appended this explanation of their wedding:

"He thought she was wealthy; she thought he was, too,
Not thinking each other a grafter,
They found out between them there wasn't a sou—
So they laughed and lived happily after!"

Beneath the picture of a very domestic, but frankly hored couple, is the following quatrain:

"These people wed in self-defense,
All social life they missed,
They found themselves outside the fence,
For neither played bridge-whist."

Opposite and in character with each of the main drawings is a humorous miniature carrying out the same idea.

There is a considerable amount of veiled satire in Mr. Flagg's verses and drawings, but even those who have unconsciously posed for the artist will laugh at his clever limning of their marital comedies. "Why They Married" contains the portraits of persons we all know, who have tried matrimony with indifferent success.

Published by The Life Publishing Company, New York; 75 cents.

Poems of the Civil War.

"From Old Fields," is a book of stirring poems of the Civil War, by Nathaniel Southgate Shaler, late Professor of Geology in Harvard University. The volume is dedicated to the people of Kentucky, and some of the heroes of the poems are Confederates, although Professor Shaler was a Federal officer. The author uses blank-verse most effectively in telling his war experiences. Here are comic incident and tragic adventure, self-sacrificing heroism and heart-gripping pathos; exchange of reminiscences between "ex-Yank" and "ex-Reh," and stories that are told when old comrades meet. In a style that is vivid, direct, and never dull, the poems picture war-time episodes that are strikingly real. The author has ringing praise for Southern gallantry, and eloquent eulogy for the men of the North, but he does not glorify the grim work of war, which he regards as did General Sherman.

Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $3 net.

New Publications.

Mary McNeil Fenollosa, author of "The Breath of the Gods," returns to the Orient for the scenes of her latest story, "The Dragon Painter." It is an original romance of modern Japan, wholly Oriental in coloring, and fascinating in theme and treatment. Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

Lovers of sea-stories will enjoy "Beached Keels," by Henry Milner Rideout, which contains three clever and original tales. There is great variety of character in the stories, which deal with the sea-going life of eastern Maine. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $1.50.

A quaint and charming holiday hook is "The Stained Glass Lady," an idyl, by Blanche Elizabeth Wade. The story abounds with delicate imagery and whimsical humor. The cover, end-pages, and frontispiece are illustrated with colorful drawings by Blanche Ostertag. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; $2.50.

Several valuable addresses and critical essays are included in Henry Cahot Lodge's "A Frontier Town and Other Essays." The initial address was delivered at Greenfield, Mass., on the 150th anniversary of the founding of that town. All of the papers are distinguished by Mr. Lodge's faultless diction. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50.

An exceedingly interesting tale of the Middle Ages is Valentina Hawtrey's "A Romance of Old Wars." The hook abounds in brightly written descriptions of dramatic episodes, and the dialogue is unusually sprightly. Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

"The Spirit of Democracy," by Charles Fletcher Dole, is a broad-minded consideration of some of the more important problems that are confronting the democratic form of government. Democracy is on trial, but while it never faced more perils, neither has there ever been more reason to hope for its success. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York; $1.25 net.

"Afternoons in the College Chapel" is a collection of short addresses to young men on personal religion, by Francis Greenwood Peabody, Plummer Professor of Christian Morals in Harvard University. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $1.25.

The love story of a French girl with two suitors, both soldiers, one Polish, the other Irish, is told in Mary Catherine Crowley's romance of old Quebec, "In Treaty with Honor." It is an interesting tale of the struggle of French Canada for independence in 1837-38. Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.50.

Pears'

Most soaps clog the skin pores by the fats and free alkali in their composition.

Pears' is quickly rinsed off, leaves the pores open and the skin soft and cool.

Established in 1789.

ROBERTSON'S

NEW LOCATION

1539

Van Ness Ave., near Pine

"Next to the White House"

Mr. Robertson calls attention to the above address, which is very centrally located.

J. S. DINKELSPIEL

Importer of

Diamonds, Precious Stones

1021 Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

Finé Set Pieces a Specialty

PAUL ELDER & COMPANY

PUBLISHERS, BOOK SELLERS, ART DEALERS, STATIONERS

VAN NESS AVENUE, CORNER OF BUSH STREET, S. F. TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 646

¶ We have now ready as in former years a great variety of books and items of art interest, suitable for Holiday presentation.

¶ Our stock of fine books has lately been increased by the arrival from London of a number of rare extra illustrated books, standard sets and individual volumes in fine bindings.

¶ To the various lines heretofore found in our store, we have just added a complete stock of stationery, specially made and boxed. In connection with this we are better prepared than ever to execute orders for engraving and die stamping.

¶ Our publication department is now in New York and has reprinted from new plates most of the older and well known books, as well as a number of new books of decided interest. These may be had at the store on Van Ness Ave., as well as in our shop at Santa Barbara, which has lately moved into new and larger quarters on State Street.

EDUCATIONAL

Twin Oaks Camp School.

Outdoor life on a Ranch for boys under fifteen. Each boy has a tent-house and saddle horse. Best of references.

Address
MISS MARGARET MARSH-PARKER,
SAN MARCOS, San Diego Co., California.

IRVING INSTITUTE

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Accredited by the universities. Special advantages in music, art, and elocution. Twenty-eighth year.

MISS PINKHAM and Miss McLENNAN, Principals.
2126 California Street, San Francisco.
Easter Term opens Monday, January 7, 1907, 9 a. m.

U. REVEL, A. M.

Post-Graduate from Florence, Italy.

ITALIAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE
918 Alice Street OAKLAND

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL

Palo Alto, Cal. Home and Day School for Girls. Intermediate and Primary Departments. Certificate admits to Stanford, Vassar and Wellesley. Number limited. Reopens August 20th.

MR. HUGO MANSFELDT

Announces his removal to 2090 Fell St., corner of Shrader. Telephone West 1736.

MLLE. ELEANORE JOSEPH

(Lately from Paris and Berlin)

SINGING AND PIANO

1913 Baker St., near Sacramento San Francisco

G. B. GALVANI

Vocal Teacher

814 OAK STREET OAKLAND, CAL.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Twenty minutes from Philadelphia; two hours from New York. The late Mr. Jay Cooke's fine property. For circulars, address Miss SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Principal, Ogontz School, P. O., Pa.

Mathematics and English.

University and preparatory subjects; no prescribed courses, but assistance given in any manner desired, either personally or by correspondence. Miss C. L. Williams, M. S., Mrs. G. S. Manchester, M. S., 218 El Granada Bldg., Bancroft Way, Berkeley, Cal.

St. Matthew's Military School

Burlingame, California

Easter Term begins January 10, 1907

For illustrated catalogue address

REV. WILLIAM A. BREWER, Rector

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. Bridge & Co.

Merchant Tailors

1176 O'Farrell Street

L. KREISS & SONS

CABINET MAKERS

UPHOLSTERERS

DECORATORS

Dealers in Fine Mahogany, Early English Oak Furniture; reproductions of rare examples of Antique Fabrics of all important periods of English, French and Italian Arts in Tapestries, Brocaded Silks, Damasks, Embroideries, Etc.

Our stock is complete and contains many Odd Pieces suitable for Gifts.

1219-23 POST ST.

Above Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

LITERARY NOTES.

Conway's Memories of the Far East.

Moncure D. Conway's recently published Autobiography" contained very little about his experiences and observations in the sacred places of Eastern and Oriental religions. Mr. Conway has made a separate volume of his journeys to Ceylon and India, My Pilgrimage to the Wise Men of the East." The author in his saunterings amid ancient shrines had unusual opportunities for investigation. He interviewed the leading Buddhists, Brahmans, Parsees, Moslems, and others in India, including such well-known Orientalists as Pereira, Ramnathan, Arabi Pasha, the high priest Umangala, and the great Brahman Posivist, Ghosh. Incidentally, there are some interesting memories of Madame Blavatsky, Sir Alfred Lyall, John Bright, and Robert Ingersoll.

Those who have read Mr. Conway's Autobiography" will be interested in the recent work, which rounds out the full experience of the author's life. The book is profusely illustrated with portraits and assimile letters.

Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., New York; $3 net.

Big Game in the Canadian Rockies.

A narrative of a hunting trip into the mountain wilds of British Columbia is Camp-Fires in the Canadian Rockies," by William T. Hornaday, Director of the New York Zoological Park. Accompanied by John M. Phillips, who had discovered a section in southeastern British Columbia that no sportsman had yet set foot upon, the author spent two months with rod and gun and camera in a wonderland of nature. Caribou, moose, grizzly bear, deer, elk, and mountain goats and sheep, abound in the region, and the party had royal sport.

Xmas at the Booklovers

Until 5:30 p. m., Dec. 31st, we will issue yearly memberships at the reduced rate of $4.00

The Pacific Booklovers Library
1215 Post Street (near Van Ness Ave.)!

Books by California Writers

BEACHED KEELS

By HENRY RIDEOUT

"No writer has ever shown a more intimate knowledge of the rugged coast of Eastern Maine than Mr. Rideout, and none has been more successful in depicting the rugged characteristics of the men and women who live within sound of its breakers."—Kennebec Journal. $1.50.

MONTLIVET

By ALICE PRESCOTT SMITH

"The best American historical novel by a woman since 'To Have and To Hold.'"—New York World. "The reader thrills under the spell of a well-sustained and adventurous tale."—Detroit Free Press. $1.50.

KRISTY'S RAINY DAY PICNIC

By OLIVE THORNE MILLER

"Nothing could be more desirable as a holiday gift for a small girl."—Buffalo Commercial. "Stories that will serve to while away many dull afternoons."—San Francisco Chronicle. Illustrated in color; $1.25.

THE FLOCK

By MARY AUSTIN

"Not often does a book of such unusual quality or so picturesque a character come before the reader."—Brooklyn Eagle. "It is practical and historical."—Galveston News. Beautifully printed, and illustrated by E. Boyd Smith. In box; $2 net; post-age, 18 cents.

Our Illustrated Holiday Bulletin
Sent Free on Request.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.
4 Park Street, Boston

It was in stalking mountain goats that the hunters had their most exciting experiences. Mr. Phillips secured, at risks of life and limb, a remarkable series of photographs of that interesting animal. One result of the trip was the capturing of five young goats, the first flock of their kind ever achieved by a zoological institution.

The author is a devoted lover of outdoor enjoyment, and an authority on big game. He did not realize, however, that one could today find such "good luck in hunting, rare success in photography, and unalloyed delight in camp life" in the limits of a vacation hunting trip.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $3.00 net.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

G. W. Cable, the famous Southern author, was married in Philadelphia, November 24, to Miss Eva C. Stevenson, daughter of former Congressman Job Stevenson of Cincinnati. Miss Stevenson's mother was a sister of Lloyd and Joshua Tevis.

Thomas Nelson Page's poems have been brought out by Charles Scribner's Sons.

George Wharton James, the author and lecturer, objects to being called "Professor." In a letter to his publishers, who are about to bring out his two-volume work, "The Wonders of the Colorado Desert (Southern California)," he says: "I am not now a professor and never was, although the title was given me many years ago on account of my lecturing at various universities."

In a certain part of New England, where a number of writers have bought farms and made their summer homes, the remark was made to a farmer's wife that there seemed to be a good many literary people in that neighborhood. "Yes," she replied, with a certain air of resignation, "there are quite a few—but we don't mind them."

Thomas Bailey Aldrich, who is almost the sole survivor of the coterie of great New England authors, was seventy years old on November 11. He was born at Portsmouth, N. H., a place which figures in several of his productions under the thin veil of Rivermouth. There was laid the scene of most of his "Story of a Bad Boy," and its historical characteristics are noted in his "An Old Town by the Sea." His early years were divided between that place and New Orleans. He entered a counting-room in New York when a young man, but his literary diversions soon became his occupation. He was connected with one and another journal, but went to Boston in 1865 to take charge of "Every Saturday." Later, he was for nine years editor of "The Atlantic Monthly," and has continued to reside in Boston. His writings consist of poems, dramas, novels, stories, essays, and a translation. His first book, "The Story of a Bad Boy," was published in 1869, and his latest volume is the "Book of Songs and Sonnets," which was published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., last May in a limited edition of four hundred copies, a few of which are still obtainable.

The San Francisco Libraries Recovering.

F. J. Teggart, librarian of the Mechanics' library, has over 15,000 volumes in the new building, at Polk and Grove streets. Space is prepared to house over 40,000 books and Librarian Teggart promises to have that many on hand inside of two years. The library lost over 200,000 volumes in the fire.

The Free Public Library was a heavy loser. The collection at the City Hall, numbering 166,344 volumes, was entirely destroyed. Yet already there are at hand at the present headquarters, at Sixteenth and Market streets, a working collection of about 20,000 tomes. This total will be doubled inside of another six months. Since the fire, the Library has established four branches and six delivery stations.

The French Club has given notice that the rehabilitation of the Circle Francais, which was entirely destroyed by the fire, will begin at once.

STAGE GOSSIP.

Dramatic Notes.

Plans are perfected for a temporary theatre building at the corner of Van Ness avenue and Grove street, on the old St. Ignatius College site, to be completed in sixty days. Gottlob, Marx & Co., are the owners, and they announce that the new theatre will have a larger stage than any ever before built in the city, and that the building will be carefully arranged and fitted up artistically.

The first production in America of Oscar Wilde's play, "Salome," was at the Astor Theatre in New York on November 15. Mercedes Leigh, an English actress, appeared in the title role. The play was interdicted in London by the censor.

Blanche Ring and Peter Dailey are giving in a skit called "The Great Decide," at the Herald Square Theatre in New York, burlesque imitations of Margaret Anglin and Henry Miller, in "The Great Divide."

Maxine Elliott will be seen in "Her Great Match" in San Francisco this month.

At the Lyric Theatre in New York, on November 15 and 16, "Mrs. Dane's Defense" was presented with Lena Ashwell, the talented English actress, and Margaret Anglin in the cast. The first matinee performance presented Miss Ashwell as Mrs. Dane, and Miss Anglin as Lady Eastney; the next day the two parts were exchanged, and the audiences had an opportunity to contrast the methods and power of the two actresses in a role in which each had won high praise.

A correspondent writes to correct a recent note in this column concerning Hauptmann's "The Sunken Bell," produced in Philadelphia by Sothern and Julia Marlowe. The play was ascribed to Sudermann in the first lines of the paragraph by a curious error, but correctly assigned in a following sentence.

George M. Cohan has formed a partnership with Samuel H. Harris for the purpose of building a new theatre and roof-garden in New York. All of Cohan's pieces will be produced on the stage of the new

The first presentation in Rome of Gabriele D'Annunzio's new drama, "More Than Love," was a complete failure. The public protest was emphatic. The people hissed and hooted the play, the plot of which is an apology for the committing of a crime in order to attain certain ideals.

The Orpheum.

The four Lukens, inventors and originators of the world's most famous mid-air acts, will head the bill at the Orpheum this Sunday afternoon. Albert Bellman and Lottie Moore, who present "A Bit of Vaudeville," will receive a warm welcome. The Brothers Kochly will astound even members of the Olympic Club. Charles F. Semon, the famous ventriloquist, the four Musical Avolos, Miss Lina Pantzer and her assistant, Tommy, and Orpheum Motion Pictures, showing the latest novelties, will complete a programme full of variety. On the grounds of the Chutes, where the Orpheum is located, are to be found all kinds of varied attractions.

Holiday Books

FINE ART POETRY
HISTORY
FICTION JUVENILE

M. H. FAY

Importer and Bookseller
1534 Bush Street
Bet. Van Ness Ave. and Franklin St.

Hotel St. Francis

a credit to
San Francisco

PERFECT SERVICE
EVERY COMFORT

THEY WHO GO TO SEE
GO
TO STAY

The famous
Grill Room
is unsurpassed

Take your friends to lunch there

Amusements.

ORPHEUM

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee Dec. 2
Matinee Every Day Except Monday

Exceptional Attractions.

THE FOUR LUKENS; Bellman and Moore; Kochly Brothers; Dillon Brothers; TROVOLLO; The Musical Avolos; Miss Lina Pantzer; Orpheum Motion Pictures, and Last Week of Charles F. Semon.

PRICES—10c, 25c, 50c. Down town Box Office at Donlon's Drug Store, Fillmore and Sutter Sts. Phone, West, 6,000.

CHUTES AND ZOO—Open daily from 10 a. m. till midnight. Admission 10c; Children 5c.

RACING!

RACING!

NEW CALIFORNIA
JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND TRACK

Six or more Races each Week Day

RAIN OR SHINE

Races start at 1:40 P. M. sharp

For Special Trains stopping at the Track take the S. P. Ferry, foot of Market Street, leaves at 12, thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:30 p. m. No smoking in last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts. Returning, trains leave the track after fifth and last races.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec. THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

Eagleson & Co.

The Old Reliable

Men's Furnishers

Holiday Goods

Neckdress
Shirts, Gloves
Underwear
Night Robes
Bath Robes
Etc.

1453 FILLMORE

Two Doors from O'Farrell Street

LIBRARIANS TAKE NOTICE
PROBATE SALE

Full set (except 1856) of SAN FRANCISCO DIRECTORIES for sale, including Kimball's for 1850, Parker's for 1852-53, LeCount and Strong's for 1854, Langley's for 1858 to 1895 (both inclusive), and Crocker-Langley's from 1896 to 1904 (both inclusive); in good condition.

Address: JOSEPH HUTCHINSON
1117 Mission Street San Francisco, Cal.

VANITY FAIR.

In a lecture in London a few days ago, G. Bernard Shaw, the cynical playwright, gave his idea of the ladders of life.

"The middle classes," he said, "are in a constant state of fluctuation. We may take, for instance, the case of a duke possessing an income of £50,000 a year with several sons. Although the sons are brought up in the habits of people with £50,000 a year, they can not all have that income, and when they are grown up they are left with a miserable income of a thousand or twelve hundred pounds a year, on which no gentleman can be expected to live properly.

"He gets into difficulties and probably his son becomes a professional man who also lives above his income, and gets into difficulties and has to make his son a clerk.

"The clerk, finding that instead of £50,000 a year, he had to live on a pound a week, probably determines that no son of his shall be a clerk but a working man. The workman probably has a son who becomes a beggar, and thus we have the constant tendency to go down from duke to beggar.

"But we have, on the other hand, an upward tendency. The beggar, after his hard experience and knowing the value of industry, makes his son a workman. The workman may save money, and his son becomes a small tradesman. The small tradesman saving money, his son becomes a man of business. Then his son in turn goes to one of the learned professions, and that son may marry the youngest daughter of a duke.

"Thus we see people come down the ladder by living above their income, and climbing up by living inside their income and marrying above their station."

"They say that charity begins at home," said a Providence professional woman to a group of friends the other day, as reported in the Providence Journal, "and I've about concluded that it sometimes does, even when you don't intend it to.

"It was this way. Back in the spring, when the San Francisco earthquake happened and there was a call for aid of all sorts, I got pretty sympathetic for the sufferers. Just then a winter street gown I had sent to the cleaners came home, looking almost as good as new, and I decided to send it to one of the committees that were gathering clothing, etc., to send on to California. I put new bindings on where they were needed, and made a very presentable gown of it before I sent it in.

"The other day I stopped at my hair dresser's, and sat reading in the waiting room for my turn. Presently the door opened, and in walked my street gown. Honestly, I almost fainted with surprise. I didn't know the person who was in it, but I knew the gown the instant I set eyes on it. There wasn't a chance for a mistake, though at first I hoped there might be. There were several little marks that couldn't fail me, one of them being just the suspicion of a burned spot, where I dropped a lighted match on the skirt.

"I asked the hair dresser later who the woman was, but couldn't learn anything about her except that she was thought to live here. Of course, maybe she was one of the San Francisco victims who has come here to live, and if that's the case I apologize for various suspicions I've had. After this when I've got anything to give away I'll give it away myself to the particular individual who wants it. No more relief committees for mine."

The ethics of motoring are discussed in one of the chapters of a "Lady of Rome," the latest novel of F. Marion Crawford. Speaking of the young Romans of today, he says: "They are not particularly good, it is true, but then they are very far from bad. They have less time for flirting and general mischief than their fathers had, because it now seems to be necessary to spend many hours of each day in a high-speed motor car, which is not conducive to the growth and blooming of the passion flower. It does not promote the development of the intelligence, either, but that is a secondary consideration with people who need never know that they have minds. Morally, motoring is probably a good rather than an evil. People who live in constant danger of their lives are usually much more honest and fearless than those who dawdle through an existence of uneventful safety. The soldier in time of peace was the butt and laughing stock of the ancients in the comedies of Plautus and Terence, and of the Greeks, whom those playwrights copied or adapted, but no such contemptuous use has ever been made of the sailor, whose life is in danger half a dozen times in every year."

Mrs. Mackay will be the guest of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Clarence Mackay in New York, until after Christmas. Then it is her plan to go to Paris for the remainder of the winter. Her sister, Countess Telfener, will make the voyage with her. The two ladies have just returned from Paris, where Mrs. Mackay gave the orders for redecorating and refurnishing the apartments she will occupy early in the new year. Her guests for the greater part of the time will be her granddaughter, Comtesse Jules Bonvouloir, who was Princess Bianca Colonna, and the count.

It may not be generally known, but Mrs. Mackay has been studying music—"just to fill in time," she says; but her real purpose is better defined by Countess Telfener, who explains that her sister "wishes to be able to criticise with greater freedom the new operatic works one must listen to in Paris."

A journalist in Berlin has been exercising his ingenuity in attempts to explain the meaning of the letter S which appears with more or less frequency after the names of German military officers in the records kept at the ministry of war and in the Kaiser's military cabinet. He has come to the following conclusions: One S after an officer's name means that this particular officer sauft (drinks); SS means that he sauft stark (drinks hard); SSS denotes that he sauft sehr stark (drinks very hard); SSSS means that he sauft sehr stark schnapps (drinks very hard schnapps); finally, SSSSS means that the schnapps is schlecht (bad). Any officer with five S's is summarily dismissed by the Kaiser.

MOST ANCIENT AND GLORIOUS
OF CORDIALS

MOST ANCIENT AND GLORIOUS
OF CORDIALS

LIQUEUR Pères Chartreux

—GREEN AND YELLOW—

This famous cordial, now made at Tarragona, Spain, was for centuries distilled by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) at the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, France, and known throughout the world as Chartreuse. The above cut represents the bottle and label employed in the putting up of the article since the monks' expulsion from France, and it is now known as Liqueur Pères Chartreux (the Monks, however, still retain the right to use the old bottle and label as well), distilled by the same order of monks, who have securely guarded the secret of its manufacture for hundreds of years, and who alone possess a knowledge of the elements of this delicious nectar.

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Sole Agents for United States.

GAS HEATERS

$1.50

Six feet of TUBING FREE
AT YOUR SERVICE

THE GAS COMPANY

500 Haight Street 421 Presidio Ave.
1260 Ninth Ave. 2965 16th St.

If you are going East use the California Limited

The Finest Train Across the Continent

Palace Pullmans, Observation, Library,
Smoking, Dining Cars.

Every luxury will be found on this train.

See the
SANTA FE AGENT

FERRY BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS

Spencerian Pens are ink savers, time savers, temper savers.
They never balk or splatter the ink.
If you buy a dozen pens, or a box, you'll find each pen perfect and even of point.
There's a Spencerian Pen made that will just suit your style of writing.
We will send you a sample card of 12 pens, different patterns, upon receipt of 6 cents in postage.
SPENCERIAN PEN CO., 349 Broadway New York.

INVESTMENTS

This company is always prepared and pleased to advise with persons who are seeking sound and profitable investments. On application to our

Bond Department

H. J. MAGINNITY, Bond Officer prospective investors will be furnished with particulars of high-grade securities, bearing liberal interest and non-taxable.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Company
San Francisco, U. S. A.

Mutual Savings Bank

710 Market St., Opposite Third
SAN FRANCISCO

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,000,000
Paid-up Capital	300,000
Surplus	320,000
Assets	10,000,000

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities.

Officers—President, James D. Phelan; First Vice-President, S. G. Murphy; Second Vice-President, J. A. Hooper; Secretary and Cashier, Geo. A. Stor. Asst. Secretary and Asst. Cashier, C. B. Hobson; Attorney, Frank J. Sullivan.
Directors—James D. Phelan, John A. Hooper, Frank J. Sullivan, Jas. M. McDonald, S. G. Murphy, James Moffitt, Robt. McElroy, Charles Holbrook, Rudolph Spreckels.

French American Bank

Union Trust Building (Third Floor)

Ready to accommodate its customers and do a general banking business. We will collect on insurance policies for those wishing our services.

THE FRENCH SAVINGS BANK
occupies offices in the same building.

Officers—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legalle, Vice-President; Leon Bocqueraz, Vice-President.
Directors—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Berrot, E. J. DeSablé, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, J. Mack, Geo. Belaney, Leon Kaufman.

Our Branch Bank is Now Open
at No. 810 Van Ness Avenue, near Eddy St.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus	$ 2,552,719.
Capital actually paid up in cash	1,000,000.
Deposits, June 30, 1906	38,476,520.

F. Tillmann, Jr., President; Daniel Meyer, First Vice-President; Emil Rohde, Second Vice-President; A. H. R. Schmidt, Cashier; Wm. Herrmann, Asst. Cashier; Geo. Tournay, Secretary; A. H. Muller, Asst. Secretary; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

Board of Directors:

F. Tillmann, Jr., Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, I. N. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, N. Ohlandt, J. W. V. Bergen, E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

Helping the Homeless

The Continental Building and Loan Association

Has helped build up several interior towns and cities of California but for the next few years its funds will be used to help restore the burned homes of San Francisco.

Dr. Washington Dodge, President
Gavin McNab, Attorney.
Wm. Corbin, Sec'y and Gen'l Mgr.

Office: Corner Market and Church Streets

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

"Listen!" said the man of middle age. He was bending over the palmist, whispering excitedly in her ear.

"Listen!" he said again. "My wife is coming to you this afternoon to have her fortune told and if you want to make some money on the side—"

He laid a bank note on the stuffed owl's head.

"Tell her on no account to buy a motor car, because you read in her palm that she is doomed to be killed in an automobile accident."

When Mr. Justice Maule was on the bench a bullying counsel was one day browbeating an elderly female witness in a case before him. Having badgered her into a state of utter speechlessness the lawyer appealed to the judge to make her answer his questions.

"Why do you not answer, madam?" asked the judge.

"Because, my lord, he scares me so," replied the trembling woman.

"So does he me, ma'am," said the judge.

Many have heard of the humor of famous Lord Ellenborough. One day a young member of the bar rose to address the court in a grave criminal case. "My unfortunate client—," he began, repeated two or three times, and then stopped short.

"Go on, go on!" said Ellenborough. So far the court is with you."

One day during an important criminal trial a surgeon was called to the stand, and then asked his profession he said, "I employ myself as a physician."

"But," said Ellenborough, "does anyone else employ you as a physician?"

There was a sophomore who was very hard up in the early fall, and pawned all his good clothes. A little before Thanksgiving he got a big check from home, and accordingly, like a wise sophomore, reentered his wardrobe. When he got home for the holidays, his mother said she would unpack his trunk for him. The first thing his mother took out of the trunk was an overcoat, and on it was pinned, he saw to his horror, the pawnbroker's ticket that he had forgotten to remove. Hastily grabbing the ticket, he said:

"Hello! They must have forgotten to take this off at the Smith dance, when I left it in the cloakroom."

A moment later his mother took out his evening trousers. They also had a ticket on them.

"Why, Frank," she said, "surely you didn't leave these in the cloakroom, too; did you?"

O'Connor, the Irish politician, began an after-dinner speech in Philadelphia in this way:

"I must confess that I dread to make after-dinner speeches. At the most sumptuous dinners, even at such a dinner as this one, if I know that at the end I must make a speech, I am nervous, I have no appetite, and find little to admire in the best efforts of the chef. In truth, gentlemen, I can readily imagine Daniel, if he was at all of my mind leaving a sigh of relief as the lions drew near to devour him—heaving a sigh of relief and murmuring:

"Well, if there's any after-dinner speaking to be done on this occasion, at least it won't be done by me."

A philanthropic Japanese rode through the streets one scorching day, when a beggar-woman accosted him, holding a baby in her arms.

"Kind sir," she said, "will you not give a copper coin to your servant, who is in dire need?"

"Yes, gladly," said the gentleman, and he took out a handful of small change.

But just as he was about to give this to the woman, he chanced to look closely at the baby, and behold, it was only a great doll.

"Why," he cried, "that baby is a fraud, a sham."

"Yes, your honor," said the woman humbly. "It was so hot I left the real one home today."

Joseph M. Huston, the architect of the magnificent Pennsylvania Capitol at Harrisburg, was asked not long ago to draw up plans and estimates for a church in a western town. Mr. Huston complied. His plans were beautiful. The cost of the building was $75,000. The committee in the West wrote that they liked the plans very much. But the price, they said, was high. Couldn't Mr. Huston let them have a church like that for $10,000? Mr. Huston wrote back: "Say $2.50 more, gentlemen, and let us throw you in a nice spire."

The Kirke La Shelle Company is defendant in an action commenced by Dorothy Dorr Dam, administratrix of Harry J. W. Dam, deceased, in the United States Circuit Court, in New York. The claim is made that the defendant caused a dramatization to be made of the story of "The Transmogrification of Don," published in 1901, into the defendant's successful play, "The Heir to the Hoorah." The defendant asserts that the plaintiff has no such exclusive dramatic rights, and also that the plot is that of "A Texas Steer," "The Mother-in-Law," "East Lynne," and other plays.

ARGONAUTS FOR OUR FILES.

We would be glad to have any of the following numbers from any disconnected copies of the Argonaut that our readers have and are willing to part with.

Numbers Required to Complete an Argonaut File.

- Volume VI, 1880—Nos. 6, 13, 15, 17, 18, 22, 24, 26.
- Volume VII, 1880—Nos. 3, 8, 14, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24.
- Volume VIII, 1881—Nos. 2, 11, 18, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26.
- Volume IX, 1881—Nos. 1, 3, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.
- Volumes X and XI, 1882—All numbers.
- Volumes XII and XIII, 1883—All numbers.
- Volumes XIV and XV, 1884—All numbers.
- Volume XVI, 1885—All numbers.
- Volume XVII, 1885—Nos. 1, 2.
- Volume XX, 1887—Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.
- Volume XXI, 1887—Nos. 11, 13, 22, 23.
- Volume XXII, 1888—Nos. 3, 7, 11, 18, 25.
- Volume XXIII, 1888—No. 3.
- Volume XXIV, 1889—No. 6.
- Volume XXV, 1889—Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19.
- Volume XXVI, 1890—Nos. 21, 23.
- Volume XXVII, 1890—No. 1.
- Volume XXVIII, 1891—Nos. 1, 7.
- Volume XXIX, 1891—Nos. 8, 12, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22.
- Volume XXX, 1892—Nos. 6, 20, 22, 24.
- Volume XXXI, 1892—Nos. 2, 3, 7.
- Volume XXXII, 1893—No. 16.

Specially adapted to Asthmatics; always relieves, generally cures. Brooks' Homoeopathic Cough Syrup; 25c, at druggists.

A. Hirschman

Jeweler and Silversmith. Now at 1641 Van Ness Avenue, bet. California and Sacramento Streets.

"It is strange how some people cry at weddings." "Yes, but you've probably noticed that it's never the single people who cry." "Well?" "Well, it is only the married ones who realize the tragedy of it."—Houston Post.

Drs. Barkan & Sewall

Specialists for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat are now located at 1700 California street, corner Van Ness Avenue.

"Goggles and Gasoline," the new comedy from the German, announced by Klaw & Erlanger for early production in the East, seems to be well fitted in title for "the road."

Korn The Hatter

Now at 926 Van Ness Avenue Near Ellis Street.

Dr. Patton, former president of Princeton university, recently delivered a sermon in New York city, his subject being "Faith." He spoke of the blind faith of the client who puts himself at the mercy of a lawyer in preparing an action for trial and of the confidence of the sick in trusting themselves to the physician. "Here is a case of blind faith," said the clergyman. "The doctor writes out a prescription. Oftener than not you can not read it, you don't know what it is. He tells you to take it. 'Yours is not to reason why, yours but to do and die.'" A more or less audible smile rippled over the congregation and the orator flushed for a moment on realizing the double import of his quotation.

W. & J. SLOANE & CO.

are now showing complete lines of

Carpets, Rugs, Furniture, Office Desks, Upholstery, Draperies, Linoleums, Window Shades, Etc.

at their new store at the corner of

VAN NESS AVENUE AND SUTTER STREET

Nordhoff Grill

1545 Pine Street
Below Van Ness Ave.

Finest and Largest Dining Room in the City

Merchants' Lunch 11 A. M.
to 2 P. M. Daily

Ladies' Afternoon Teas
and Dinner Parties a Specialty

SUNSET ROUTE

2 TRAINS
DAILY

SAN FRANCISCO — NEW ORLEANS

Making Close Connections at New Orleans with Trains for Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Washington, and New York.

Also

With Southern Pacific Steamship Line New Orleans to New York.

Dining and Observation Service
Tourist and Pullman Sleepers

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The engagement is announced of Miss Helen Luntington of New York to Mr. Arthur Rotch of Boston.

The engagement is announced of Miss Elizabeth Keith Pond, daughter of Commander Charles F. Pond, U. S. N., and Mrs. Pond, of Mare Island, to Assistant Surgeon Francis Marion Shook, U. S. N. No date is arranged for the wedding.

The engagement is announced of Miss Lucy Mighell, granddaughter of Mrs. Kershaw, to Mr. Thomas J. Churchill.

It is announced that the engagement of Miss Margaret Newhall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Mayo Newhall, to Mr. Frank S. Houghteling, of Chicago, no longer exists.

It is announced that the marriage of Miss Eleanor Kerfoot Sowers, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Z. T. Sowers, to Major Samuel L. Faison, U. S. A., will take place in Washington, D. C., on Wednesday, December 19th. Major Faison and his bride will arrive in San Francisco on December 31st and will sail January 5th for the Philippines.

Invitations have been received from Mr. James Wilkins Goad, to the marriage of his daughter, Miss Hattie Belle Goad, to Mr. Charles A. de St. Maurice, which will take place in Trinity Methodist Church, Colusa, at nine o'clock, Wednesday morning, December 5th. The ceremony will be followed by a wedding breakfast. Miss Goad is a cousin of Mrs. C. Osgood Hooker and Mrs. Charles K. McIntosh and is well known in local society circles.

The wedding of Miss Mary Marriner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Marriner, to Lieutenant Wallace Bertholf, U. S. N., took place on Wednesday afternoon, at the home of the bride's parents in Berkeley. The ceremony was celebrated at three o'clock by the Rev. J. H. Lathrop. Miss Roberta Deal was the maid of honor and Lieutenant Zoghaum, U. S. N., the best man. Only the most intimate friends were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hopkins entertain at a tea on Saturday afternoon, December 1st, from 4 until 6 o'clock, at which time they will introduce their daughter, Miss Lydia Hopkins.

Mrs. Gaston Ashe and Miss Constance Borrowe entertained at tea last Saturday afternoon, in Sausalito, in honor of Miss Mary Small, who is to be married soon to Lieutenant Arthur Fisher, U. S. A.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin entertained at a luncheon on Sunday last at the Burlingame Club, in honor of Rear-Admiral William T. Swinhurne, U. S. N., and Mrs. Swinhurne. The others present were: Major McKinstry, U. S. A., and Mrs. McKinstry, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Carolan, Miss Katrina Page Brown, Miss Jennie Crocker, Mr. Thomas Sherwin, Mr. Horace Pillsbury, and Mr. Henry T. Scott.

Comptroller of Currency and Mrs. Ridgley entertained at a luncheon recently at the Chevy Chase Club, Washington, D. C., in honor of Mrs. Flora Clement and Captain Sydney A. Cloman, U. S. A. Those present were besides the guests of honor, the British Ambassador, Sir Mortimer Durand; Capt. and Mrs. Hehblinghaus, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Addison, Mrs. Laurence Benet, Mrs. Frank L. Denning, Miss Katherine Williams, General Buchanan, Arthur Hay, and Mills Thompson.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard entertained at a dinner on Thursday of last week in honor of Miss Mary Keeney. Those present were: Miss Jennie Crocker, Miss Jeanette von Schroeder, Miss Margaret Hyde-Smith, Miss Virginia Jolliffe, Miss Katrina Page Brown, Miss Genevieve Harvey, Mr. Thornwell Mullally, Mr. Wilberforce Williams, Mr. Wharton Thurston, Mr. E. M. Greenway, Mr. Knox Maddox, and Mr. Joseph Tohin.

Mr. and Mrs. Silas Palmer entertained at a dinner on Friday evening of last week, their guests being Miss Mary Josselyn, Miss Lucie King, Mr. Knox Maddox, Mr. Howard Veeder, and Mr. William B. Sanborn.

Mr. and Mrs. M. H. de Young entertained at a dinner on Friday evening of last week, in honor of Miss Anita Harvey and Mr. Oscar Cooper, the entire party going later to Mr. Edward M. Greenway's birthday dance. Those present besides the guests of honor were Mrs. Lansing O. Kellogg, Miss Genevieve Harvey, Miss Helen de Young, Miss Constance de Young, Miss Alice Hager, Miss Jeanette von Schroeder, Miss Edith Simpson, Mr. Charles de Young, Mr. Harry Stetson, Mr. Ward Barron, Mr. Stewart Lowery, Mr. Harry Scott, Mr. Baldwin Wood, and Mr. Joseph Tobin.

A skating club has been organized by the residents of Menlo Park, to meet at the rink in Palo Alto. The patronesses are Mrs. Edward Pringle, Mrs. Augustus Taylor, Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Mrs. James Flood, Mrs. Charles Josselyn, and Mrs. Frederick W. McNear. The first meeting was held on Monday last and others will take place each week.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a resume of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians.

Mr. Douglas Dick and Miss Isabel Dick arrived last week from Scotland, and are guests of Mrs. Abby Parrott at San Mateo.

Mrs. Bowman H. McCalla and Miss Stella McCalla have returned to their home in Santa Barbara.

Mrs. George Page and Miss Leslie Page, who have been travelling in Europe for over a year, have recently gone to Vevey, Switzerland, for a stay of some weeks.

Mrs. Edgar F. Preston has gone to Santa Barbara on an automobile trip.

Mrs. L. L. Baker, Miss Helen Baker, and Miss Dorothy Baker arrived on Saturday last from the East and Europe.

Mrs. Charles McIntosh Keeney has returned from a visit to New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Dean left last week for New York.

Mr. William H. Crocker has returned from a brief trip East. Mrs. Crocker remained in New York for the Horse Show season.

Mrs. Alfred B. Ford has returned to her home in San Mateo after a visit to Lady Waterlow in England.

Miss Maude O'Connor will leave shortly for Chicago where she will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Kruttschnitt for a time before going abroad.

Mr. Clarence Folliis left recently for New York where he will spend the winter.

Mrs. J. de Barth Shorh is spending a few weeks in Southern California as the guest of her sister, Mrs. George S. Patton.

Miss Virginia Vassault has returned from Paris, but will probably return soon to Europe.

Miss Gladys Meek, of Haywards, has recently been the guest of Mrs. Wakefield Baker and Miss Helen Thomas.

Mrs. A. J. Bryant has leased her apartment on Green Street and is spending a few weeks in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Helen Hecht and Mr. and Mrs. Irvin J. Wiel are visiting friends and relatives in Baltimore before going to New York.

Mr. Hubert Howe Bancroft has been up from his home at Concord, Contra Costa County, to visit for a few days in San Jose and San Francisco.

Mrs. Ansel Easton, Miss Adeline Mills, and Miss Josephine Polhemus were in India when last heard from. They propose to spend the winter in Southern Italy, and reach London next May.

Mrs. Isaac L. Requa, of Piedmont, is visiting Mrs. George Pullman in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Davis, Miss Edna Davis, and Miss Sidney Davis went down last week to Santa Barbara, where they will spend the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. John Landers and Miss Pearl Landers have returned to town after spending the summer in Belvedere.

Among the many who are spending Thanksgiving week at Del Monte are Mr. and Mrs. George Heazelton, of San Rafael. Mrs. Philip W. H. Lansdale is visiting Mrs. Thomas Breeze at Del Monte.

Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Stanford, of Warm Springs, are at Del Monte this week.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Vogler, of Montana, and Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Scott, recently came from Tonopah, in a touring car.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell, of Menlo Park, and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sexton made up an automobile party to Del Monte during the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip E. Bowles, Jr., of Oakland, arrived last week at Del Monte.

Among San Francisco visitors at Del Monte are: Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Hunter, Mr. E. D. Norwood, Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Hindes, Mr. E. A. Phelps, Mr. P. H. Burks, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Johnson, Miss Louisa Fisher, Miss Elizabeth Gallagher, Miss Rosalie Tarrant, Mrs. Pauline Westerfeld, Miss Lalla Westerfeld, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Royce, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. F. Snyder, Mr. Rudolf Andrear, and Capt. Wilbur, of the U. S. A.

Glasses are said to have been invented by Alessandro di Spina in the 13th century.

The glasses which we make are examples of the perfection which has been reached in their manufacture.

HIRSCH & KAISER,
1757 Fillmore Street

Optica

The Little Palace Hotel

corner of

Post and Leavenworth Sts.

IS

OPEN

The same excellence in cuisine and service that obtained in the Old Palace is duplicated in the new "Little Palace."

JOHN C. KIRKPATRICK
Manager

JOHN G. ILS & CO.

Manufacturers

High Grade French Ranges

Kitchen and Bakery Outfits

624 WASHINGTON STREET
San Francisco, Cal.

For Sale at a Great Bargain

Seagoing Gasoline Schooner Yacht LILIAN. Most Magnificent Pleasure Boat on the Pacific Coast. Owner being unable to use same for year or more prefers to sell rather than have yacht remain idle. Dining room and galley on deck; four large state rooms, saloon and bathroom below deck all finished in mahogany. Yacht is completely found in every respect, and everything is in excellent condition. Further particulars of FRANK N. TANDY, P. O. Box 2684, San Francisco.

Nathan-Dohrmann Co.

ART DEPARTMENT—LAMP DEPARTMENT

SILVER WARE DEPARTMENT—CUT GLASS DEPARTMENT

STERLING NOVELTIES—ENGLISH AND FRENCH CHINA

ELECTRIC FIGURES—DESK AND SMOKING SETS

Our usual Novelties for Holiday Gifts

Make your selection now and have them stored until the day you desire delivery made

1520-1550 VAN NESS AVENUE

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Healthful cream of tartar, derived solely from grapes, refined to absolute purity, is the active principle of every pound of Royal Baking Powder.

Hence it is that Royal Baking Powder renders the food remarkable both for its fine flavor and healthfulness.

No alum, no phosphate—which are the principal elements of the so-called cheap baking powders and which are derived from bones, rock and sulphuric acid.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

ONLY GOOD KNIT GOODS

For Men and Women

UNDERWEAR

SWEATERS

HOSIERY

BATH ROBES

GOLF JACKETS

LOUNGING ROBES

ALL MODERATELY PRICED

Gantner & Mattern Co.
KNITTERS

Corner Van Ness Ave. and California St.

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Colonel John A. Lundeen, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., who returned the first of the week from two months' leave of absence, has assumed command of the Presidio Post and the Artillery District of San Francisco, vice Colonel Charles Morris, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., relieved. Colonel Lundeen has been appointed a member of the army retiring board, vice General John J. Pershing, U. S. A., relieved.

Colonel John L. Clem, Assistant Quartermaster-General, U. S. A., Chief Quartermaster of the Department of California, has been granted one month's leave of absence and left on Tuesday for San Antonio, Texas, where Mrs. Clem now is. On his return to the Presidio of San Francisco, he will be accompanied by Mrs. Clem and their infant daughter.

Colonel John L. Chamberlain, U. S. A., has been relieved from duty in the office of Inspector-General, in Washington, D. C., and ordered to proceed to San Francisco, for duty as Inspector-General of the Pacific Division.

Colonel Alfred Reynolds, Twenty-second Infantry, U. S. A., Fort McDowell, has been granted one month's leave of absence.

Lieutenant-Colonel John J. Crittenden, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, has been upon his own application, retired from active service, after thirty years of service, his retirement to take place on January 31st.

Lieutenant-Colonel George M. Dunn, Judge Advocate, U. S. A., who has been staying in Washington, D. C., left that city on November 25th, and is expected to arrive here very shortly.

Major Carroll A. Devol, Quartermaster's Department, U. S. A., has reported in Washington, D. C., for duty as a member of the General Staff. It is understood that Major Devol will be made Quartermaster-General of the army, probably about the first of the year, vice Brigadier-General Charles F. Humphrey, U. S. A., who will voluntarily retire.

Major James B. Erwin, Inspector-General, U. S. A., is relieved from temporary duty at headquarters, Philippines Division, and is assigned to inspection duty in the Department of Visayas. Major Erwin will proceed to Iloilo, Panay, and take station.

Mrs. Haan, who has been staying for the past few months with Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Coxhead, in San Mateo, has gone to join her husband, Capt. W. G. Haan, Military Secretary in Cuba.

Major Parker N. West, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., who has been detailed as assistant to the Inspector-General, has arrived in Washington, D. C., from Fort Walla Walla, and is at the Army and Navy Club.

Captain Samuel F. Dallam, Paymaster, U. S. A., is assigned to duty in the office of the Chief Paymaster, headquarters, Department of California, with station in San Francisco.

Captain Eugene T. Wilson, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed to Schenectady, New York, to perform certain duties under instructions from the president of the Army War College, and upon completion will return to his proper station.

Captain John J. Bradley, Fourteenth Infantry, U. S. A., Vancouver Barracks, arrived here last week, reporting upon his arrival to Colonel John L. Clem, Assistant Quartermaster-General, U. S. A., for duty in connection with the settlement of accounts pertaining to the recent maneuvers held at American Lake, Camp Tacoma, Washington. Captain Bradley returned to Vancouver Barracks on Friday evening of last week.

Captain Jacques de L. Lafitte, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted two months leave of absence and is in this city on a visit.

Captain John B. Schoeffel, Tenth Infantry, U. S. A., has had his two months leave of absence extended two months.

Captain Frederick F. Russell, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., is relieved from duty at the Presidio of San Francisco and ordered to proceed to Washington, D. C., to report in person to the Surgeon-General of the army for temporary duty.

Captain Abraham P. Buffington, Paymaster, U. S. A., on duty at department headquarters, has been granted ten days leave of absence.

Captain Harry P. Wilbur, Artillery Corps, Fort Rosecrans, San Diego, has been ordered upon recommendation of the Judge Advocate of the Department of California, to proceed to the Presidio of Monterey, at such time as his services may be required, as witness before a general court martial in the case of Sergeant Coral Hamilton, Twenty-eighth Company, Coast Artillery.

Captain John C. Beaumont, U. S. M. C., Lieutenant Edward S. Yates, U. S. M. C., and Lieutenant Frederic Kensel, U. S.

M. C., are detached from the Marine Barracks, Navy Yard, Mare Island, and ordered to duty with a detachment of marines for service in the Philippines, sailing from San Francisco on December 5th. Captain Beaumont will be in command of the detachment.

Lieutenant Z. E. Briggs, U. S. N., is ordered detached from the Wisconsin and to the Philadelphia.

Lieutenant Oliver P. M. Hazzard, Second Cavalry, U. S. A., on duty as Acting-Judge Advocate, of the Department of California, during the absence of Colonel George M. Dunn, U. S. A., is ordered to further duty as Acting-Chief Quartermaster of the Department during the absence of Colonel John L. Clem, U. S. A.

Lieutenant William B. Graham, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., now on leave in Washington, D. C., has been relieved, at his own request, from his detail as captain, Twenty-seventh Company, Philippine Scouts, and will proceed to join his regiment.

Lieutenant Junius C. Gregory, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., has been ordered to proceed from San Francisco to the Presidio of Monterey for temporary duty.

Lieutenant Charles B. Stone, Sixteenth Infantry, U. S. A., has been relieved from treatment at the Army General Hospital, Fort Bayard, New Mexico, and upon the expiration of his present leave of absence, will proceed to Fort Bliss, Texas, and report in person to the commanding officer, for duty at that post.

Lieutenant John M. Craig, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., has had Galt, California, designated as his station, after November 26th, instead of San Jose, California, while on duty in connection with the "Progressive Military Map of the United States."

Lieutenant Charles B. Moore, Twenty-second Infantry, U. S. A., Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, is granted one month's leave of absence on surgeon's certificate of disability.

Lieutenant Charles L. Foster, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., is ordered relieved from duty in the army transport service, at San Francisco, and to report in person to the commanding general of the Department of California, for assignment to duty at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, relieving Captain William R. Eastman, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A.; Captain Eastman, upon being relieved, will proceed to Fort Lawson, Washington, for duty.

Lieutenant B. H. Camden, U. S. R. C. S., has been detached from the Grant and ordered to the McCulloch.

Surgeon G. L. Angeny, U. S. N., is detached from the naval hospital, naval home, Philadelphia, Pa., and ordered to the naval station, Guam, sailing from this city on December 5th.

Past Assistant Surgeon A. J. Geiger, U. S. N., is ordered detached from the naval hospital, Mare Island, and ordered to the naval station, Guam, sailing from San Francisco on December 5th.

Assistant Surgeon F. H. Brooks, U. S. N., is ordered to duty at the naval hospital, Mare Island.

A general court martial has been appointed to meet at the Presidio of San Francisco, consisting of the following officers: Major John W. Ruckman, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Captain Wright Smith, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Captain Solomon Avery, Jr., Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Captain James R. Pourie, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Lieutenant Edward A. Stuart, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Lieutenant William E. De Sombre, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Lieutenant Guy B. G. Hanna, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.; Lieutenant Frank L. Beals, Sixteenth Infantry, U. S. A.; Lieutenant Benjamin B. McCroskey, Twenty-second Infantry, U. S. A., and Lieutenant John O'Neil, Artillery Corps U. S. A., Judge Advocate.

That nearly all of Chicago's skyscrapers are out of plumb and that their walls have begun "leaning" since their erection, was stated by Building Commissioner Bartzan after he had made an investigation. He said that the walls of some of the buildings were fourteen inches out of plumb, but that they were nowise in a dangerous condition. He says that the peculiar formation of the soil of Chicago has brought about this condition and that it will necessitate the building department inspecting all of the downtown skyscrapers every two months.

Count Boni Castellane need not fear poverty. A New York cafe proprietor has cabled the French unfortunate an offer of 50,000 francs a year to take charge of his waiters, and American vaudeville magnates are willing to pay him $1000 a week for an exhibition of swordsmanship on the stage.

The 125 residents of Los Angeles who have been making a three months' trip to the Philippines and the Orient, arrived at home last week without serious mishap, though they were delayed three days in Seattle by the floods.

Bohemian Club Annals.

Mr. S. O. Howes, Galveston, Texas, writes to the Argonaut that he would sell Vol. I of the "Annals of the Bohemian Club" for $20. Any one wishing to purchase this volume can apply directly to Mr. Howes.

The White House

Jewelry Department

Large Assortment of Parisian Novelties
Suitable for Holiday Gifts

Fancy Belts
Elastic and Leather with Steel and Gold Mountings

Plain and Jeweled Combs and Barrettes in novel designs

Necklaces,
Dog Collars and Lavallieres in unique artistic patterns

Magnificent Selection of Buckles and Clasps

Fancy Hat Pins
in great variety from 25c up

Gold, Silver and Gun Metal
Mesh Bags and Vanity Cases

Large assortment of Marabout and Ostrich Boas and Muffs in all colors

Raphael Weill & Co., Inc.
N. W. Corner Van Ness Ave. and Pine St.

Notice of Assessment

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that at a meeting of the Directors held on the 7th day of November, 1906, an assessment of three hundred (300) dollars per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately to Louis Weinmann, the Secretary of said corporation, at its office No. 401 California Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the tenth day of December, 1906, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on the twenty-sixth day of December, 1906, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

LOUIS WEINMANN,
Secretary of the
FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY.
Office: 401 California St., San Francisco, California.

"La Questa"
A LUSCIOUS OLD RED WINE

For Sale by
L. M. WALTER Corner California and Devisadero Sts
and
McCAW BROS. - - - 401 Devisadero
Producer:
E. H. Rixford
Kohl Building, San Francisco

HOTEL RAFAEL
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

50 minutes from San Francisco. Complete Change of Climate
TIBURON OR SAUSALITO FERRY
All modern Conveniences

R. V. HALTON Proprietor

HOTEL COLLINGWOOD
35th St., between 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY

New fire-proof hotel, located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.
Positively exclusive. Service a la carte.

A. Zellerbach & Sons
PAPER DEALERS

Now Located at
Volkman Bldg., 416 Jackson St., San Francisco
Branch: 514 Eleventh St., Oakland

FULL SUPPLY OF ALL KINDS OF PAPER

FOR YOUR WEDDING AND CHRISTMAS GIFTS

—GO TO—

GUMP'S

CHINA, PICTURES, MARBLES, GLASSWARE, ELECTROLIERS, FRAMING, BRONZES, DESK SETS, SMOKING SETS

1645 California Street
JUST BELOW VAN NESS
Tel. Franklin 624

Open Evenings from Dec. 1st until Christmas

Newman and Levinson.

INCORPORATED

Van Ness Avenue and Sutter Streets - - San Francisco

INVITE YOUR INSPECTION OF AN UNRIVALLED COLLECTION OF

Holiday, Anniversary Yuletide Gifts

now on exhibition in their establishment. By means of Merchandise and Glove Certificates, available in any department, two perplexing problems are solved — two questions answered:

“WHAT SHALL I GIVE?”
“WHAT SIZE DOES SHE WEAR?”

Purchase a Merchandise Certificate or a Glove Certificate
AND YOUR HOLIDAY DIFFICULTIES ARE OVER

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

Ready for business at 1165 O'FARRELL ST., bet. Franklin and Gough

Pianos Tuned, Repaired, Moved and Stored

SOHMER-CECILIAN PLAYER-PIANOS

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Castleton—"About how much does it cost to run a steam yacht?" Highblower—"If it makes any difference to you, you can't afford it."—Judge.

"I believe old Grabbittson would give his soul for money." "Yes, and he'd probably get more than it was worth, no matter how small the amount happened to be."—Chicago Record Herald.

"Do you believe in marrying for love alone?" he asked. "Oh, yes," replied the bright little lady who had just returned from South Dakota: "I always do."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Bobbie, I hope you didn't tell your mother that you saw me kissing sister last night." "Nope, I didn't have to. Sis waked us all up at midnight when you went home and told it herself."—Minneapolis Journal.

"Do you approve of spelling reform?" "Yes," answered the adaptable citizen. "The only objection is that it consumes more time remembering to spell the new way than it does to put in the extra letters."—Washington Star.

"No; it's only eleven o'clock. I can't go home at this hour." "But you are all fagged out, and there's nothing much going on." "You forget that I have a wife to consider. I don't care to risk giving her a nervous shock."—Courier Journal.

Chuggerton—"How's your new chauffeur?" Carr—"Had to fire him—he used to be a motorman." Chuggerton—"Too reckless, eh?" Carr—"Reckless, nothing; why I couldn't break him of the habit of slowing up at crossings."—Puck.

She—"I can't bear actors; they're so conceited!" He—"But I'm an actor, and you don't think I'm conceited, do you?" She (seeking to recover herself)—"Oh, of course not! I mean the big ones; the little ones don't count."—Sacred Heart Review.

Wigg—"The last I saw of you Youngpop was talking you to death about his baby. How did you get rid of him?" Wagg—"Oh, some fellow came along who had just bought an automobile, so I introduced them and made my escape."—Philadelphia Record.

Small Girl (with smaller brother)—"How much is it to Shepherd's Bush?" Box-Office Clerk—"Tuppence. I've told you that five times already." Small Girl—"Yes, I know; but little Willy likes to see you come to the window; it reminds him of the zoo."—Sketch.

"Mr Merchant," said the new clerk, preparing to ask for more pay, "I think I understand the business pretty well now, and—" "Yes?" interrupted his employer. "Well, keep at it four or five years. Perhaps you'll understand it then as well as you think you do now."—Philadelphia Press.

One of the maxims on the wall of the Kaiser's bedroom in his shooting-box at Rominton is said to be: "The world is so large and man is so small that it is not possible for a man to be the center of the world." His Imperial Majesty is becoming absent-minded. He forgets himself.—London Globe.

The papers relate it as a remarkable fact that Frank Bookwalter, of Springfield, O., returned to his childhood's home after an absence of sixty-five years and found a dime that he had lost in a crack in the front steps when he was five years old.

There is nothing remarkable in this story. Mr. Bookwalter is described as a millionaire. After sixty-five years' experience in picking up money, it would have been a wonder if he had not found his boyhood's dime, especially as he knew where it was.

If the lost dime had been Mr. Rockefeller's, he would have found a dollar. Mr. Rockefeller's money breeds.—Life.

An Atchison man and his wife sat down last night and talked it over. "We have been facing it for six weeks," he said, "and dread of doing what lies before us is not making it any easier. We have it to do; let us begin now." His wife agreed with him and departed sadly for the cellar. When she returned she carried a jar of preserved fruit. They had decided to begin to eat their way through 187 quarts of peaches, 47 quarts of strawberries, 76 quarts of cherries, and 43 quarts of plums put up last summer.—Atchison Globe.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

Not on E Z Street.
Young Fissick's got a shingle out
Proclaiming him M. D.;
But from A. M. to late P. M.
His office is M. T.—Catholic Times.

Today.
Lives of some great men remind us
That we will, if we are wise,
Leave our modesty behind us
And get out and advertise.—Judge.

Accepted.
There once was a student at Vassar,
For learning nobody could pass her,
But when shipping clerk Harry
Just hinted at marry
She broke all the records at "Yassir!"

Necessary Improvement.
Into the water-well
That the plumbers built her,
Our Aunt Eliza fell!—
Now we've bought a filter.
—Technical World.

Two Counts.
Girls who marry for a title,
Ere their fortune's lost,
Ought to count the cost and reckon
What the Count will cost.
—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Come Back.
My Bonnie lies under the auto;
My Bonnie swears under the car.
Please send to the garage for some one
For 'tis lonesome up here where I am.
—Washington Star.

An Irishman was very ill, and his recovery was doubted.
"Have you forgiven all your enemies, Pat?" the minister asked.
"Sure an' oi have; all excipt Dan O'Hagan," Pat replied.
"But you must forgive all if you hope to reach paradise," the minister continued.
"Well, all right, thin," said Pat, after reflecting for some time. "but if oi get well, oi'll break his head!"

A pretty American duchess sat in her drawing-room, and her little son, the marquis, stood beside her in lace and velvet.
A peer, entering, bowed over the duchess's white hand, and then said to the little marquis:
"Will you give me a kiss, my dear?"
The boy, shrinking behind his mother, said bashfully:
"Mamma will give you one."

MOTHERS BE SURE AND USE "MRS. WINSLOW'S Soothing Syrup" for your children while teething.

"Oh! dear," sighed Miss Mudd, "I do wish I knew of an effective way to preserve my complexion." "If you keep the box in a cool place it will be all right, won't it?"—Philadelphia Press.

Something that concerns the Baby. When teething begins, every mother should have on hand a packet of Steedman's Soothing Powders.

The ardent Frenchman looked tenderly at the fair young mistress of his soul. "Je t'adore!" he murmured. "Maybe I'd better," she returned. "You can't never tell who's listening in this yere house."—Baltimore American.

NEXT SUNDAY GO TO BYRON HOT SPRINGS.—You can leave Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, returning Sunday afternoon, or Monday morning. Two days at the Springs, and the entire expense of the trip is $7.50. This includes the railway fare, transportation from railway station to hotel and return, a delightful ride of two and a half miles, accommodations at the beautiful Byron Hot Springs Hotel, and use of the wonderful mineral baths, all for $7.50. Try it.

TO LEASE

3 Story and Basement Brick Building, California St., between Drumm and Davis; Lot 45x70. Building Completed December 15, 1906.

Will build on Union Square 7 Story and Basement Building.

Particulars at Office.

GUY T. WAYMAN

519 MARKET ST.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Co.

OF HARTFORD

ESTABLISHED 1850

Cash Capital.....$1,000,000.00

Cash Assets.....5,340,136.94

Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,414,921.16

Benjamin J. Smith

Manager Pacific Department:

525 THIRTEENTH ST., OAKLAND

San Francisco Office:

2310 CALIFORNIA STREET

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

Have Plenty of Every Kind of

PAPER

Phone Temporary 1273

473 TO 475 SIXTH STREET

San Francisco

For YOUR

BREAKFAST

GERMEA

At All Grocers

The Johnson-Locke Mercantile Co.

AGENTS

714 Broadway, Oakland

Mt. Tamalpais Railway

Via Sausalito Ferry—Foot of Market St.

Lv. San Francisco

W'kday Sun.

8:25 A

9:50 A 9:50 A

11:00 A

1:45 P

1:45 P

Saturday

4:35 P 3:15 P

Legal Holidays, Sunday Time

Leave Tamalpais

Sun. W'kday

10:40 A 1:05 P

1:05 P

2:30 P 4:30 P

4:30 P Saturday

5:45 P 9:30 P

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Thos. Cook & Son

Now Located

1168 Broadway, Oakland

And North Nave, Ferry Building

San Francisco

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Stoves and Ranges

ADAPTED FOR BURNING: COAL, WOOD, GAS, GASOLINE AND OIL

REFRIGERATORS

Complete Kitchen Outfits for Hotels, Restaurants, Clubs and Households

CORNER POLK AND TURK STS.

PHONE EMERGENCY 427

Steamship Lines

AMERICAN LINE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—SOUTHAMPTON

St. Paul.....Dec. 8 | St. Louis.....Dec. 2

New York.....Dec. 15 | Philadelphia.....Dec. 2

Philadelphia—Queenstown—Liverpool

Noordland.....Dec. 1 | Haverford.....Dec. 2

Merion.....Dec. 15

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT LINE

NEW YORK—LONDON DIRECT

Minnetonka.....Dec. 8 | Minnehaha.....Dec. 2

Minneapolis.....Dec. 22 | Mesaba.....Jan.

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE

NEW YORK—ROTTERDAM, VIA BOULOGNE

Sailings Wednesdays as per sailing list.

Statendam Dec. 5, 10 a m | Ryndam, Jan. 23, noon

Ryodam Dec. 19, 7 a m | Potsdam, Feb. 6, 10 a m

Potsdam Jan. 2, 6 a m | Statendam Feb. 20, 10 a m

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP—PARIS

Vaderland.....Dec. 5 | Zeeland.....Dec. 2

Finland.....Dec. 12 | Kroonland.....Jan.

WHITE STAR LINE

NEW YORK—QUEENSTOWN—LIVERPOOL

Oceanic.....Dec. 5 | Majestic.....Dec. 2

Celtic.....Dec. 12 | Oceanic.....Jan.

Baltic.....Dec. 19 | Teutonia.....Jan.

Boston—Queenstown—Liverpool.

Arabia.....Dec. 6 | Cymric.....Dec. 1

To the Mediterranean and Egypt, via Azores

FROM NEW YORK

Cretic.....Dec. 6, noon, Mar. 30

Cedric.....Jan. 5, Feb. 16

Celtic.....Jan. 19, March 2 | 21,000 Tons

FROM BOSTON

Canopic.....Jan. 12, 8:30 a m, Feb. 2

Republic.....Feb. 2, 1 p m, March 1

G. U. KOEPPPEL, Pass. Agt. Pacific Coast.

Room 207 Monadnock Bldg., San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

ORIENTAL S. S. Co. have opened their general offices at 217-221 Brannan Street

SAN FRANCISCO

S. S. America Maru (Calls at Manila) Nov. 30, 1906

S. S. Nippon Maru (Calls at Manila) Dec. 28, 1906

S. S. Hong Kong Maru

Steamers will leave wharf, corner First and Brannan streets 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Higo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamers for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, corner First and Brannan Sts. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

AUTOMOBILES

Runabouts = = = = $700

Reo Touring Cars = $1400

Immediate Delivery

J. W. LEAVITT & CO.

441 Golden Gate Ave.

The Argonaut.

Vol. LIX. No. 1552.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 8, 1906.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10; payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscription to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 1711 San Pablo Avenue, Oakland. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications intended for the Editorial Department thus: "Jerome A. Hart, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal." To insure consideration, manuscript submitted for publication, must be typewritten.

Address all communications intended for the Business Department thus: "The Argonaut Publishing Company, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal."

Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breams Buildings, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear, and by the Denison News Company on its boats and trains.

Published at San Francisco, California. Temporary Office, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, California.

THIRTIETH YEAR

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

JEROME A. HART - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Canada's Postoffice and Our Own—Administration Trial Balloons—Seaports, Docks, Wharves, Piers—Street Car Arbitration—Life Insurance Elections—Negro Churches and the President—The Anti-Graft Crusade—Oriental Labor	281-284
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR	284
NOVELISTS AND CAVE DWELLERS: Parallel Passages in the Stories by Stanley Waterloo and Jack London	285
POLITICO-PERSONAL	285
A VENTURE WITH DEATH: How one of Three Remained Behind. By W. O. O'Neill	286
GOLDEN DAYS OF ENGLISH OPERA: W. S. Gilbert's Seventieth Anniversary and the Savoy Revival—"Pinafore" Memories	287
OLD FAVORITES: "What My Lover Said," by Homer Greene; "The Immortal Mind," by Lord Byron	287
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All Over the World	288
LITERARY NOTES: New Publications—Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip	288-291
TO EDMUND GOSSE: By Austin Dobson	291
STAGE GOSSIP: Dramatic Notes—Musical Notes	291
VANITY FAIR: A Runaway at the Horse Show—Mrs. Donnelly's Disappointment—Will the Coming Horsewoman Ride Astride?—Cah Horse Wins a Blue Ribbon—The Kaiser at the Automobile Show—Beauty at the Matinee	292
STORYETTES: English-French and French-English—How He Paid a Grudge—Timely Examination—Peggy in Glasgow—The Polite Hindoo's Excuse—Mrs. Lantry's Lawyer's Bill—A Scotch Dilemma—Convincing by Telephone—Salvini as Othello—A Cumulative Sentence—A Woman Who Kept a Secret	293
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	294-295
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS	296
THE TUNEFUL LIAR	296

Canada's Postoffice and Our Own.

From the tone of occasional letters reaching the Argonaut office, it is apparent that some of our readers have become imbued with the official or postoffice idea that there is a "subsidy" paid by the Postoffice Department to the newspaper publishers. So industriously has this false impression been disseminated that it is gradually coming to be believed. The Postoffice Department piteously makes moan that it can not carry printed matter at a cent a pound, except at a heavy loss. Yet the express companies carry printed matter for publishers at a lower rate than the Postoffice Department, and no one has ever accused the express companies of being in business for altruistic reasons. It is preposterous to suppose that they carry printed matter at a loss. Why then does the Postoffice Department lose money on the same matter?

Let us make another comparison. This is not a comparison between a government service and a private corporation service. This is a comparison between two government services. The Dominion of Canada, like our own country, stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, more than three thousand miles. From our furthest northern frontier it extends two thousand miles further toward the North Pole. If the citizens of this country believe that Canada does not freely circulate the mails through the vast and sparsely settled country to the north and northwest of the great lakes, they are mistaken. Canada not only circulates the mails freely there, but she circulates them cheaply and much more expeditiously than our own Postoffice Department does in our more thickly settled country. Yet we have a population of something like eighty millions, while the Dominion of Canada has only five millions.

Does the Dominion Postoffice circulate printed matter for publishers as "second-class matter" as our Department does here? Yes, it does, but its highest rate is exactly one-half the lowest rate charged by our Postoffice Department. It is a notable fact that the Canadian Postoffice circulates second-class newspaper matter throughout that vast and sparsely settled country at half a cent a pound. Within a smaller and more thickly settled zone the Canadian Postoffice circulates newspaper matter at a quarter of a cent a pound, and a large majority of what it circulates is at this lower rate.

It may be asked what is the deficit in Canada at this very moderate rate, when we, charging twice and four times as much, have an alleged deficit of over fifteen million dollars? The answer is that in Canada there is no deficit at all. On the contrary, the last report to hand shows that the Canadian Postoffice was operated at a profit, having a surplus of $490,844 for the year. Yet Canada is only a colony and not an independent nation; it is a mere off-shoot of one of the effete despotisms of the Old World, and not a great and free Republic like our own; it is a country with only five millions of population, while we have eighty. Yet the Canadian Postoffice circulates mail through its vast territory at a profit, while our Postoffice Department, with every advantage, circulates mails at a heavy loss. In order to make good this loss, our Postoffice Department is now trying to make newspaper publishers pay from eight to sixteen times as much per pound as the Canadian publishers pay.

It may be thought that the Canadian service is not so good as ours. Error—it is much better. It could hardly, by the way, be as bad. Our Postoffice officials are still talking with terror of the "enormous deficit" threatened by the rural free delivery while at the same time their absurd bureaucratic administration and their red-tape and sealing-wax transportation plans are strangling that admirable system. They have forbidden the rural carriers to deliver express packages to the rural population. In this way they have deprived the dwellers along the countryside of the advantages of close and constant communication not only with the postoffice but with the village shops. Furthermore, they have made it impossible for the government to operate rural free delivery except at a loss. Likewise they have thus rendered it impossible to pay the rural carriers a living salary, and they are further driving out of it competent men, because they can make more money in other callings.

The Canadian Postoffice, on the other hand, is not only keeping up its rural free delivery, but is extending it. Canadian mail matter now goes to postoffices inside the Arctic Circle, the mail being made up at Winnipeg, Manitoba. From there to Edmonton the mail goes by rail, thence north, first in wagons, then on horseback, and then by dog-train the mail is carried to dwellers along the southern shores of the Arctic seas. This service can be used by citizens of the United States, but it was not devised by or for them; Uncle Sam's Postoffice Department can hardly carry the mail within its own confines. It is the work of the "blue noses," or "Kanucks," as we are wont contemptuously to call them. They are the ones who get rural free delivery inside the Arctic Circle. Canada today is delivering mail at points three thousand miles north of the northern boundary of the United States.

What is the reason the Canadian Postoffice Department can do so much work, so much cheaper work, so much more rapid work, and so much more thorough work than the United States Postoffice Department? We know of no reason other than the individual equation. We think there must be better men running the Canadian Postoffice Department. There is no other explanation possible. This country is the most prosperous and one of the most populous on the globe. Its inhabitants are of a very high order of education, extremely prone to reading and writing, and large users of the mails. Out in the northwestern territory of Canada there are only a few settlers, traders, and Indians. Yet this sparsely settled country, vast in territory, rich in natural resources, but poor in money, is able to do that which this Croesus of nations can not do. What is the reason? The reason must be, men.

Canada has so poor an opinion of our Postoffice Department that she has just refused to receive second-class mail from that Department on the ground that it is "not properly classified." If she can carry such matter at a profit and we can not, she is probably right.

Those people who are fond of advocating government ownership of railways in the United States should contemplate the history, workings, and operations of the United States Postoffice Department. Most of the work of the postoffice is done through the railways. If our postoffice officials can perform such miracles of incompetency and incapacity in conducting an infinitesimal part of railway operation, to wit, transporting the mails, what in Heaven's name would they do if they had to run it all?

Administration Trial Balloons.

The French have a phrase for diplomatic reports set afloat to try the public temper—"trial balloons." It would seem as if Secretary Root had adopted the plan if not the phrase. Immediately after the President's return from Panama the Associated Press despatches told us that Secretary Metcalf reported to the President that California is unanimous in opposition to admitting the Japanese to the public schools; that she has the right under the law to regulate her public schools; that the Constitution upholds her right to formulate school laws of her own. Hence, the dispatches told us the Administration was disposed to recede from its Japanophile attitude, and to concede the right of California to educate her own children in her own way.

But, after the lapse of a couple of days, very different despatches came from Washington. These tell us that "Secretary Root has brought to light decisions in favor of the contention being made by himself and the President which have long been forgotten." We venture to remark that in not many months they will be forgotten again. The Washington dispatch goes on: "In the interests of the Japanese we are about to reverse the doctrine of a century of diplomacy. Rights which the States have successfully asserted are to be swept aside and the federal government is to become supreme, even as to the regulation of laws by school boards and other local bodies."

We presume that the federal government will also decide such grave questions as to the brand of spelling-book to use; whether the Bible shall be read in the public schools; if so, whether the King James, the Douay, or the revised version shall be used; whether pupils shall be punished corporally or by "moral suasion"; whether "lamming" with a ruler on his palm or "whaling" him with a rawhide on his dome is the preferable mode of punishment for Tom Sawyer; whether "playing hookey" is against the Constitution of the United States; whether pupils shall be vaccinated or not; if so, with what kind of virus, human or bovine; whether making boys who throw spit-balls at the teacher sit with the girls is a "cruel and inhuman punishment." In short, a vast vista of educational, theological, pathological, pathogenic, and humanitarian regulation opens up before President Roosevelt and Secretary Root after they have exhausted the Constitutional sides of the California school law controversy.

Seaports, Docks, Wharves, Piers.

The following comment on a remark in our article of November 24 on San Francisco's harbor facilities comes to hand:

SANTA CRUZ, NOV. 27, 1906.

EDITOR ARGONAUT: In your article on lack of shipping facilities in San Francisco, you refer to several cities as being provided with splendid docks, etc. You mention Brighton, England, as having good docks. As Brighton is on a roadstead, situated as is Santa Cruz, I do not see how it could have docks. There is a chain pier at which steamers for the French ports used to stop for passengers. I have not been there for about sixty years, and possibly I may be mistaken, but I never heard of Brighton being a shipping port.

You are usually very correct in your statements, but it occurs to me that you are in error this time.

Yours truly,
ED. MARTIN.

We regret to be obliged to differ with our correspondent. We distinctly did not "mention Brighton, England, as having good docks." On the contrary, in the preceding sentence we spoke of other cities as having "docks built of steel or stone," but said that Brighton had "wharves supported on massive steel piers." Let us quote the two sentences from our article verbatim:

"There is scarcely a city in the Old World where one does not see docks and piers built of stone or steel. Even at such small ports as Brighton or Dover on the English coast the wharves are supported on massive steel piers."

It is always necessary in discussion first to establish definitions. One of the reasons why men and women disagree so radically in discussion is because they have different meanings for the same words. Phillip Gilbert Hamerton, who spent much of his life in France remarked that the French people scarcely understood the English and the English people rarely understood the French. But he philosophically added that this was not strange, for his father and mother, who were both English had lived together for fifty years, and had never understood one another at all. If men and women were to agree on the meanings of such words as "love," "affection," "honor," "honesty," "loyalty," "truth," "falsehood," "deceit," "white lies," etc., they could doubtless agree in their discussions on ethical questions. But they rarely do. Another Anglo-Franco philosopher, Paul Blouet—who unlike Hamerton heeded not his parents' conjugal discussions when confronted with his own—remarked that "the insane asylums are full of men who once had the fatal habit of arguing with their wives."

Let us, therefore, before discussing, define. Let us establish definitions. The word "dock" in England does not mean the same as the word "dock" in America, at least in Western America. In Europe it usually means a basin in which ships lie for taking or discharging cargo. In America—in Western America, at least—it sometimes means a wharf or pier, although in strict construction here the word "dock" is generally applied to a structure in which ships can be made high and dry for working purposes. The "Century Dictionary" says:

"Dock—strictly an enclosed water space in which the ship floats while being loaded or unloaded, as the space between two wharves or piers; by extension, any space or structure in or upon which a ship may be berthed or held for loading, unloading, repairing, or safe keeping."

"Graving-dock—a dry dock; so-called because used in graving or cleaning the bottom of ships."

"Wharf—a platform of timber, stone, or other material built on a support at the margin of a harbor or navigable stream, in order that vessels may be moored alongside, as for loading or unloading, or while at rest. A wharf may be parallel with and contiguous to the margin, when it is more especially called a quay; or it may project away from it, with openings underneath for the flow of water when it is distinctly called a pier."

This latter is the sort of structure to which we referred when we said: "At Brighton the wharves are supported on massive steel piers." Now let us see what the "Century" says of this latter word:

"Pier—1. A mole or jetty carried out into the sea to serve as an embankment to protect vessels from the open sea, to form a harbor, etc."

This form of pier in the United States—at least in Western America—is frequently if not usually called a "sea-wall." The "Century Dictionary" goes on:

"Pier—2. A projecting quay, wharf, or other landing place."

"3. One of the supports of the spans of a bridge or any structure of similar character."

Definition number 3 is the sense in which we used the word pier. We did not mean and did not say that "At Brighton there are docks built of stone," but we did mean and did say that at Brighton there are "wharves supported on massive steel piers." Where words have different meanings, in different countries using the English language, it is difficult to express one's meaning always with precision. It is additionally difficult when the writer dictates much of his work, and much of it rather rapidly. But when thus checked up by our correspondent, we are glad to find, on referring to the article, that we meant exactly what we said and said exactly what we meant. Brighton and Dover were put in apposition to the great seaport cities, and were spoken of specifically as "small ports." That is what they are. In fact, it is only within a year or two that Dover has taken on airs of importance by being made a port of call for the great transatlantic liners from Bremen and Hamburg to New York and other western ports.

Our correspondent would doubtless find many changes in Brighton if it is sixty years since he has been there. But it is now not a great seaport and it never will be. It is possible to make seaports out of open roadsteads and it has more than once been done in Europe. Still, with all the work of nature and the handiwork of man, there will be found there no harbor that can compare with our magnificent San Francisco Bay, unless it be the harbor of Naples. The shallow indentation of the English Coast on which Brighton lies was never intended by nature for a seaport and never will be made so by the hand of man. Probably since our correspondent was there—" 'tis sixty years since"—he would find many changes on the land, but few out in the water. There are two great wharves or piers which have been built since he was there; the West Pier, completed some thirty years ago, and the Marine Palace Pier, completed only five or six years ago. They are not piers for shipping, but promenading. On these structures for the small sum of tuppence one may listen to the music of brass bands performing at the pier 'ed, while wealth and fashion promenade the pier, jostled by 'Arry, threading their way among noble, gentle, and common invalids, propelled in Bawth chairs. Since our correspondent was there a "lift" has been constructed which will take him to the top of the cliff for an 'apenny, while he may go along the esplanade for the sum of thruppence in an electric reyeleweye. These guide-booky indications are handed out to our correspondent for the reason only that 'tis sixty years since he was in Brighton and the writer was there something over a year ago. They are not inserted educationally, but merely to lend verisimilitude, as the Mikado said, to an otherwise bald and unpleasing narrative about docks.

It would scarcely have been possible for the writer to confuse Brighton with any of the great seaports, for when he landed there he was engaged in a cruise of the German Ocean, the English Channel, and the Irish Sea. It is not customary with travellers to cruise along the English Coast, although many cross and recross the bodies of water surrounding the right little tight little island. But in this cruise we went twice along the south coast of England from Ostend to Ryde, and back from Ryde to a point off Dover, and thence to Scheveningen in Holland. It was really a curious cruise. In sailing by night, not far off shore, we passed long lines of lights, city after city, town after town. They were like beads upon a string of fire. The street lamps of the cities were the beadlets, the villages were the little beads, and the cities were the biggest beads of all. There were long lines of moving light; these were the electric tram cars in motion. Nearly all of these lights, both still and moving, were electric lights. But the most powerful lights we saw were not electric, for every few miles we would see the curious rotating flash-lights of the light-towers. As we went along the coast of this densely populated land, we passed many seaport towns, small and large—Sandowne, Ryde, Cowes, Portsmouth, Bognor, Little Hampton, Hove, Brighton, New Haven, Seaford, Eastbourne, Pevensey, St. Leonards-on-Sea, Hastings, New Romney, Folkstone, Dover.

England's little cities do not stop with the line of the chalk cliffs on her southern shore. We touched also at Jersey and Guernsey, where we found a red soil unlike the chalk cliffs of Albion. The Channel Islands belong to France, geologically and geographically, although politically they are islands of England. These little islands have little harbors, but there are massive breakwaters of stone 25 to 30 feet thick. Nowhere in this great country of ours with its eighty millions of people can we see such magnificent harbor protections as may be seen in these little dots of islands with their handful of rural population. Behind their breakwaters one sees basin after basin of solid masonry wherein ships may lie at ease. The wasted, wave-worn, water-bored cliffs give one an idea of the mighty forces of nature in the storm-swept English Channel. Yet ships lie in safety in the midst of these stormy waters under the lee of these artificial harbors made by the hand of man. On these Channel Islands one may see lofty piers with various platforms two or three stories high to suit the various stages of the tide.

Leaving the Channel Islands we sailed southward to a point on the French Coast, and returning were rounding Finisterre on the northwest corner of France—on the corner of the Atlantic and the North Sea, so to speak. The writer woke suddenly in the middle of the night, dreaming he was crossing the American continent and that a Chicago lamp was shining in his Pullman window. But he was mistaken. A dazzling light was flashing rhythmically on the cabin wall:

FLASH! Dark!

FLASH! Dark!

FLASH! FLASH! FLASH!

Dark!

It was measured like a college yell, and so bright that one could read the time on a watch-dial. It was just midnight.

Looking out of the cabin window on the starboard side it was apparent that the flash came from the revolving lantern of a light-house, apparently miles away. It was the great light at Muesant, as the French term it, or Ushant, as appears in our geography books.

Thus, as we cruised around the stormy waters which girdle England, France, and Holland, we noted that at their seaports were erected massive and imperishable harbors, while their rocks and shoals were guarded with powerful lights. How fares the mariner for beacons on our American coast? On the Pacific but ill, as is testified by the number of good ships that every winter lay up their bones on some treacherous shore or rocky beach.

It was on this cruise, then, and on its last leg across the Channel, that we arrived at Brighton. We had entered that city before, by automobile, by steam railway, and by four-in-hand, but this was the first time we entered it by the water gate. Its open roadstead was so shallow and yet so stormy that our vessel could not come within a mile of the shore. Therefore we made our landing in small boats, climbing up the interminable steel stairs of one of these many-storied piers of which we spoke at now. And their height and their many stairs impressed the Brighton piers upon our memory.

Street Car Arbitration.

The questions at issue between the United Railroads of San Francisco and its employees are still being argued by the attorneys before an Arbitration Board. The proceedings are long drawn out, and bid fair to continue for some time yet. It will be remembered that Chief Justice Beatty of the Supreme Court consented to preside over this Arbitration Board. He did so with much hesitancy, his duties on the Supreme Bench consume practically all his time. However, he considered it his duty as a citizen to accept.

The attorneys before this Arbitration Board have not acted with as much consideration as some of its members. They have indulged in long-winded stump speeches and appeals to the gallery. These oratorical flights have been diversified by heated passages at arms between the attorneys. One of these last week Chief Justice Beatty objected to the forensic tilts as involving a "needless waste of time." Thereupon the attorneys vigorously attacked the Chief Justice, and defended their own wordiness. One of the Justice's colleagues sided with him, whereupon the third colleague interposed, informing the Board and the attorneys that the whole affair had already consumed seven minutes of valuable time, and suggested that they proceed to the business before them. Which was done.

Just before the afternoon meeting Justice Beatty explained to his colleagues and the attorneys that his "display of impatience in the morning was due to the fact that he had been greatly worried about other matters when he came to the meeting," and therefore begged that they would forgive him. The pardon sought was graciously accorded. It is only an old man, a jurist, one profoundly versed in the lore of the law, and in the ways of the world, who is wise and politic enough to apologize to a younger man. A young attorney who has been contemptuous to an old judge will always threaten to submit to jailing before he will apologize. Probably Justice Beatty, in addition to his innate courtesy and consideration, was actuated by a desire to expedite the course of the arbitration proceedings, even at the expense of his own feelings.

In a score of years from now the present way of adjusting industrial disputes will seem to us a survival of medieval barbarism. Yet we have not far away a modern method for our contemplation. Many new things have come out of Australia and New Zealand, lands which are not only recent geographically, but very modern anthropologically. And one of the new things which New Zealand stands for is State arbitration in industrial disputes. If employers and employees differ, their disputes are arbitrated by a little local board. If they can not agree, or if the losing party will not submit, the matter speedily passes into hands which make the arbitration compulsory.

It seems to work well in New Zealand. Why should it not work well here? We do not all of us believe that the United Railroads, as an artificial person, is a creature of unalloyed sweetness and light. Some of us believe that the employees of the United Railroads are far from being creatures either of sweetness or of light. Many of us believe that both are wrong in some of their contentions. There must be a middle ground. The United Railroads must be at fault in some of its attitudes toward its men. The carmen must be wrong in some of the things they do to the United Railroads. They certainly are in some of the things they do to the public. And the public will admit with a whoop that the United Railroads is wrong in many of the things that corporation does to the people.

Why then should the time of the busy men composing the present Board be taken up in this long and wordy controversy when there is no certainty of enforcing their decision when they render it? Why would it not be well for California seriously to consider the adoption of some system of arbitration patterned after that of New Zealand?

Life Insurance Elections.

California has been so much disturbed over her own fire insurance troubles that she has paid little attention to the life insurance disturbances in the East. The two great companies which were investigated with such damaging disclosures a number of months ago are about to hold elections. In the New York Life Company there are two tickets, the administration ticket, which stands for the present Board of Trustees, and an opposition ticket known as the International Policy-Holders' ticket. Richard Olney of Massachusetts is the chairman of the opposition committee. In the Mutual Life there are three tickets, the administration ticket, the International committee's ticket, and a fusion ticket. The latter is a combination of the administration and the committee tickets.

The administration office-holders are burdening the mails with bales of ballots and other printed matter designed to influence the policy holders. These bewildered persons are flying to the newspapers for advice. The wealth, influence, and power of the administration officials are so great that some of these journals hesitate. Among the truly good newspapers of the country is the Outlook. Some weeks ago it practically advised its Mutual Life and New York Life readers to vote the administration ticket. A number of readers thereupon wrote, expressing surprise at this advice. One of them says:

"I have held a policy in the New York Life for thirteen years, and up to within the last month have never voted for directors or been asked to vote. I hardly knew that I could vote. Within the last month I have received literature from various sources advising me how to vote. Now the Outlook comes out advising the support of the administration ticket, although it is pretty generally conceded that there has been a good deal of corruption in the past management of the New York Life Insurance Company."

Another correspondent disagrees with the Outlook, and says:

"Your advice assumes that the question is, Which is the better ticket? This is no longer true. The question is the broader one of whether the claim of 'mutuality'—on which the companies were founded and which they have always urged upon the insuring public—is real or a sham. You also say that something can be done another year. I say that unless the policy-holders succeed at this election, it is doubtful if they ever can. This is the only year when full boards are to be elected, and it should be remembered that the whole insurance story has not been told."

The two preceding letters are not highly commendatory of the Outlook's course. Here is an extract from a third, which is still more pointed:

"I do not like the position the Outlook has taken. Both these insurance companies have in the past been looted by their officers. Some of these guilty persons are still in the service of those companies. Is it at all strange that the policy-holders should wish these persons punished? Is it reasonable to ask that they be given further opportunity to be dishonest?"

The reply of the Outlook to these earnest correspondents is somewhat lame. It says:

"The administration in both the New York Life and the Mutual Life has been changed. The question is not between the old administration and the opposition ticket, but between a new, reformed administration and the opposition ticket. Under these circumstances, the Outlook advises the policy-holder to vote for the administration ticket. He can be sure that his property will be safe in their hands."

The correspondents allege that the "change in the administration amounts to little more than the withdrawal of a few smirched men." With the enormous wealth and the political and personal influence behind the "administration ticket" it is probable that it will win in both companies. We acquit the Outlook of any motives other than honest ones in its reply to its correspondents. But we admit to an uncomfortable feeling when we note how a journal of so high a character, when it has to choose in great crises, chooses nearly always on the side of wealth, power, and purely material things. Is there nothing more involved in this matter than the safety of invested money? And if there is no more involved, then is money as safe in the hands of crooked as of honest men?

Were we to advise, we would agree with Mr. O. W. Comstock, one of its correspondents, whom the Outlook mildly terms "militant." Mr. Comstock says:

"As both companies have in the past been looted by their officers, is it reasonable to ask that they be given further opportunity to be dishonest?"

Probably the advice of the Outlook is better than ours. It certainly would be better received by the money-changers in the temple. But we sincerely hope that, among the policy-holders of the New York Life and the Mutual Life, there will be found enough men who think as Mr. Comstock does to defeat the "administration ticket," and to elect the opposition. The men on the opposition ticket may not be such accomplished and skillful financiers as the men on the administration ticket, and therefore may not succeed in making quite so much for the company out of the public. But then, on the other hand, they may not make quite so much for themselves out of the policy holders.

Negro Churches and the President.

The most hopeless problem presented to the friends of the colored man would seem to be the colored man's brains. In all the hubbub which the President's dismissal of the colored troops has raised, and the hundreds of columns of more or less intemperate denunciation called forth by that topic, we have seen nothing so remarkable as the pronouncement issued at a union Thanksgiving service of four negro churches in New York City. In this fulmination we find the following:

"The Chief Magistrate of the Union covered himself with eternal shame and disgrace by his unjust, unkind, undemocratic, un-American, czarocratic, cold, cruel, drastic, and infamous orders against as brave, as heroic, as self-sacrificing a set of men as ever wore the blue or carried Old Glory to the scene of strife. We demand justice at the high court of earth and before the bar of Heaven. Let him of the square deal deal square, him of the fair play play fair. Every black man in the South ought to pack up his belongings and move to a doubtful State."

This is reminiscent of the famous judicial post-climax: "Prisoner at the bar, Divine Providence has endowed you with an immortal soul, instead of which you go about stealing hens."

When one reflects that this mess of mush is concocted by the leaders among the colored men, and represents not the average but the high-tide of African intellectuality, it gives one some idea of what the average must be. We admire the enthusiasm of those altruists who are endeavoring to elevate the black man intellectually, but we do not think much of their chances for success. God made the black man. He made him as he is. He made him with his physical, mental, and moral make-up as they are. If He made him that way, probably He wanted him that way. But whether He did or not, the white man has not yet improved much on God's handiwork when he made the black man. Furthermore, we may add, God made the black man for Africa, and it is our opinion that He intended him to live there. If any good has come by removing the black man from the place where God made him, we do not know what it is.

Oriental Labor.

Our Eastern contemporaries are in the habit of holding California up to shame as a dreadful example among the States of the American Union, because she does not want Oriental immigration. They are fond of implying that our standard of manners and morals is low, or we would appreciate the advantages offered to us by this kind of immigration. Yet we would like to point out to our supercilious contemporaries that in every Anglo-Saxon community the same feeling is sure to develop. Only the other day so small a band as twenty-two Chinese landed in England from Hongkong, on their way to Liverpool, where they had been engaged to work in laundries. They were promptly held up on technical grounds. They will probably be admitted, but the action of the officials is significant. It shows that the people of England are becoming apprehensive over the danger of Oriental immigration. Already the invasion of the South African colonies by Chinese laborers has been checked by the recent disclosures. Within their contract time these laborers will all be deported. In Australia the Chinese are excluded. In British Columbia their immigration is strictly restricted. In fact, so strong is the feeling against Oriental immigration in the Pacific Coast provinces of the Dominion of Canada, that it does not stop with the Chinese and Japanese, but is now extending to the Hindoos, who are migrating in large numbers into British Columbia and other English colonies. Although these emigrants are British subjects, the Canadians have no relish for their presence. This is not to be wondered at, as the average wage in their part of the British Empire is about four dollars a month. We suggest to those of our Eastern contemporaries who are so fond of abusing California for her lack of appreciation of Oriental immigration, that they extend their unsought advice to England and her colonies.

The Anti-Graft Crusade.

Mayor Schmitz returned from Europe last week, and was met at the State line by a deputy-sheriff with a warrant for his arrest. He had been indicted by the Grand Jury with Abraham Ruef, on the charge of "extortion," both the accused being charged with having obtained money from the French restaurant keepers of San Francisco under the threat of depriving them of their licenses. The mayor was naturally much chagrined and apparently much surprised when the news met him at New York. He declared in strong language his entire innocence, and stated that he would return to San Francisco without the loss of a single day to face his accusers. This he did. An impromptu reception of his friends and admirers was hastily arranged. But the train was many hours late, and he did not arrive in San Francisco until long past midnight. Even at that late hour he found assembled a crowd of several thousand in a hall awaiting his arrival. To them he made a grateful speech, thanking them for their confidence in him and assuring them that it was not misplaced. Speeches had been made before his arrival by several orators, some of whom bitterly attacked the leaders in the present graft crusade, and the editors of the daily papers. These journals have now for a number of weeks been filling whole pages with all manner of accusations against the mayor, the supervisors, and the members of the various municipal boards. But these charges have not seemed to materialize. About the only concrete charges so far are those of extortion against the mayor and his friend, Ruef. People generally do not believe that the mayor is guilty on this charge, and most of them seem to think that Ruef is justified in accepting money under those conditions as "attorney's fees." This belief speaks volumes for the estimate placed on the legal profession by the people of San Francisco. Another indictment is that against Supervisor Nicholas of accepting $26.05 as a bribe from a furniture house. Chief of Police Dinan has been indicted for conniving at the existence of houses of prostitution. This would seem to be the extent so far of the indictments preferred against municipal officers. It can not be gainsaid that the tone of the public has notably changed in this matter during the past two weeks. At first the people were inclined to believe the sweeping charges made by the daily newspapers, that all of the municipal officials were grafters. But now, in view of the failure of the dailies to "make good," the people are expressing cynical disbelief, not only in the truth of these charges, but in the motives of those who make them.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Incidents of Martial Law in San Francisco During the Fire.

EDITOR ARGONAUT: Among the misfortunes that befell the people of this city following the disaster of April 18, was the authority "to shoot to kill," vested in an unknown number of inexperienced, undisciplined, and callow youths, whose exploits, in uniform, have in a few instances become the subject of judicial inquiry. The substitution of the military for civil government, at this critical juncture, was doubtless a justifiable expedient, but the consequences of investing college cadets and kindred organizations with such authority at a time of great public danger and excitement are appalling. The exhibition of haste, lack of judgment, inexperience in emergencies, absence of the military discipline, a wanton desire to hurt some one on slight provocation, or no provocation at all, led to the sacrifice of life, innumerable hardships, and the unnecessary destruction of property. No well-trained soldier, for example, would have deliberately shot a man to death, in the act of flight, especially one who had committed no crime or even an offense that warranted arrest. The declaration of Garrett McEnery that such an act was done "at a time to suppress rioting with bullets" is manifestly sophistical and irrelevant. The essential character of a riot was conspicuously absent in this case; unrestrained behavior, uproar, and tumult of three or more persons in unlawful assembly, did not obtain. The alleged offender was done to death in the act of flight, the bullets entering by the back. The evidence shows the deed to have been unnecessary, wanton, cowardly, and brutal, and justifies the objection to investing tin holiday soldiers with authority to slaughter. Under this word "rioting" it may be observed that many thousands of old women have been arrested and put to expense, and sometimes in prison for a little intemperate use of their tongues.

As an example of warped judgment or asinine folly on the part of one of these "invincibles in peace and invisibles in war" the following may be cited as typical. A physician well known to the writer, residing on Taylor Street, had been engaged in the early part of April 18 assisting the injured at the Pavilion; while thus engaged he learned that his own house was menaced by the flames. He rushed to his office, and, unable to obtain carriage for his household effects, he hastily gathered an arm-full of valuable papers and books of record. A man in uniform entered and ordered him out; deaf to protest or explanation on the part of the doctor, he thrust him into the street at the point of his bayonet, not even allowing him to take his books or papers. The flames were two blocks away from the house at this time. Hundreds of people in the late fire had similar experiences resulting in irreparable losses.

On the evening of April 19 a person in uniform with a gun, inspired with the valor of a hundred Falstaffs and possibly by as many potations, entered the residence of Mr. J. B. Stetson, on Van Ness Avenue. His salutation in the venacular ran as follows: "Git out of here." "But," replied the proprietor, "this is my house, sir, and I see no reason to leave it; besides the fire is some distance away and I desire to remain here at present." "Git out of here," retorted this armed biped, "and don't talk back to me," and turning his bayonet to Mr. Stetson's breast he thrust him from his own house. The fire meanwhile had reached the block next to the Stetson residence, and the owner realized that the premises, being without a guardian, would inevitably be destroyed by the first flames that reached it. When therefore the uniformed promoter of public disaster had subsided into his own shadow, the heroic Mr. Stetson, drawing his hat over his face, rushed back and entered his house. Here he made a stand, and with the rude and inadequate appliances at hand, he fought the flames that repeatedly occurred here and there about the building; not alone this, but observing a fire just starting in a large residence west of his own, he induced a man, for a large reward, to climb to the roof and extinguish the flame that in a short time would have enveloped both houses. The arrest of the fire at this point by the efforts of Mr. Stetson, at the risk of his life from a idiotic soldier, and at this particular juncture, was the salvation of the Western Addition.

A venerable gentleman with his aged wife were joggling along in the environs of the city in a vehicle propelled by an equally antiquated quadruped, when from the roadway stepped a beardless youth in uniform holding a gun. This embryonic defender of his country, feeling the conjunction of an old man, an old woman, and a antiquated horse meant riot and a menace to the Commonwealth, cried "Halt!" in commanding tone, at the same moment advancing his bayonet to an uncomfortable proximity of the old gentleman's face. "What do you wish with me, and why do you stop me on the highway?" mildly protested the aged driver. "Don't talk back to me," replied the stripling, at the same moment cocking his gun. Fearing that this idiotic performance would end in murder the old gentleman held his peace, not daring to say word. After a few moments' inspection of the vehicle and its occupants they were commanded to move on.

This circumstance was narrated to the writer a few hours after its occurrence, and the narrator of the story is a well-known business man of this city.

Circumstances of the foregoing character, involving violence, a total disregard of personal rights, unnecessary killing, irreparable losses of valuable documents, the force abandonment of property by the owners, that could have been saved, and untold hardships inflicted upon the people by inexperienced and undisciplined soldiery of irregular organization, acting under the authority of martial law would fill a volume.

When, therefore, we are to have earthquake, fire, pestilence, and martial law let us humbly pray that the greatest of these may not be martial law.

W. S. THORNE, M. D.
San Francisco, December, 1906

The Negro Soldiers.

PASADENA, CAL., Dec. 2, 1906.
EDITOR ARGONAUT:—All comments on the President's action in discharging the three companies of negro troops that I have read in many journals, state or assume that the men of those companies were "dishonorably" discharged. This is a crucial mistake, and when the Argonaut makes it, as you appear to do in your resume of the matter of December 1, it is important to correct it.

There were formerly in the army two kinds of discharge, only, honorable and dishonorable. It is essentially correct to say that the latter was, and is still given only by sentence of a general court martial. The soldiers dub such a discharge a "bobtail," because the space reserved at the foot of the parchment for the offender's character was cut off, so that he could not forge one for himself.

In spite of great care on the part of recruiting officers, considerable number of men found, and still find their way into the army without the necessary qualifications for the service and are an expensive burden to it. Without being bad or vicious, these men are simply indifferent and useless. The genus is well known, for society everywhere is honeycombed with it from top to bottom.

To rid the service of them Congress passed a law a few years ago providing for their summary discharge by kind of negative dismissal called, perhaps unfortunately, "discharge without honor," i. e., not an honorable discharge, which had not been earned by faithful service, nor yet a dishonorable discharge which had not been incurred by criminal conduct.

The space for character remains, and the character given while generally unfavorable is rarely bad. "Good, but intemperate," "Fair," "Careless and indifferent," may serve as samples, and the words that appear on all discharges, "no objection to re-enlistment is known to exist," are invariably erased.

In the case of men dishonorably discharged or discharged "without honor," re-enlisting is practically impossible for if the applicant admits the kind of discharge he holds he is rejected. While if he conceals it he will almost invariably be tried for fraudulent enlistment, which is felony by law. Fraudulent enlistments are, as a rule, promptly discovered at the War Department by comparing the recruit's descriptive card with those on hand under the French system of measurements.

It is this kind of negative discharge that the men of the three companies received. In ordering it the President states in effect that he does not consider that the men are suitable for the service.

There is still another consideration which has been overlooked as far as I have noticed. If the three companies had the usual number of non-commissioned officers there must have been 40 or 50 of them, whose sworn duty it was to prevent disorder of every kind, or failing in that for any proper reason, to arrest or denounce offenders. These non-commissioned officers were about equally divided among the three companies, lived with the rest of the men in barracks, and each one of them was in charge of a squad or section, the members of which he knew intimately, and for whose going and coming he was responsible.

VINDEX.

[The Argonaut was scrupulous to use the phrase of the official order, "discharged without honor," in the heading and throughout its article where its own words were printed. As quotations were made from a number of sources, their phraseology was allowed to stand—in fact we had no right to change it.—En.]

London consumes only 90,000,000 gallons of water daily; New York uses 500,000,000 gallons.

NOVELISTS AND CAVE-DWELLERS.

Parallel Passages in the Stories by Stanley Waterloo and Jack London.

Surprising points of similarity are pointed out in the opening chapters of Jack London's latest serial story, "Before Adam," and Stanley Waterloo's tale of prehistoric man, "The Story of Ab," published nine years ago. When the critics noted the resemblance and Mr. Waterloo was asked his opinion of the matter, he said that Mr. London was evidently "a clever writer when he uses other people's brains." To this London replied with a letter in which he asserted to Waterloo that "the only resemblance is that both deal with the primitive world," and accused the author of the earlier story of unscientific treatment.

That there is something more than a similarity of time and characters in the stories is demonstrated by an examination. One of the episodes in the opening chapters of London's story is the escape of the primitive child and its mother from an attack of wild pigs. These paragraphs give the features of the incident:

I was in a little open space. Around me, on all sides, were bushes and fern-like growths, and overhead and all about were the trunks and branches of forest trees. Suddenly I heard a sound. I sat upright and listened. There was no movement. The little noises died down in my ears, and I sat as one petrified. The sound came closer. It was like the grunt of a pig. Then I began to hear the noises caused by the moving of a body through the brush. Next I saw the ferns agitated by the passage of a body. Then the ferns parted, and I saw gleaming eyes, a long out, and white tusks. It was a wild boar. Then I screamed. * * * As I say, I leaped to meet her (his mother), and on the instant she leaped straight up to the air, catching an overhanging branch with her hands. The next instant, with clashing tusks, the boar dove past underneath. He had recovered from his surprise and sprung forward, emitting a squeal that was almost rumbling. At any rate it was a call, for it was followed by the rushing of bodies through the ferns and brush from all directions. From every side wild hogs dashed into the open space—dozens of them. But my mother swung over the top of the thick limb, a dozen feet from the ground, and I still clinging on to her, we perched there in safety. She was very excited. She chattered and screamed, and scolded on at the bristling, tooth-gnashing circle that had gathered beneath. I, too, trembling, peered down at the angry beasts and did my best to imitate my mother's cries.

In the opening chapters of Waterloo's story is given an account of the escape of the cave-dwelling mother and child from the attack of a hyena. This is his description of the event:

The baby lying there among the beech leaves tired, finally, of its cooing and twig-snapping, and slept the sleep of dreamless early childhood. He slept happily and noiselessly, but when he at last awoke his demeanor showed a change. He had nothing to distract him, unless it might be the breaking of twigs again. He had no toys, and, being hungry, he began to yell. * * * Ab's mother came running lightly from the river bank toward where the youngster lay.

The woman made a dive into the little hollow and picked up the babe from its nest of leaves and tossed him up lightly. The woman tossed him aloft in her arms and cuddled him. Again, there came a sound to her ears which made her leap like some wilder creature of the forest up to a better vantage ground. She turned her head, and then—she should have seen the woman!

Very nearly above them swung down one of the branches of a great beech tree. The mother threw the child into the flow of her left arm and leaped upward a yard to catch the branch with her right hand. So she swung dangling. * * * Even as she swung herself into place upon the huge bough there came rushing across the space breath, snarling, smelling, and seeking, a brute as foul and dangerous as could be imagined for mother and son on the ground. It was of a dirty dun color, mottled and striped with a lighter but still dingy hue.

It had a black, hoggish nose, but there were fangs in its great jaws. It resembled a huge wolf, save as to its immensiveness and club countenance. It was one of the monster hyenas of the time, a beast which must have been a danger to the men then living as any animal except a cave tiger and the cave bear.

The beast scented immediately the prey above him and leaped upward ferociously and vainly. Was the woman beset thus holding herself aloft and with her child upon her arm, in a state of sickening anxiety? Hardly! She encircled the supporting branch the closer and laughed aloud. She even poked one bare foot down at the leaping beast, and waved her leg in provocation. At the same time there was no doubt that she was beset. Furthermore, she was hungry, and so she raised her voice, and sent out through the forest a strange call, a quavering minor wail, but something to be heard at a great distance.

London brings the mate of the tree-climbing mother on the scene immediately, and this is his picture of the man-animal:

At his appearance was no more unusual than the manner of his coming there to my mother and me as we perched on the angry wild pigs. He came through the trees, leaping from limb to limb and from tree to tree; and he came swiftly. * * * He was extremely angry. I remember the outburst of his protruding underlip as he glared down at the wild pigs. He snarled somewhat like a dog, and I remember that his eye-teeth were large like fangs, and that he impressed me tremendously.

His conduct served only the more to infuriate the pigs. He broke off twigs and small branches and flung them down upon our enemies. He even hung by one hand, tantalizingly just beyond reach, and mocked them as they gnashed their tusks with impotent rage. Not content with this, he broke off a stout branch, and, holding on with one hand and one foot, jabbed the infuriated beasts in the sides and whacked them across their noses.

Waterloo seems to have set the style for the opportune appearance of the male protector of his primitive mother and child. This is his introduction of the cave-man:

Then came, swinging easily from branch to branch along the tree tops, the father of Ab, a person who felt a natural and aggressive interest in what was going on. * * * The man sat himself upon the limb beside his wife and child. The two talked together in their clucking language for a moment or two, but few words were wasted. Words had not their present abundance in those days; action was everything. The man was hungry, the day must be ended promptly. He clambered easily up the tree and wrenched off a deadened limb at least two yards in length, then tumbling back again and passing his wife and child along the main branch, he swung down to where the leaping beast could almost reach him. The heavy club he carried gave him an advantage.

With a whistling sweep, as the hyena leaped upward in its ravenous folly, came this huge club crashing against the thick skull, a blow so fair and stark and strong that the stunned beast fell backward upon the ground, and then, down, lightly as any monkey, dropped the cave man. The huge stone axe went crashing into the brain of the quivering brute.

In the letter written by London to Waterloo, denying the charge of plagiarism, are these paragraphs:

If you return then to the proposition of similarity of treatment, let me tell you that your story and mine are as far apart as the poles in treatment, point of view, grip, etc. Why, I wrote my story as a reply to yours, because yours was unscientific. You crammed the evolution of a thousand generations into one generation—a thing at which I revolted from the time I first read your story. This situation strikes me as very funny. Here I fall out with you because of your unscientific treatment of the primitive world and therefore write a reply, and then you say that in six weeks I took all I knew from you.

You say that you worked fifteen long years. How long do you think I have been working in my study of science? Read my "Kempton-Wace Letters," my "Call of the Wild," my "War of the Classes" (especially these three), read everything I have written, and you will find that I am firmly grounded, not in Stanley Waterloo, but in the same scientific writers that Stanley Waterloo is grounded in.

Only two installments of London's story have appeared in the magazine that is publishing it in serial form. That the succeeding chapters will be closely scanned for further resemblances or distinguishing variations is certain. It is probable that many readers will be attracted to both stories by the discussion that has been stirred up, and that Waterloo and London will both have immediate profit from the wordy warfare.

James M. Dungan and wife, who have a ranch on Pit River, near Carbon, Shasta County, conceived the idea of irrigating and raising alfalfa. To get water for the purpose it was necessary to dig a tunnel into the hillside, a mile and a half from their farm, to strike a subterranean flow and convey it by a ditch to their land. The work was begun, and without any outside assistance husband and wife drove a tunnel 1350 feet in length. Two years were consumed in the work, says the Sacramento Bee. Much of that time Mrs. Dungan had to work alone in the tunnel, as Dungan was sick for several months and unable to work. Mrs. Dungan learned to use the drill as well as any miner. She drilled the holes, put in the charges of powder, set off the blasts, and then wheeled the dirt to the dump at the mouth of the tunnel.

Dr. Morrison, the well-known correspondent of the London Times at Peking, went to see the recent manoeuvres of the modernized Chinese army in the neighborhood of Chang-te-fu. He describes them as a repetition of the performance of last year—a set-piece carefully prepared long beforehand by a number of Japanese advisers. The general opinion formed by the military attaches was not, he says, unfavorable, though many years' work without official jobbery will be needed before the troops can compare with those of more advanced nations. The inefficiency of the officers is still conspicuous, and the field training of the men inadequate, but the material is good. Dr. Morrison hints pretty plainly that, without the Japanese to direct affairs, the contending armies would have been little better than a rabble.

Church attendance in rural districts, it is said, is greatly decreased by the prevailing "motor fever." The ever-increasing use of the automobile for Sunday touring on country roads banishes the churchgoer who drives with his family to church, for the horse is apt to take fright and life become thereby endangered.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

John I. McIlhenny, of Louisiana, a member of the Rough Rider regiment commanded by Colonel Roosevelt, has been appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission by the President. The vacancy occurred through the promotion of A. W. Cooley to be assistant Attorney-General of the Department of Justice.

The official canvass shows that Chicago did not elect as judge the negro who had unofficially a small plurality. Senator Tillman wasn't allowed to speak on the race question in Chicago, says the Portland Oregonian, but he was there long enough, apparently, to introduce a few South Carolina methods in counting election returns.

If 87 Democrats in different legislative districts in Delaware had voted their party ticket instead of supporting Republicans, a Democratic Legislature would have been elected, and, of course, would then have chosen a Democrat to go to the United States Senate. This is an interesting illustration of how much a few votes mean in Delaware.

President Roosevelt in his speech at Harrisburg, Pa., criticised the judges who have held against concentration of powers in the hands of the federal government. He doubtless forgets, remarks the Evansville (Ind.) Courier, how sharply he arraigned the Democrats as anarchists in 1896 when they expressed disapprobation of the decisions of the courts on the income-tax law.

This remark from the editorial columns of the San Francisco Chronicle is noted as one of numerous recent utterances showing a change in its regard for President Roosevelt: "It is shameful that admiration or fear of the prowess of the Japanese should make the American people forget their promise to use their good offices to assist the Koreans in maintaining their autonomy. Evidently the big stick is nothing but a stuffed club."

There is a good deal of talk in Oklahoma of electing an Indian as first United States Senator from that State. Three men are specially mentioned in connection with the place—Charles D. Carter, a young man of Ardmore, who owns 12,000 acres of fine land and a lot of town property; Chief McCurtain and Chief Pleasant Porter. McCurtain is a giant full-blood Choctaw. Porter is a Creek. Chief Porter is regarded as an orator of ability.

It is now declared that the friends of Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton University, have made sufficient progress in working up a movement to give him the Democratic nomination for President in 1908 that they hold meetings attended by prominent men of the party. The New Haven Union is authority for the statement, and its editor asserts that ex-senators, ex-representatives, ex-government officials, and ex-national committeemen, are concerned.

The California Legislature, which will assemble early next month, is overwhelmingly Republican. The Senate will be composed of 27 straight Republicans, six Democrats, one non-partisan, and six Republicans endorsed by the Union Labor party. The Assembly will consist of 57 straight Republicans, four Democrats, one Independence League man, and 18 who received the indorsement of the Union Labor party, they in the majority of instances having been nominated by the Republicans.

Congressman-elect William H. Jackson, of the First District, Maryland, is being made uncomfortable by an investigation that threatens to culminate in a contest in the House of Representatives. He admits spending a large amount of money in his campaign, but says he simply outbid his Democratic competitor and denies that he bought a vote. It is asserted by Mr. Jackson's opponents, and by many in his own party, that vote-buying has become a system in Maryland, particularly among the negro voters.

Interviewed in San Antonio, Tex., soon after the result of the election was known, William Randolph Hearst, late candidate for Governor of New York, and not long ago a candidate for mayor of Greater New York, said:

I will never again be a candidate. I shall continue to reside in New York and support the principles of reform which I have always stood for, but those principles are now sufficiently understood by the public for it to be no longer necessary for me to be a candidate. In the future it is to be my privilege to stand by the principles of government I have always advocated without being a candidate for office and on that account attacked with much bitterness.

A VENTURE WITH DEATH.

How One of Three Prospectors Remained Behind.

In Southeastern Arizona there is a tract of land large enough to make an Eastern State. It is known as the Apache Indian Reservation and it is there that the Indians of that tribe are kept under close military surveillance. Years ago the surveillance would occasionally relax, and then there would be an outbreak. A trail of blood would be marked out toward Mexico, and the vultures would come in crowds, as if from all over the West, to enjoy the banquet prepared for them in the dead, whose bodies would glisten when first killed with snowy whiteness in the dazzling sunlight, so that you could see them dotting the plains from afar off, while the hot winds from the south that tanned your face would be heavy with the smell of human carrion.

It is not so now, for better watch and ward is kept by the soldiers. But when it was so, there were four men who went into this Apache country to prospect for the mines from which, in the old days, the Indians obtained the silver out of which they would mold bullets when they could not get lead. Many a man has lost his life searching for these mines.

Of these four men, one was Harry Barrett. He was young, and had, as many young men have, and as all young men should have, a girl with whom he was very much in love, and to whom he was engaged to be married. It was probably this more than any thing else that made him so desirous of growing suddenly rich by finding the treasure mines of the Apaches, for, while a young man is truly in love, his greatest regret is that he does not own the wealth of the Indies and possess the power of the Czar to augment his importance in the eyes of the woman in whom he is so deeply interested. This was so with Harry Barrett, and when old Jeff Bramlett, who had prospected for these same mines for twenty years or more, came to him with his map of the country in which they were supposed to exist, Harry was not long in growing enthusiastic, and believing what was told him, for the prospect of great wealth is always intoxicating. The map was old, and frayed, and faded, for many another man had fingered it, to his sorrow. That counted for naught, though, with Harry. When the day came for the party to start on their search, he was the most light-hearted of all, especially when he lagged behind to kiss his hand to the girl for whose sake he desired wealth, and who stood at the door of her father's house watching him, while she saw in vision the beautiful things that the future had in store for both. The wealth that Harry might discover was not necessary to make her pictures of the future bright. If she only could have Harry, that was sufficient, and, when he had passed from her sight, she turned away, humming the song he most liked, while thinking of the pleasures that awaited his return.

For months there had been no rumors of Indian disturbances. There had been peace on the reservation so long that men had ceased to give its dangers a thought.

So it was with Harry Barrett and his comrades. While the girl who was awaiting his return might have occasionally thought of the risks that the little party ran, the men never felt any anxiety, or, if they did, subdued it without openly expressing it.

For the first few days, they found indications of rich silver deposits—indications that were so rich that they made a permanent camp, intending to examine the ledges that criss-crossed the country thoroughly. They had seen no Indians, and expected none. One day, though, as they sat at dinner, a shot came from out of the pines, and before the echo had died away it was followed by a score of others. Old Jeff Bramlett, who was to have led them to untold wealth, dropped the tin plate—from which he was eating—on the ground. Not abruptly, but so gently that it hardly made a sound; and, as it fell, he apparently made an effort to rise to his feet, only to fall face forward, into the fire, where still simmered the uneaten portion of the noonday meal.

The three remaining men sprang to their feet unharmed, and rushed to seek cover behind trees and boulders, picking up the arms that came nearest to their hands. As Barrett passed the fire, he drew from it the body of the old man. The face was covered with ashes and blood, while the long hair and open shirt were smoking from the contact with the coals. The limp body and relaxed jaw told how suddenly death had come.

As the young man threw the body to one side from the fire, and sank under the cover of a boulder, he glanced in the direction from which the shots had come, but could see nothing. As he watched, there would occasionally rise puffs of white smoke, followed by the report of a rifle, and he would fire in return. Through the whole afternoon never once did he see an Indian's face or form. After the first surprise, the three had called to one another, and were rejoiced to know that none was hit. The oldest had taken the direction of affairs.

"Hold your ammunition and wait until tonight, and then we will break back for the cañon and try to reach the settlements. There are too many of them for us to stand off," he said, and so through the long afternoon they waited. The fire they had kindled had burned out, and the body of the dead man beside it grew cold and rigid. The blood no longer flowed from the wound.

When darkness had come the three men gradually crept back, keeping as closely together as possible, in the direction of the cañon behind them. Occasionally, out of the darkness, would come a flash of light from a rifle fired in their direction. To these, at first, they replied; but when they had got some distance from the camp where the dead man lay, they rose to their feet, and as rapidly and noiselessly as possible retreated to the cañon. No one spoke, but each knew that the faces of his comrades were, like his own, glowing with that feeling of gratitude that comes only when a man has escaped almost certain death. They would never see the man they had left behind again; but, after all, he was old and alone in the world, while they—well, with them life was sweeter and dearer than it could possibly have been to him. To Harry, at least, it seemed so. What would the girl have done had he instead been killed and lying back there by the deserted camp-fire to be mutilated beyond recognition when his body should pass into the hands of the Apaches? By morning they would be within a few miles of the settlements, and they would be safe. It was so dark that they had to use both hands and feet in feeling for a footway down through the cañon. Still they were making good progress. It was hardly midnight, and they must have left their camp at least a dozen miles behind. They could not be over thirty or forty miles from the settlements, and, once out of the cañon, they would soon travel that distance. The moon would soon be high in the heavens and that would help them; but it would also bring aid to the pursuers, raging at their escape. Its lights were already beginning to fill the mountain sides and cañons with strange and uncouth shadows.

The three men kept close together, as if relying on one another for assistance. As they climbed down through the cañon they remained on its darkest side, in order to avoid any possible discovery, although it made their narrow footway still more dangerous. Far behind them they could see on the mountain side a blaze of light, and they knew that it was a signal of their escape. It made them push forward with still greater exertion, for now they knew that the pursuit was close behind, and that it would be only with the greatest effort they could escape, as the Indians had probably discovered the direction in which they were going, and would endeavor to intercept them. As they pushed forward with renewed haste, the man in the rear suddenly slipped and fell, carrying with him his two comrades. The fall was but a slight one. The little pebbles it had started had hardly ceased rolling before two of the men were again on their feet, picking up their arms. Harry tried to join them, and rose to his feet, but only to fall again.

"What's the matter?" asked one of the men. "I think I have sprained my leg some way," he replied.

The two men assisted him to arise, but when he was on his feet his left leg seemed to be without life, so far as any control of the muscles of it was concerned. He tried to step forward, but it dragged as if it were paralyzed. A cold sweat broke out all over him, and when one of the men who supported him said:

"This is hell!"

It sounded like a sentence of death.

"Can't you move it at all?" asked one of his comrades, his voice betraying his desire to be once more on his way toward the settlements. They were still standing where they had fallen in the moonlight, and one of them noticing it, led the way back into the shadows.

"No; I am afraid it is broken," answered the disabled man. His voice sounded strange and changed. He could hardly recognize it. The dead man whom they had left lying back by the camp-fire seemed very near to him, and in his fear and pain he wondered if the Indians had mutilated him much.

The two men laid him down, and one, taking the disabled limb in his hand, moved it gently back and forth, and in an instant moved his hand far up on the thigh.

"Yes, it's broken there. You can feel the end of the bones." As he said it, he glanced from the face of the wounded man into that of his other comrade. Even in the shadow the wounded man caught the expression on the faces of the two men and knew that they were thinking how long it would be before the Apaches would overtake them if they remained there. Both had seated themselves by his side in the shadow, so that if their pursuers were near by they would offer a poorer target.

"Don't you think you can limp along with our help?" asked one.

"No, it's no use, boys, I could never get through the cañon. You will have to leave me. If I tried they would attack us before daybreak." As he said this, he unbuckled the belt from around his waist with its glimmering row of cartridges, and handed it to one of the men, after taking the revolver from its holster.

"Well, we ain't going to leave you," said one of his comrades.

"Boys, that is nonsense," said the disabled man. His voice was so calm and clear now that it surprised him. "You can do me no good by staying and there will be three instead of one to die. By tomorrow morning, you can be within reach of the settlements and safe, but my time has come."

The two men looked at each other in silence. After all, it was but true that nothing would be gained by their staying. They had both risen to their feet like men who had been given a new hope.

"Boys, tell Mattie how it was, and give her what I have got in town." At the mention of the girl's name, there again came into the voice the unsteady strangeness that was there when he first told them he was hurt, while in the moonlight they could see there were tears in his eyes. For an instant the wounded man was silent, and then he added: "You had better take my arms with you; you may need them."

As he finished speaking, he cocked the revolver and placed it to his head; but before he could press the trigger, one of the men grasped his hand and exclaimed:

"Don't do that!"

"Yes; you are right. The report would betray us," said the wounded man, as he lowered the weapon. "Give me that knife, instead."

"I didn't mean it that way," said the man who made the remark, ashamed that the true feelings, which prompted it had been perceived by the wounded man. "Don't kill yourself. We will stay with you and we may yet pull through."

The wounded man shook his head quietly. The tone of the speaker told him, as plain as words could have done, that there was but one chance of escape for any of them. He took from the belt the man mechanically handed him, in compliance with his request, his heavy hunting knife, and leaned back full length in the shadow of the cañon. The men stood watching him, saw his eyes close and his lips moving in prayer, but only for an instant and then, without looking up, he said:

"Good-bye, boys; I hope you will get through."

There was not a quaver in his voice. As he finished, the men turned away so as not to see him each saying softly, as if speaking to himself:

"Good-bye, Harry."

As they stood looking down the moonlit cañon they could hear behind them, where the wounded man lay, sounds as if he was choking and gasping for breath. When they no longer heard them, they looked toward where he lay. The white breast where the open bosom of the shirt exposed it in the shadow, looked as if stained with ink, where the blood had touched it, and across it lay the nerveless hand that had held the knife.

For an instant the two men looked down on the body with awe, as if afraid that the open eyes were watching them. Then one placed the hand over the heart of the outstretched form, shuddering as he felt how warm it was. It seemed unnatural that it should be so with a dead man. For a moment he held it there, and then, wiping from it on the shirt of the dead man the blood that stained it in almost a whisper, as if fearing to be heard by the spirit that had just departed:

"Yes; he is dead."

And then the two survivors took the dead man's arms and pushed forward into the night toward the settlements, leaving behind them, in the stillness of the moonlit cañon, a white upturned face to await the early dawn, when the Indians would slash it so that even the girl in the settlement who had so often kissed it, would not know it.

W. O. O'NEILL.

GOLDEN DAYS OF ENGLISH OPERA.

W. S. Gilbert's Seventieth Anniversary and the Savoy Revival—"Pinafore" Memories.

One of the prime ministers of England celebrated the seventieth anniversary of his birth on Sunday, November 18, as a country gentleman, a magistrate, and a "retired humorist." The title may be misleading, but it has surely been won by W. S. Gilbert, for he, more than any other of his time, has ministered to the pleasure of the English-speaking world for a generation.

At the Savoy Theatre, in London, there begins today—the date of this number of the Argonaut—a revival of the Savoy comic operas, the joyous results that sprang from the union of W. S. Gilbert's satirical wit and Arthur Sullivan's music. To the younger theatre-goers who are privileged to see a renaissance of those eleven productions, they can bring no such delight as they brought to others, beginning twenty-eight years ago, for they do not present a new world of entertainment. Their clean bright fun, their infectious, fitting melodies, are sufficient to hold the attention, to compel the admiration of auditors old and young, but they are not now a new element in playhouse fare.

Critics of today can not discover the values that were so obvious then, and even those who recall easily the first echoes that came across the Atlantic of the success that "H. M. S. Pinafore" was winning in its original production at the Savoy Theatre by D'Oyley Carte, are better able to tell of effects than causes.

It is perhaps not enough to say that Gilbert and Sullivan's "H. M. S. Pinafore, or the Lass That Loved a Sailor," was the first English comic opera ever written, at least the first that ever had an adequate presentation. There were Gay's "Beggars' Opera," which was not an opera, burlesques and extravaganzas galore, and there was French opera-bouffe that could hardly be translated, but there was no English light opera. In parenthesis, I may say that Gilbert and Sullivan had written one earlier than "Pinafore," that was brought out at the Opera Comique in London—"The Sorcerer"—and it is a sparkling, whimsical, tuneful opera, but it did not have D'Oyley Carte's careful stage management, and even yet it is hardly known in America. Stage managers are important factors in all stage productions, but even the worst of stage management could not spoil "Pinafore."

The first production of "Pinafore" in America was in San Francisco at the old Alhambra, afterward the Bush Street Theatre, in November, 1878. It was presented by the Alice Oates English Opera Company fresh from Australia, and the plump and pleasing prima donna at the head of the organization sang the tenor part of Ralph, as was usual in the burlesques of that day. The book and score of the opera had been secured from London, and it was something of a puzzle to the members of the company. It was not like anything they had ever seen before, and they interpolated numerous ideas to bring it up to their standard. The rotund Alice introduced "Good-bye, Sweetheart, Good-bye"; the boatswain introduced "The Death of Nelson"; a sailor's quartet, grouped about the capstan at the opening of the second act, sang "The Larboard Watch." In spite of this, the piece was a success, and on its way eastward the company came more and more to rely upon it. The Oates Company reached Chicago in February, 1879, and sang "Pinafore" in Faverly's old theatre for two weeks and went to St. Louis. By that time the opera was working westward from Boston, where it had been produced about the same time that the Oates Company had offered it on the Pacific Coast.

Already the people, aided by the newspapers, had taken it up. The catch phrases of the opera were on every tongue. The alleged humorists were working over its jokes a thousand variations and transcriptions. A score of professional companies had seized upon the opera and with mutilated versions, incomplete in words and music were singing it successfully to crowded houses in all the cities. Amateur companies found it suited to their needs, and from the piano score made an entertainment that brought the same hearers night after night to enjoy the offering, pure and invigorating as the salt sea breeze. Church choirs produced "Pinafore" to the glad profit of attenuated church funds. There were many of them, and one—the Chicago Church Choir Company—soon became famous. Jessie Bartlett Davis and Marie Stone were members of that organization, and made their first appearance on any stage in "Pinafore." That long-time deservedly popular company, first the Boston Ideal Opera Company, later the Bostonians, came into existence because of "Pinafore." H. C. Barnabee, who had won fame in concerts in New England singing "The Tall Young Oysterman," went into opera with "Pinafore," and though he was always an oysterman rather than an admiral, he could not fail in the role of Sir Joseph Porter. But he had Tom Karl to assist him as Ralph, and Tom Karl sang Ralph's music as no other tenor did. And George Frothingham, the only Dick Deadeye on the American stage who really understood the part, is not to be forgotten in that connection.

Of the American and English actors who made their first appearance in "Pinafore," a complete list could hardly be made, but were it possible it could not be printed in the space taken by this article. From Richard Mansfield to Harry Woodruff, nearly all of them have shared in its triumphs, and, as one reflects, memories of their experiences come in a flood. One of the earliest American companies to go on tour was the Madison Square Company of New York, in which Thomas Whiffen was the admiral and Vernona Jarbeau the Josephine. They used as a "curtain raiser" that musical farce of Burnand's, "Cox and Box," built on the earlier "Box and Cox." Sullivan's music is no less characteristic in that trifle than in the later and greater pieces. Other companies used the Gilbert-Sullivan skit, "Trial by Jury." Pauline Hall was in the chorus of the Oates Company when it sang "Pinafore" in San Francisco. Mrs. Fiske and Julia Marlowe were members of the same early "Pinafore" company. Within three years I saw twenty-two companies in the opera, and some of them several times. The country could not get enough of it. It had a great drawing power when every solo, duet, and simple chorus was familiar to everybody. Impromptu quartets of commercial travelers sang the concerted parts in smoking compartments of Pullman cars, as they went about the country, and it seemed that it would never grow old.

John Brougham's burlesque, "Pocahontas," was popular in the early '70s, and "Evangeline" was a great and winning production a few years later. Aimee, the French queen of opera-bouffe sang "La Perichole" and others of the Offenbach list in the Eastern cities in 1876, but such forerunners of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas did not make a ripple on the surface where "Pinafore," "The Pirates of Penzance," and "The Mikado" stirred the deeps. "Patience" was popular for a time, and has beauty and strength now, after the esthetic posing that called it into being has been forgotten. "Iolanthe," "The Gondoliers," "The Yeoman of the Guard," and "Ruddigore," were more like echoes of the earlier successes and never won a moiety of the regard which had been given to them.

Finally came the rupture between the author and composer, and the golden days of English comic opera were over. None can say to whom was most credit due. Sullivan's music made the opera, but Gilbert's verses inspired the music. No other could fit such airs and harmonies to the rhymed wit and satire, no other librettist could furnish such themes. Sir Arthur Sullivan wrote "The Rose of Persia," "The Emerald Isle," and others, after the parting. Mr. Gilbert wrote the librettos of "His Excellency" and "The Mountebanks" in collaboration with other composers. All these pieces failed to win popular approval.

To write of what has followed is not a pleasing task. There has been a gay yet saddening procession. "Fatinitza," "Boccaccio," "The Mascot," "Olivette," adapted for English offerings, were not unworthy rivals, but they were from another sphere. There have been American constructions, some nearly equal to "Robin Hood," but the numerous so-called musical comedies that have had their brief hour on the stage since that time have left few fragrant memories. In George Ade's "Peggy from Paris" there is more than a suggestion of the novelty, the freshness of those greater ones, but it has caught a breath or two of burlesque that never came from the Savoy circle.

It seems certain that the English revival will meet with success. Not such success as that of the days spoken of; but it can not be that there will come a time when Gilbert's mock-serious comedy, his topsyturvy fancies, and Sullivan's apt, graceful, and witching music, may be presented adequately and find any thing less than a cordial reception. G. L. S.

OLD FAVORITES.

EDITOR ARGONAUT: Will you kindly publish the old poem—which our club is not able to run down—"What My Lover Said?" One claims Horace Greeley was its author; others differ; no one can repeat it in full, hence this appeal to you by a little club of readers in Los Angeles. X.Y.Z.

[The poem, "What My Lover Said," was first printed in the New York Tribune many years ago with the initials "H. G." appended. The worthy farmers, who in those days took the Tribune by scores of thousands, believed that Horace Greeley wrote everything in it, so they naturally supposed that these initials stood for his name. Soon the poem began to appear in various collections of verse with the name of Greeley appended. But it soon developed that the name of the author was Homer Greene.—EDITOR ARGONAUT.]

What My Lover Said.

By the merest chance, in the twilight gloom,
In the orchard path he met me;
In the tall, wet grass with its faint perfume,
And I tried to pass, but he made no room,
Oh, I tried, but he would not let me.
So I stood and blushed till the grass grew red.
With my face bent down above it,
While he took my hand, as he whispering said—
(How the clover lifted each pink, sweet head
To listen to all that my lover said;
Oh, the clover in bloom, I love it!)

In the high, wet grass went the path to hide,
And the low, wet leaves hung over;
But I could not pass upon either side,
For I found myself, when I vainly tried,
In the arms of my steadfast lover
And he held me there and he raised my head,
While he closed the path before me,
And he looked down into my eyes and said—
(How the leaves bent down from the boughs overhead,
To listen to all that my lover said—
Oh, the leaves hanging lowly o'er me!)

Had he moved aside but a little way,
I could surely then have passed him;
And he knew I never could wish to stay,
And would not have heard what he had to say.

Could I only aside have cast him,
It was almost dark and the moments sped,
And the searching night wind found us,
But he drew me nearer and softly said—
(How the pure, sweet wind grew still,
Instead,
To listen to all that my lover said—
Oh, the whispering wind around us!)

I am sure he knew, when he held me fast,
That I must be all unwilling;
For I tried to go, and I would have passed,
As the night was come with its dew, at last,
And the sky with its stars was filling.
But he clasped me close when I would have fled,
And he made me hear his story,
And his soul came out from his lips and said—
(How the stars crept out where the white moon led,

To listen to all that my lover said—
Oh, the moon and the stars in glory!)

I know that the grass and the leaves will not tell,
And I'm sure the wind, precious rover,
Will carry my secret so safely and well
That no being shall ever discover
One word of the many that rapidly fell
From the soul-speaking lips of my lover;
And the moon and the stars that looked over
Shall never reveal what a fairy-like spell
They wove round about us that night in the dell,
In the path through the dew-laden clover
Nor echo the whispers that made my heart swell
As they fell from the lips of my lover.
—Homer Greene.

EDITOR ARGONAUT: Will you kindly let me know through the Argonaut who was the author of the poem "When Suffering Wraps This Suffering Clay." If convenient to you, would like to read the whole poem in the Argonaut.

T. D.

104 West First St., Los Angeles.

The Immortal Mind.

When coldness wraps this suffering clay,
Ah, whither strays the immortal mind?
It can not die, it can not stay,
But leaves its darkened dust behind.
Then, unembodied, doth it trace,
By steps each planet's heavenly way?
Or fill at once the realms of space,
A thing of eyes, that all survey?

Eternal, boundless, undecayed,
A thought unseen, but seeing all.
All, all in earth, or skies displayed,
Shall it survey, shall it recall;
Each fainter trace that memory holds,
So darkly of departed years,
In one broad glance the soul beholds,
And all, that was, at once appears.

Before creation peopled earth,
Its eyes shall roll through chaos back;
And where the farthest heaven had birth,
The spirit trace its rising track.
And where the future mars or makes,
Its glance dilate o'er all to be,
While sun is quenched or system breaks,
Fixed in its own eternity.

Above or love, hope, hate, or fear,
It lives all passionless and pure:
An age shall fleet like earthly year;
Its years as moments shall endure.
Away, away, without a wing,
O'er all, through all, its thoughts shall fly;
A nameless and eternal thing,
Forgetting what it was to die.
—Byron.

Superintendent of Police Thomas A. McQuade has issued to the terror-stricken citizens of Pittsburg the following suggestions for self-protection in case of attack by criminals. He says: "When you fight with a professional thief or burglar you are battling with an insane man. Few of them will hesitate to take life to gain their ends. They believe they are only protecting themselves when their victims give battle. If a man holds a revolver at your head don't fight unless you have excellent chances. Do not hide your revolver under your pillow when you go to bed. The burglar will get your gun the first thing when he comes to your room. Put it under your dresser or under the bed, and lie still. When the burglar leaves then get your weapon and get him as he is leaving. Don't come downstairs after a burglar unless you have a gun and can shoot well. Be sure there is no light near you, or you will offer yourself as a target. The best plan is to have a police whistle and sound it from your bed-room window. If not that, open your window and shout for assistance."

In order to get rid of an unwieldy surplus, directors of the State Bank of New York City have declared a dividend of 900 per cent on the capitalization of $100,000. This was in addition to the usual annual dividend of fifty per cent. The heavy dividend is accounted for by the small capitalization of the bank, and to obviate a recurrence of the same state of affairs it has been decided to increase the capital stock from $100,000 to $1,000,000.

Jacob Riis's book, "How I Became an American," is being published serially by the Matin of Brussels, in a translation by Leon Bazalgette.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

The Governor of Hongkong, Sir Matthew Nathan, is the only member of the Hebrew faith in important office in Great Britain's colonies.

The heir to the throne of Holland, now occupied by Queen Wilhelmina, is the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, a wealthy young prince, 28 years old. He is popular at his German home.

England's foremost ecclesiastical architect, George Frederick Bodley, is coming to Washington to design the new Protestant Episcopal Cathedral, which he hopes to make his masterpiece. Mr. Bodley is in his eightieth year.

Norway's famous Arctic explorer, Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, is now minister to Great Britain. He is still filled with the adventurous spirit, and asserts that explorers and hunters do not suffer hardships in the wilds but enjoy the life.

The staff of city engineers in New York now has as a member Miss Nora Stanton Blatch, granddaughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Miss Blatch won the appointment with honor in an examination, and has been given work requiring high skill.

In an expedition from the Nile to the Zambesi, recently undertaken, Major Powell Cotton is accompanied by his wife, the first European woman who ever penetrated the Ituri basin. Natives haunt the camps, filled with curiosity to see the "white woman with the long hair."

Charlton, the ancestral home of the Earl of Suffolk, is once more the scene of glories of the olden time since the marriage of the earl and Miss Daisy Leiter. It is a fine Jacobean mansion of dark sandstone, with mullioned windows and carved stone portals, and contains many treasures of art, including the family portraits.

Miss Phoebe Cousins, the only woman who was ever a United States Marshal, will spend the winter in Washington and work for the restoration of the army canteen. Twenty years ago in Missouri her father died while marshal for the district, and the government gave Miss Cousins the appointment until the end of his term, as she was familiar with all the work of the office and thoroughly capable.

The two pretenders to the overturned throne of France were in London recently at the same time. One is the Duc d'Orleans, head of the House of Bourbon, and the other Prince Victor Napoleon, leader of the Bonapartists. The Duc d'Orleans is not as popular as his mother, the Comtesse de Paris, but is given some credit for his late polar expedition. Prince Victor, too, is not highly regarded by his party, though his brother, Prince Louis, a general in the Russian army, is a favorite everywhere. The hopes of these two men are little more than ridiculous fancies, but as they are not aggressive it is not probable that harm will come of them.

Eight years ago Pedro Alvarado was an unknown peon with a mining claim from which his father had gained nothing in years of labor; today he is the greatest multimillionaire of Mexico. When approached recently with an offer to purchase his mine by an agent of the syndicate, he said: "The mine is not for sale, but if you'll fix a fair price on all the American Smelting and Refining Company's mines in Mexico I'll be glad to buy them." Senor Alvarado has lately set aside $10,000,000 to be expended in buying homes for the poor peones of his province. He has already built churches and hospitals. He is thirty-eight years old and happily married.

On his sixty-fifth birthday, November 9, King Edward announced a list of honors to be conferred that included four new baronets and seventeen knights, but no new peers of the realm. Among those named to be knights is Henry Norman, Member of Parliament, and well-known politician, journalist, and traveler. He is a Liberal in politics and was the head of the Eighty Club deputation which recently visited Hungary, and his speech on that occasion on the delicate problem of Austro-Hungarian relations was much admired for its wisdom, its knowledge, and its tactfulness. Mr. Norman is an enthusiastic motorist, and in his travels has visited most parts of the habitable globe.

LITERARY NOTES.

Washington One Hundred Years Ago.

The prevailing taste for "Americana" is running now in the direction of social as well as political history. We have something too much of the latter and not enough of the first. A book which fills a void in this direction is "The First Forty Years of Washington Society," by Mrs. Samuel Harrison Smith (Margaret Bayard), edited by Gaillard Hunt. These letters are from a collection belonging to Mrs. Smith's grandson, J. Henley Smith, who for a number of years was a prominent resident of San Francisco. The book is copiously illustrated, containing portraits of Mrs. Smith, Aaron Burr, Senator James A. Bayard, Thomas Jefferson, Mrs. James Madison, James Madison, Andrew Jackson, Henry Clay, and John Quincy Adams. It contains also views of buildings and several quaint silhouettes. The book is in letter form, and gives the general effect of a diary. It is printed verbatim, although we question whether the retention of the abbreviations, the archaic spelling, and the use of the amperzand adds anything to the book. In fact, the effect is rather to distract the attention of the reader, as is the case with the "reform spelling" of our own time.

Many readers will turn at once to the chapter discussing the capture of Washington and the flight from the capital of the President and all the high officials, together with the burning of the White House by the British.

As showing the marked differences in social usages between that day and this, note Mrs. Smith's account of a visit to the President and his "lady." Mrs. Madison meets Mrs. Smith and at once takes her from the "tea room," where the gentlemen "were still smoking segars and drinking wine." Mrs. Madison (she says) "took me from the tea room to her chamber, which opens from it. I was going to take a seat on the sofa, but she said I must lay down by her on her bed and rest myself. She loosened my riding habit, took off my bonnet, and we threw ourselves on her bed. Wine, ice, punch, and delightful pine-apples were immediately brought in. No restraint; no ceremony."

This is quite evident from the next passage: "Mrs. Cutts soon came in, and Mr. Madison, Mr. Cutts, and Mr. Smith, the door opening into the tea room being open, without ceremony, joined their wives. They only peeked in on us. We then shut the door, and after adjusting our dress went out." After supper Mrs. Madison "insisted on going up stairs with me, assisted me to undress, and chatted until I got into bed. How unassuming, how kind is this woman!"

No doubt. But we very much question whether ladies of high position in this day and generation would be quite so unassuming and certainly not quite so intimate.

The book is provided with a good index. As a second edition will soon be needed, we would suggest a good analytical table of contents as well.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

A Novel by Henry George, Jr.

Dealing as it does with the problems of political corruption and reform, Henry George, Jr.'s novel, "The Romance of John Bainbridge," comes at an opportune time. Tammany bosses, lobbyists, railroad franchises, the battle for popular rights, graft in its variety, reformers high and low, all the familiar material of the American political novel has been used by Mr. George in his story, but in a manner strikingly original and effective.

John Bainbridge, son of a prosperous New York merchant, chooses to win his way in the West unaided. He roves from place to place, working on farms, in logging camps, and in the mines, but spending his nights reading law. After he is admitted to the bar, he settles in Seattle, where he becomes a fierce anti-monopolist and champion of the people. Moving to New York, he gains the favor of a district leader of Tammany, who selects him as the nominee for alderman, but without exacting pledges. He is elected, and at once sets about to put his reform ideals into practice. Bainbridge directs his fight mainly against a street railroad franchise measure, which reeks with graft. He sees colleagues who at first were sincere in their determination to stand with him, debauched by the bribe-givers. He is harassed and beset on every side, and is at times willing to give up the discouraging struggle, but he perseveres, and is eventually successful. The love story of Bainbridge and the railroad magnate's daughter is charmingly told. The book abounds in dramatic episodes and character drawings. It is one of the most interesting of the season's novels.

Published by The Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

Two Books on Cheerfulness.

"A Look on the Brighter Side" and "Cheeriness," by W. R. Rutherford, are two beautifully bound little holiday books. The first named is a compilation of some of the articles which have appeared semi-weekly in the San Jose Mercury, under the heading which stands as the title of this volume. The cheery essays contain frequent quotations of appropriate little poems and other writings, appearing in magazines, newspapers, and books, and in some cases offered by the composers of the lines themselves.

"Cheeriness," like its companion volume, is made up of bright and optimistic articles on helpfulness in the seemingly trivial things of life. "If we refrain from fretting over the small vexations we shall be the less moved by the real misfortunes," is a summing-up of the author's philosophy.

With their white and gold covers, their fine printing, and their messages of happiness, the two volumes are suitable for Christmas gifts.

Published by A. M. Robertson, San Francisco; 75 cents net each.

Recent Fiction.

"I Will Repay," by the Baroness Orczy, has its scene laid in Paris in 1783. It begins "Coward! Coward! Coward!" and ends "And soul met soul in one long, passionate kiss." (Lippincott Co.; $1.50.)

"Clippings Borough," by Stanley J. Weyman, is a story of the early Victorian days. Mr. Weyman can not fail to make an interesting narrative, but he seems at his best in the days of Chivalry. (McClure, Phillips & Co.; $1.50.)

"The Very Small Person" by Annie Hamilton Donnell, author of "Rebecca Mary," is a series of pictures of the comedies and tragedies of childhood. It is illustrated in black and white and tint by Elizabeth Shippen Green. (Harper & Brothers; $1.25.)

"The Treasure of Peyra Gaillard," by John Bennett, is a story of buried treasure, a cryptogram, a beautiful young lady, a brilliant young surveyor. Given these premises, it is easy to infer who finds the treasure and how he is rewarded. (Century Co.; $1.50.)

"The Viper of Milan," by Marjorie Bowen, is a "Romance of Lombardy," and the publishers say of it: "No novel gives a more concrete, vivid, and brilliant impression of the Italy of the early Renaissance." The publishers surely know. (McClure, Phillips & Co.; $1.50.)

"The Wooing of Folly," by James L. Ford, is the work of a very clever writer, but he has adopted the somewhat difficult medium of telling his story in letters. The scene is laid in New York and concerns the Four Hundred. Nearly everybody in it is enormously rich, and it relates to the day before yesterday. (Appleton's; $1.50.)

"The Story of Martin Coe," by Ralph D. Paine, is a narrative of a young deserter from the United States Navy, who is taken in hand by an elderly Maine woman, who regenerates him and marries him to a young Maine woman. (Outing Publishing Co.; $1.50.)

"Don Q. in the Sierra," by K. and H. Pritchard, is a story of adventures in Spain. It is full of smugglers and bull fighters, handits and contrabandistas, English lords and commoners. It is not quite up to Prosper Merimee. (Lippincott Co.; $1.50.)

"Doughloons," by Eden Philpotts and Arnold Bennett, is a story of buried treasure, a professor of jiu-jitsu, and a music-hall lady masquerading in man's apparel who is kidnapped by her father's murderer. From this it may be seen the story does not lack for plot. (McClure, Phillips & Co.; $1.50.)

"Paul," by E. F. Benson, is a love story in which two young people have an unusually hard time over a love affair. The fortuitous death of a husband smooths over matters and their affair ends happily. (Lippincott Co.; $1.50.)

"No Friend Like Sister," by Rosa Nouchette Carey, is a story, the scene of which is laid largely in the English countryside. The critics "highly recommend it to girls who have outgrown childish literature." (Lippincott Co.; $1.50.)

"Gabrielle, Transgressor," by Harris Dickson is a story of Colonial New Orleans. In it a girl bred in a Louisiana convent falls in love with an exiled Turkish prince. (Lippincott Co.; $1.50.)

A SINGLE ORDER OF BOTTLES FOR

HUNTER WHISKEY

IF PLACED END TO END WOULD REACH FROM

BALTIMORE TO CHICAGO

THIS GIVES SOME IDEA OF THE MAGNITUDE OF ITS POPULARITY

CHARLES M. REYNOLDS CO., Agents for California and Nevada, 912-914 Folsom St., San Francisco, Cal.

The Little Palace Hotel

corner of

Post and Leavenworth Sts.

IS

OPEN

The same excellence in cuisine and service that obtained in the Old Palace is duplicated in the new "Little Palace."

JOHN C. KIRKPATRICK
Manager

Hotel del Coronado

A gem set in semi-tropical surroundings. Dryest marine climate known. No winter, but perpetual spring or early summer.

Outdoor sports 365 days in the year. Golf, Polo, Tennis, Fishing, Boating, and Bathing. Choicest cuisine of any hotel in the West. American plan only. All modern conveniences. All outside rooms. Send for illustrated booklet.

MORGAN ROSS, Mgr., Coronado Beach Cal.
H. F. NORCROSS, General Agent
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

Goodyear Rubber Company

Have Returned to Their Old Home, Where They Were Located Before the Fire, 573-579 Market St., near Second
Tel. Temporary 1788

LITERARY NOTES.

"Literary By-Paths in Old England."

A literary pilgrimage to the homes and haunts of genius has always been an alluring subject for the pen of the descriptive writer. The more credit then to the tourist who returns from that much-traveled thoroughfare leading to literary shrines, with new information, and who succeeds in depicting old memories with fresh vividness. This, Henry C. Shelley has accomplished in "Literary By-Paths in Old England." The scope of this very entertaining work is indicated in the chapter headings: In Spenser's Footsteps; The Home of Sir Philip Sidney; Memorials of William Penn; The Birthplace of Gray's Elegy; Gilbert, White's Selborne; Goldsmith's "Deserted Village"; Burns in Ayrshire; Keats and His Circle; In Carlyle's Country; Thomas Hood's Homes and Friends; Royal Winchester.

One does not expect fresh material in an essay on Spenser, but Mr. Shelley has succeeded in gleaming some little known facts which give his paper on the author of the "Faery Queen," a novel interest. Selborne and Goldsmith's village are delightfully portrayed, and the reminiscences of the family of William Penn are very interesting. There are some characteristic and unpublished stories of the sage of Chelsea. The townfolk of Ecclefechan are not hero worshippers, and least of all, it would seem, do they reverence the memory of Carlyle. Even James Carlyle appears to have affected an indifference to his brother's memory. One day he met a party of American tourists who told him they had come all the way "to lay a wreath on our great teacher's grave." "It's a gay harmless occupation," rejoined the unmoved Jamie. A number of newly discovered letters from Hood to his near relatives are among the new material which is reprinted in Mr. Shelley's volumes. In his account of Keats, the author explains how it came to pass that there are three poems bearing the title of "Peter Bell," written respectively by Wordsworth, John Hamilton Reynolds, and Shelley. When Wordsworth's poem was announced, Reynolds's "Peter Bell" appeared as a rebuke to the former for choosing so nonsensical a title. Keats wrote a review of the Reynolds poem, which inspired Shelley's mischievous verses. "Literary By-Paths in Old England" is illustrated from scores of excellent photographs by the author. It is a beautiful book, and would make an admirable holiday gift for literary folk.

Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston: $3.00 net.

New Publications.

"The Friendly Year" is a little volume of selections from the writings of Henry van Dyke, edited by George Sidney Webster, D. D. Mr. Webster has chosen those paragraphs and verses which are marked by a religious spirit. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.25.

The story of the long struggle to free London from the theatrical monopoly, a struggle that lasted for nearly two centuries, is told in "The Struggle for a Free Stage in London," by Watson Nicholson, M. A., Ph. D. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $2.50.

"The Queen's Museum and Other Fanciful Tales," by Frank R. Stockton, is illustrated by Frederick Richardson. There are some ten color pictures in the book and a number of head and end-pieces and vignettes. It is a handsome book and a pleasant souvenir of a dead-and-gone story-writer. Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.50.

"To Have and to Scold," "Whom the Gallery Gods Love Dye Young," and "On with the Dance, Let Joy be Unrefined" are typical of the 1907 version of the "Cynic's Calendar," by Ethel Watts Mumford, Oliver Herford, and Addison C. Mizner.

The little book is brightly bound and humorously illustrated. Paul Elder & Co., San Francisco and New York.

Three of Richard Harding Davis's farces, "The Dictator," "The Galloper," and "Miss Civilization" have been published in an attractive illustrated volume. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50 net.

A charming and amusing story is "A Knight of the Cumberland," by John Fox, Jr. The climax is a Kentucky tournament with an exciting and unexpected ending. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.00.

"Lords and Lovers and Other Dramas," by Olive Tilford Dargan, is a volume of plays of exceptional merit. The title drama is a poetical and distinguished narrative of England in Henry III's reign; "The Shepherd" is a dramatic tale of contemporary Russia; and "The Siege" is a powerful tragedy of ancient Sicily. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

"Liberty, Union and Democracy," by Barrett Wendell, is a scholarly volume of essays on the national ideals of America. The papers were originally addressed to a French audience in a series of lectures at the Sorbonne, and are, consequently, marked by a laudatory and optimistic vein. The book is written in the attractive style that distinguishes all of the work of this well-known literary critic. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.25 net.

Thackeray, Tennyson, Gladstone, Aubrey de Vere, Macaulay, FitzGerald, Father Prout, and the Hallams are among the literary notables of whom the reader is given a close view in "Mrs. Brookfield and Her Circle," by Charles and Frances Brookfield. The present is the fourth edition of the interesting letters which show us the famous men and women of the Victorian period at their leisure and among their friends. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Hotel St. Francis

a credit to
San Francisco

PERFECT SERVICE
EVERY COMFORT

THEY WHO GO TO SEE
GO
TO STAY

The famous
Grill Room
is unsurpassed

Take your friends to lunch there

Del Monte Offers

During the reconstruction of San Francisco, Hotel Del Monte offers a welcome shelter to those desiring a homelike place for rest and recreation. The park-like grounds, the golf links, the flowers, the many walks and drives were never more attractive than at the present. The entire Hotel has recently been renovated and improved with steam heat, electric lights, hot and cold water, telephones in every room. Why not make this attractive resort near San Francisco your permanent home? Special terms for families. Address Geo. P. Snell, Manager, Del Monte, California

A Permanent Home

THE OCULARIUM

Perfect Fitting
Eye Glasses

At Moderate Prices
Lenses Replaced, 50c

Henry Kahn & Co
OPTICIANS

1309 VAN NESS AVENUE

Between Bush and Sutter

See that Lea & Perrins' signature is on wrapper and label.

Beware of inferior sauces put up in bottles similar to the above.

Lea & Perrins' Sauce

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

is invaluable to the fastidious cook. It adds zest to her Gravies and spice to her Salads, and improves the flavor of Fish, Game and Soups. Its rare rich flavor makes it the most useful of all sauces.

Lea & Perrins' Sauce is in every well-equipped kitchen

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

LITERARY NOTES.

Shakespeare and the Stage.

Sidney Lee, who is the author of the latest and most authoritative life of Shakespeare, has just published a volume entitled "Shakespeare and the Modern Stage." It is made up of some eleven papers from various reviews and periodicals. The initial essay gives the title to the book. In other papers Mr. Lee discusses the Elizabethan play-goer, and touches on Shakespeare's playing the role of the ghost in "Hamlet," in 1602. The Elizabethan methods of production are contrasted with those of the present day. Another paper is devoted to "Shakespeare in Oral Tradition," in which is interestingly told how Shakespeare's death was received at Stratford-on-Avon and elsewhere, and some oral tradition given concerning the great poet in theatrical circles from his time down. Another essay is devoted to Shakespeare and Pepys, who was (as readers of his diary remember) an enthusiastic play-goer. The garbled stage versions of Pepys's day are touched upon. The ethical sides of Shakespeare, "his lofty conception of public virtue," his views of patriotism, freedom, and obedience to authority, and the moral atmosphere of his plays are all discussed.

Probably no writer of recent years has brought more unpublished matter to the light than Mr. Lee. Therefore, his chapter on "The Peril of Shakespearean Research" is extremely interesting. In it he tells of a successful forgery which passed unchallenged through three centuries. Mr. Lee also discusses "Shakespeare in France," and the view of our great poet held by French writers in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. A deplorable lacuna in the book, however, is the utter absence of ten or fifteen chapters devoted to Shakespeare in Germany; the interpretations of Shakespeare by the German philologists, and generally the bright light thrown on the dark passages of our great bard by the affable and profound German pundits, for the enlightenment of the English-speaking. Doubtless Mr. Lee will take up this branch of his subject at some later date.

The suggestion of some great monument, character undetermined, to be erected to Shakespeare in England, Mr. Lee discusses in somewhat reserved terms. It is apparent that he thinks favorably of it. If such a project should succeed, it is sincerely to be hoped it may not partake of the catchpenny order of the Shakespeare memorial at Stratford-on-Avon.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

A long narrative poem by Joaquin Miller, introducing scenes in the Klondike and portraying the author's ideal of the coming types of the highest American civilization, will soon appear.

William Archer's translations of Ibsen's plays, each one with an appreciative foreword by the translator, are being brought out by Charles Scribner's Sons in the first complete edition. The volumes now ready contain, one, "The Vikings," and "The Pretenders," and the other, "Ghosts," and "A Doll's House."

Julie Opp Faversham has made a novel out of Edwin Milton Royle's play, in which her husband was the actor of the principal role, under the same name—"The Squaw Man."

There is a short story club in San Jose, Cal., with a membership that includes Charles Warren Stoddard, Joaquin Miller, and other Western writers. At a recent meeting Herbert Bashford talked informally of the writing of short stories, and a letter from Jack London was read in which the novelist declared that the magazines did not want masterpieces.

The Plantation Edition of Thomas Nelson Page is the latest addition to Scribner's Sons' Library of Modern Authors. The set is sold only by subscription, and only in complete sets.

Illustrated Holiday Books.

"The Adventures of Jounou," by Edith McVane, contains fifteen illustrations in color by Frank Verbeck and decorations by Edward Stratton Holloway. It is handsomely bound with end-pieces, and has colored borders to the pages. (J. B. Lippincott & Co.)

"A Maid in Arcady," by Ralph Henry Barbour, is illustrated by Frederick J. von Rapp. The full-page illustrations are in color, and there are a number of head-pieces and end-pieces in tints. (J. B. Lippincott Co.)

"Boys and Girls from George Eliot," by Kate Dickinson Sweetser, contains a frontispiece in color by George Alfred Williams and a number of illustrations in black and white. (Fox, Duffield & Co.; $2.)

"Mr. Pickwick's Christmas," by Charles Dickens, is illustrated in color and line by George Alfred Williams. Naturally, it relates to the doings at Dingley Dell. Lovers of Pickwick can amuse and puzzle themselves by trying to tell from the pictures which is Jingle, and which is Wardle, which is Bella and which the young lady with the black eyes. (Baker & Taylor Co.; $2.)

"Tales from Shakespeare," by Charles and Mary Lamb, is edited with an introduction by Alfred Ainger. The work, which is in two volumes, contains a mezzotint portrait of Charles Lamb and a score of illustrations of scenes from the plays. They present the appearance of being process reproductions from old steel and copper-plate engravings. (Brentano's.)

"A Japanese Blossom," by Onoto Watanna, is illustrated in color by L. W. Ziegler. In addition to the colored illustrations there are a number of Japanese drawings in tint in the margins and for the end-papers. It is a very pretty little book. (Harper & Brothers; $2.)

"In Pastures New," by George Ade, is made up principally of a series of newspaper syndicate letters printed this year. These letters describe Mr. Ade's trip abroad, which was principally in Egypt and on the Nile. The book contains a number of broadly humorous illustrations by Albert Levering, and the text is as broadly humorous as the illustrations. (McClure, Phillips & Co.)

"They," by Rudyard Kipling, is illustrated in color by F. W. Townsend. It is a very handsome edition of what has already become a classic. The artist had a difficult task to put in visible form the invisible imaginings of "They." (Doubleday, Page & Co.; price $1.50 net.)

Wrong glasses are worse, sometimes, than none.

Don't neglect nature's warning. If your eyes tire, they call for help.

HIRSCH & KAISER.

1737 Fillmore Street

Opticians

ROBERTSON'S

NEW LOCATION

1539

Van Ness Ave., near Pine

"Next to the White House"

Mr. Robertson calls attention to the above address, which is very centrally located.

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

50 minutes from San Francisco. Complete

Change of Climate

TIBURON OR SAUSALITO FERRY

All modern Conveniences

R. V. HALTON

Proprietor

SOME OF LITTLE, BROWN & CO.'S HOLIDAY BOOKS

The Wonders of the Colorado Desert

By GEORGE WHARTON JAMES

A graphic account of the Colorado Desert Region in Southern California, including the story of the Colorado River's overflow into the Salton Sea. With 33 full page plates and over 300 pen and ink sketches by Carl Ertel. 2 vols. $8.00, gilt top, in box, $5.00 net. Postage, 45 cents.

Through the Gates of the Netherlands

By MARY E. WALLER

A fascinating account of a picturesque country and people by the gifted author of "The Wood Carver of Lymhus." With 24 photographic plates. $8.00, gilt top, in box, $5.00 net. Postage, 20 cents.

The Land of Enchantment

By LILLIAN WHITING

A vivid presentation of the scenic marvels and the resources and development of life in the great Southwest—from Pike's Peak to the Pacific. With 35 illustrations. $8.00, gilt top, in box, $2.50 net. Postage, 20 cents.

The Dragon Painter

By MARY McNEIL FENOLLOSA (SIDNEY McCALL)

Author of "Truth Dexter" and "The Breath of the Gods."

As a passionate, glowing love story, with a happy ending. "The Dragon Painter" is fully satisfying.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Her crowning achievement.—Newark Advertiser.

Superbly illustrated. 12mo, $1.50

OTHER NEW FICTION

The Master Spirit

By SIR WILLIAM MAGNAY

This strong, ingenious story of the power of one man over another with its vivid pictures of "high life" in London, "holds one in its thrall," to quote the Chicago Tribune. Illustrated, 12mo, $1.50.

The Impersonator

By MARY IMLAY TAYLOR

A tale of Washington Society reflecting with accuracy certain aspects of the semi-fast life of the nation's capital. The action is as swift as it is natural.—Boston Transcript. Illustrated, 12mo, $1.50.

Pardner of Blossom Range

By FRANCES CHARLES

"A story of Arizona life without the conventional figures of Western fiction. The story of a winsome ranch girl, with exceedingly life-like characters."—The Argonaut. 12mo, $1.50.

At All Bookellers LITTLE, BROWN & CO., Publishers, Boston Send For Holiday Cat.

L. KREISS & SONS

CABINET MAKERS

UPHOLSTERERS

DECORATORS

Dealers in Fine Mahogany, Early English Oak Furniture; reproductions of rare examples of Antique Fabrics of all the important periods of English, French and Italian Arts in Tapestries, Brocaded Silks, Damasks, Embroideries, Etc.

Our stock is complete and contains many Odd Pieces suitable for Gifts.

1219-23 POST ST.

Above Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

EDUCATIONAL

MISS HAMLIN'S

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Formerly at 1849 Jackson St., is now at 223 Pacific Ave., near Webster St. Mid-term begins October 15. Accredited. Address

Miss S. D. Hamlin

2230 Pacific Avenue

San Francisco

St. Matthew's Military School

Burlingame, California

Easter Term begins January 10, 1907

For illustrated catalogue address

REV. WILLIAM A. BREWER, Rector

IRVING INSTITUTE

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Accredited by the universities. Special advantage in music art, and elocution. Twenty-eighth year.

Miss PINKHAM and Miss MACLENNAN, Principals

2126 California Street, San Francisco

Easter Term opens Monday, January 7, 1907, 9 a. m.

Twin Oaks Camp School.

Outdoor life on a Ranch for boys under fifteen.

Each boy has a tent-house and saddle horse.

Best of references.

Address

MISS MARGARET MARSH-PARKER,

SAN MARCOS, San Diego Co., California.

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL

Palo Alto, Cal. Home and Day School for Girls Intermediate and Primary Departments. Certificate admits to Stanford, Vassar and Wellesley. Number limited. Reopens August 20th.

MR. HUGO MANSFELDT

Announces his removal to 2090 Fell St., corner of Shrader. Telephone West 1736.

U. REVEL, A. M.

Post-Graduate from Florence Italy.

ITALIAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

918 Alice Street

Oakland

Mathematics and English.

University and preparatory subjects; no prescribed courses, but assistance given in any manner desired, either personally or by correspondence. Miss C. L. Williams, M. S., Mrs. G. S. Manchester, M. S., 218 El Granada Bldg., Bancroft Way, Berkeley, Cal.

PORTLAND OREGON

St. Helen's Hall

A girl's school of the highest class. Corps of teachers, location, building, equipment—the best. Send for catalogue.

School opens September 17, 1906

Holiday Books

FINE ART POETRY
HISTORY
FICTION JUVENILE

M. H. FAY

Importer and Bookseller

1534 Bush Street

Bet. Van Ness Ave. and Franklin St.

LIBRARIANS TAKE NOTICE

PROBATE SALE

Full set (except 1856) of SAN FRANCISCO DIRECTORIES for sale, including Kimball's for 1850, Parker's for 1852-53, LeCount and Strong's for 1854, Langley's for 1855 to 1895 (both inclusive), and Crocker-Langley's from 1896 to 1904 (both inclusive); in good condition.

Address: JOSEPH HUTCHINSON
1117 Mission Street San Francisco, Cal

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors Supply-houses, Business Men and Corporations.

Allen's Press Clipping Bureau
Kohl Building

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. Bridge & Co.

Merchant Tailors

1176 O'Farrell Street

STAGE GOSSIP.

Dramatic Notes.

Mrs. Fiske, after delighting Milwaukee and Chicago with her new play, "The New York Idea," written by Langdon Mitchell, finally reached Manhattan and was no less happily received, but it is asserted that the vogue of the actress would carry even a worse dramatic effort to success. The drama is said to be "a jocose comedy of comical divorce," and to contrast sharply with Mrs. Fiske's preceding successes, "Mary of Magdala," and "Leah Kleschna."

Pbobe Davies has played the part of the sorrowful heroine in "Way Down East" for nine years, but at a recent matinee performance in Chicago she assumed the role of Kate Brewster and had a change from tears and sigbs to smiles and laughter.

Maude Adams has made of Barrie's "Peter Pan," the most winsome and attractive of her many stage "creations." New York wanted more when Miss Adams and the Charles Frohman company went to Boston, and there the audiences demanded extra matinees. Manager Frohman announces that Miss Adams will inaugurate a new theatre in San Francisco next June.

New York critics differed seriously in their appraisal of Mme. Alla Nazimova, the Russian actress, who made her debut recently in the metropolis, as Hedda Gabler. Some said she had attained the front rank of English-speaking actresses at a bound, and others proclaimed her a disappointment and a bore. The majority, and her audience, favor the higher estimate, and the newcomer is not utterly cast down.

Robert Mantell has added the role of Brutus in "Julius Cæsar" to his repertoire, appearing for the first time in that part in New York last week.

"The Rose of the Rancho," written by Richard Walton Tully, and first produced in California under the title "Juanita," has been revised by David Belasco, and was brought out November 27 at the Belasco Theatre in New York. Frances Starr plays the leading role, and the play is said to be a success.

The corner-stone of a new theatre in Philadelphia, to be named for Edwin Forrest, was laid November 27, by Fritz Scheff, who was pleased with the honor conferred on her. Many prominent theatrical people were present, as well as municipal and State officials.

"Nelly Neil" is the title of the musical play, written by C. M. S. MacLellan, author of "The Belle of New York," "Leah Kleschna," and other successes, in which Edna May will return to the London stage. It will be lavishly mounted by Manager Charles Frohman.

At the recent sale of the late J. L. Toole's hooks and curios in London, an autograph letter of Lord Nelson to Lady Hamilton, brought $190; two amusing letters from Dickens to Macready, sold for $23.75; and two pages from the manuscript of Thackeray's "Philip" brought $150. Fred Terry bought a snuff-box, once the property of the famous Grimaldi, for $52.50

Musical Notes.

"San Francisco Bay" is the title of one of the songs in Harry B. Smith's new musical comedy, "The Parisian Model," in which Anna Held is appearing in New York. Truly Shattuck is a member of the supporting company.

The opera season in New Orleans opened November 20 at the historic old French Opera House with "Carmen," given by the San Carlo Opera Company, Mme. Irma Baldini singing the title role, Senor Constantino as Don Jose, and Senor Seguro as Escamillo.

Albert Chevalier and Yvette Guilberte will not visit the Pacific Coast after all, as the French singer has been recalled to Paris to prepare for engagements there.

H. B. Pasmore, the San Francisco teacher and composer, is now teaching in Berlin. His three daughters have appeared in the German capital several times in concert, playing trios for piano, violin and 'cello, and have won regard for their talent.

The much talked of Gilbert and Sullivan revival begins at the Savoy Theatre in London on December 8. "The Yeomen of the Guard" is to receive the first representation, and this will be followed by "The Mikado." The season will be watched curiously to see if these works prove as popular with the present generation as they did with the last.

Gabrilowitsch, Russian Pianist, to Appear.

The first of the great pianists to visit us in New San Francisco will be Ossip Gahrilowitsch, the young Russian pianist, whose phenomenal success here some five years ago will never be forgotten by those fortunate enough to hear him. At that time the young man was not yet twenty-four years of age, and since then he has become one of the acknowledged musicians of Europe, not only as a performer but as a composer and orchestral conductor. Daniel Frohman, the great theatrical manager, was the first to discover the young genius in Paris, and although entirely out of his line he immediately engaged the brilliant artist for his first American tour.

After the long absence he will warmly welcomed by our music loving public who owe much to Manager Greenbaum for having the courage to go on making contracts with the world's greatest stars, notwithstanding his heavy losses in the late disaster. Greenbaum never doubted his native city and kept every agreement and contract he entered into before April 18.

The concerts in San Francisco will be given Tuesday evening, December 18, and Saturday afternoon, December 22, at the new Lyric Hall, now completed at the corner of Larkin and Turk streets. The programmes will be exceptionally interesting and may be obtained at the box office at the opening of the sale next Saturday morning, December 15, at Sherman Clay and Co.'s, on Van Ness just above California.

Gabrilowitsch will play at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, Thursday afternoon, December 20. Seats for this concert will be ready next Thursday at the theatre box office.

Prices for this engagement will be $1.50 and $1.00, including reserved seats.

Schumann-Heink is announced for late in January.

The New Lyric Hall.

San Francisco's first new ball for entertainments, lectures, concerts, dances, and social functions is now completed and is under the management of Will. L. Greenbaum, who has named it Lyric Hall, in memory of his old place on Eddy street, which was the scene of so many pleasant affairs and concerts. The hall was erected by Mrs. George Fife. The new hall is conveniently located at the corner of Larkin and Turk streets. It can be reached easily from every part of the city, the Larkin street and Eddy street lines passing the door.

The hall is very prettily decorated and illuminated, with splendid ventilating and heating facilities, is on the ground floor, has perfect acoustic properties, and is supplied with cosy parlors, smoking-rooms, etc., which make it a most agreeable place for cotillions, etc. The dance floor is particularly good. The entire place is furnished in tasteful and refined style, and those planning cotillions, dances, etc., for the winter season should inspect it. For concerts, lectures, and meetings it is an ideal auditorium.

The Orpheum.

Julius Steger, the well known operatic baritone, will make his first appearance in San Francisco this Sunday afternoon at the Orpheum, assisted by William H. Pascoe, Miss Helen Mar Wilcox, and John Romane, an accomplished harpist. The medium for his introduction will be a musical-dramatic playlet, entitled "The Fifth Commandment." Katherine Nugent, who as Flora Wiggins, the tough girl, was the hit of the "College Widow" at the Columbia Theatre last year, will make her first vaudeville appearance and give imitations. Mlle. Dziria, a terpsichorean artist, and Charles Serra, a gymnast, will also be new to this city. Palfrey and Hoefler, comedy bicyclists, will complete the list of newcomers. The four Lukens, Bellman and Moore, the Kochly brothers, and Orpheum Motion Pictures will complete a varied programme.

AMUSEMENTS.

WILL. L. GREENBAUM announces
GABRILOWITSCH
The Russian Pianist
at the new and elegant LYRIC HALL
corner Larkin and Turk Sts.
Tuesday Eve, Dec. 18 Saturday Matinee, Dec. 22
YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE
Oakland
Thursday Matinee, Dec. 20
Prices $1.50 and $1.00
S. F. box office: Sherman, Clay & Co's, next Sat., Dec. 15
Oakland " Ye Liberty, next Thursday, December 13

ORPHEUM
Week Commencing Sunday Matinee Dec. 9
Matinee Every Day Except Monday
5—Big New Acts—5
JULIUS STEGER AND COMPANY;
Katherine Nugent; Mlle. Dziria and her Dancer; Charles Serra; Palfrey and Hoefler; Bellman and Moore; Kochly Bros.; Orpheum Motion Pictures and Last Week of the FOUR LUKENS.
PRICES—10c, 25c, 50c. Down town Box Office
at Donlon's Drug Store, Fillmore and Sutter Sts.
Phone, West, 6,000.
CHUTES AND ZOO—Open daily from 10 a. m. till midnight. Admission 10c; Children 5c.

RACING! RACING!
NEW CALIFORNIA
JOCKEY CLUB
OAKLAND TRACK
Six or more Races each Week Day
RAIN OR SHINE
Races start at 1:40 P. M. sharp
For Special Trains stopping at the Track take the
S. P. Ferry, foot of Market Street, leaves at 12, thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 p. m.
No smoking in last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.
Returning, trains leave the track after fifth and
last races.
PERCY W. TREAT, Sec.
THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

BRACELETS
THERE IS NO LARGER NOR
FINER STOCK OF THIS
The Most Popular
Form of Jewelry
THAN THAT OFFERED BY
Bohm-Bristol Co.
SOUTH-WEST CORNER OF
Van Ness Ave. and Sacramento St.

W. V. N. BAY B. L. STONE
Stone & Bay Co.
1344 VAN NESS AVE.
Between Sutter and Bush
RUGS ORIENTAL ALL SIZES
DOMESTIC
Draperies, Lace Curtains, Portieres
Couch Covers
A VISIT WILL BE APPRECIATED

EAMES TRICYCLE CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF INVALID
Rolling Chairs
FOR ALL PURPOSES
FOR THE DISABLED
INVALID CHAIRS
Wholesale & Retail and For Rent

HOLIDAY BOOKS

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS' new book

REAL SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE

In his great novel, "Soldiers of Fortune," Mr. Davis described the ideal adventurer. Here he tells even more brilliantly the true and extraordinary histories of such men as General William Walker, Baron Harden-Hickey, General MacIver, Winston Spencer Churchill, and Capt. Philo Norton McGiffen, and Burnham, chief of scouts.

Illustrated, $1.50 net, (postage 12 cents).

CAMP FIRES IN THE CANADIAN ROCKIES

By W. T. HORNADAY

Illustrated with photographs by J. M. Philips

"Written in a lively and popular style, and abounding in thrilling adventure, it is also a valuable contribution to the natural history of the region."—N. Y. Tribune.

$3.00 net (postage 24 cents).

BY ITALIAN SEAS

By ERNEST C. PEIXOTTO

Illustrated by the author

"Without exception" this is one of the most entertaining books on travel it has been our good fortune to meet with, pleasant reading, vivid description, bright and genial tone."—Philadelphia Press.

$2.50 net (postage extra).

THE QUEEN'S MUSEUM and other Fanciful Tales

By FRANK R. STOCKTON

Illustrated in colors, $2.50

The best and most popular of Stockton's inimitable fairy stories, full of the whimsical humor and gay spirits that make them perfect of that kind, and beautifully illustrated in sympathetically quaint and fanciful manner.

THE FIRST FORTY YEARS OF WASHINGTON SOCIETY

From the Letters and Journals of Mrs. Samuel Harrison Smith (Margaret Bayard). Edited by Gaillard Hunt.

A brilliant volume of reminiscences filled with vivid anecdotes of such men as Jefferson, Madison, Clay, Jackson. A valuable and highly interesting addition to American history.

Illustrated, $2.50 net, (postage 20 cents.)

JEFFERSON

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, New York

VANITY FAIR.

The New York Horse Show had some exciting incidents as well as a continuous procession of picturesque events.

The thousands of brilliantly gowned women and men in evening dress tiered about the tanbark oval in the banks of seats, or walking about the wide promenade, saw a thrilling runaway one night while the ring was filled with horses shown under the saddle. Jasmine, a fiery brown mare and a frequent winner, pranced into the ring with a large field of saddle horses, ridden by Shirley Carter, in high hat and frock coat, for her owner, Rufus L. Patterson. Jasmine tossed her head and kicked up her heels in protest against the proceedings. Mr. Carter urged her on, and then the mare bolted to the middle of the ring, and Mr. Carter's top hat went one way and he another. He landed on his feet, and a groom caught Jasmine and held her. Mr. Carter's hat was restored to him and he climbed back into the saddle. After circling the ring once on her good behavior, Jasmine bolted in earnest and it looked as though she would take the east fence and abruptly join the promenaders. There was a scattering of men and women indicative of their unwillingness to share the walk with Jasmine. Mr. Carter was sent clear over the mare's head and landed unhurt in the soft ring, but Jasmine, finding herself free, ran at top speed about the ring. All proceedings were stopped and the riders gave their full attention to getting out of the way. Mrs. John Gerken was riding her horse Surprise in the ring at the time, and was one of the coolest persons there. Jasmine circled the ring both ways several times, dodging grooms, and was stopped by a pretty catch of her bridle ring by a man who stood near the gate.

Mrs. "Dick" Donnelly, one of the best known of the women whips who show horses in the tanbark ring, was not allowed to drive Reginald Vanderbilt's Barrington in the contest for the Ladies' Prize, the highest trophy for exclusively women drivers at the show. Mrs. Donnelly went to New York from Chicago for the sole purpose of driving Mr. Vanderbilt's entry in this event, in accordance with an agreement made last summer. She was ready to enter the phaeton when she suddenly learned from Mr. Vanderbilt's own lips that she had been disqualified as a professional, and her place was taken by Miss Gladys Bloodgood, the young daughter of H. K. Bloodgood, of Boston, and a member of the famous Bloodgood family. Mrs. Donnelly immediately made a protest to the officers of the association, and declared she would establish her standing as an amateur, even if she had to take her case to the courts. Mrs. Donnelly declared she not only had never been paid for her services, but even had refused gifts and always had paid her own expenses.

Will the horsemwomen of the coming generation ride astride and with the divided skirt, or will they cling to the old-fashioned, conservative side-saddle? If the signs of the times are to be read aright in the light of this year's Horse Show, the fact would appear to be that while the women riders of today are somewhat slow to discard the sidesaddle, they are teaching their young daughters to dispense with it and to ride astride as the boys do.

Two classes shown afford a capital test of this interesting problem. In class 85 appeared 11 children, none more than 12 years old, riding ponies under the saddle. There were five girls and six boys in the competition, and of the five girls all but one was riding astride. The single exception, though it was doubtless the fault of her mount rather than of her method, was unplaced in the awards. First, second, and third honors, on the other hand, all went to the girls who rode astride. Miss Margaret Weyler, a perfect little horsemwoman, who had already ridden several of the Holloway mounts to victory, won the blue ribbon, with Charles Holloway's bay gelding Cardiff.

Virginia hunting stock was vindicated in the final trials for the Corinthian qualified hunters. The riders appeared in full hunting costume, the scarlet coats making a brilliant center in a picture from which the large afternoon crowd, then at its height, afforded an effective frame.

In one spectacular ring exhibition of the Horse Show the blue ribbon of victory was pinned to the headstall of a horse that a few months ago was earning his oats between the shafts of a cab in Syracuse. But dancing under a weight of jingling harness in the lead of Alfred G. Vanderbilt's road four of grays, the former cab horse easily was a peer of the thirty-two horses shown, and aided materially in winning the first place for himself and harness mates.

Cabby was the name of this horse, who was cast for a minor role in the social scheme of the horse world until he fortunately fell under the eye of a young millionaire, whose hobby is the exhibition in the show ring of the best horses that money and experience can bring to his extensive stables, but, since he has found his rank in a higher sphere, he is known as Viscount Cabby.

The Kaiser sat in a London motor omnibus in the course of a visit to the Berlin automobile show, which opened early in November. His majesty hastened to make up for his inability to open the show by spending two hours there, and inspecting over a hundred separate exhibits.

The emperor, when he reached the stand of the Stoeover Company, learned that two hundred of this firm's motor omnibuses, made in Germany, are running through the streets of London. This interested the Kaiser so keenly that he asked to have the mechanism of the London omnibus minutely explained to him.

Then he climbed into the glittering new vehicle and sat down in order to acquaint himself with its luxurious interior. He remarked that he would like to have one like it for the accommodation of his shooting parties. He showed himself a master of motor technique.

She was a very beautiful woman and she was very beautifully dressed, says the Chicago Record-Herald report. She entered a Randolph street theatre at last Saturday's matinee with a woman friend and handed her seat checks to an usher. As she swished and frou-froued down the aisle she appeared a personification of all that is exquisite.

The usher, the beauty and the friend arrived at the fourth row from the footlights. The usher turned down the seats and bowed low as he handed back the checks. The beauty spoke:

"Is them seats ourn?" she demanded shrilly.

The usher did not wince. He bowed "thrice as low as before.

"Them seats is yourn," said he.

Pears'

My grandmother used Pears' Soap; perhaps yours did, too. We owe them gratitude for that.

Use Pears' for the children; they soon acquire the habit.

Established in 1789.

PRINTING CARES of Business People taken care of by

SPAULDING-GRAUL COMPANY

Formerly GEO. SPAULDING & CO.

being a concern where the wants of those desiring Printing, Lithographing, Bookbinding, Designing, Engraving, Etc., are given prompt attention. Give us a trial.

914 Howard Street at Fifth

Phone Temp. 2351

San Francisco

HOTEL COLLINGWOOD

35th St., between 5th Ave. and Broadway

NEW YORK CITY

New fire-proof hotel, located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.

Positively exclusive. Service a la carte.

P. Centemeri & Co.

KID GLOVES

New Location

1551 Van Ness Ave.

Between Pine and California

San Francisco

"La Questa"

A LUSCIOUS OLD RED WINE

For Sale by

L. M. WALTER Corner California

and Devisadero Sts

McCAW BROS. - - - 401 Devisadero

and

Producer:

E. H. Rixford

Kohl Building, San Francisco

If you are going East use the

California Limited

The Finest Train Across the Continent

Palace Pullmans, Observation, Library, Smoking, Dining Cars.

Every luxury will be found on this train.

See the

SANTA FE AGENT

FERRY BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO

BANKING.

Steamer Day Abolished

The long established, but in many respects objectionable, custom of fortnightly settlement of accounts by specie payment, is to give place to the more convenient method of paying by check. The

California Safe Deposit and Trust Company

Pays Interest on Checking Accounts

and extends to its customers every possible courtesy and convenience. You are cordially invited to open an account at the Home Office or any of our branches.

HOME OFFICE

California and Montgomery

West End Branch 1531 Devisadero

Uptown Branch 1850 Geary, near Fillmore

Mission Branch 927 Valencia

Mutual Savings Bank

710 Market St., Opposite Third

SAN FRANCISCO

Guaranteed Capital.....$ 1,000,000

Paid-up Capital.....300,000

Surplus.....320,000

Assets.....10,000,000

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities.

Officers—President, James D. Phelan; First Vice-President, S. G. Murphy; Second Vice-President, John A. Hooper; Secretary and Cashier, Geo. A. Story; Asst. Secretary and Asst. Cashier, C. B. Hobson; Attorney, Frank J. Sullivan.

Directors—James D. Phelan, John A. Hooper, Frank J. Sullivan, Jas. M. McDonald, S. G. Murphy, James Moffitt, Rolt. McElroy, Charles Holbrook, Rudolph Spreckels.

French American Bank

Union Trust Building (Third Floor)

Ready to accommodate its customers and do a general banking business. We will collect on insurance policies for those wishing our services.

THE FRENCH SAVINGS BANK

occupies offices in the same building.

Officers—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Bocqueraz, Vice-President.

Directors—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Berg-erot, E. J. DeSahla, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, J. J. Mack, Geo. Belaney, Leon Kaufman.

Our Branch Bank is Now Open

at No. 810 Van Ness Avenue, near Eddy St.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$ 2,552,719.61

Capital actually paid up in cash.....1,000,000.00

Deposits, June 30, 1906.....38,476,520.22

F. Tillmann, Jr., President; Daniel Meyer, First Vice-President; Emil Rohte, Second Vice-President; A. H. R. Schmidt, Cashier; Wm. Herrmann, Asst. Cashier; Geo. Tourny, Secretary; A. H. Muller, Asst. Secretary; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

Board of Directors:

F. Tillmann, Jr., Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, N. Ohlandt, J. W. Van Bergen, E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

Helping the Homeless

The Continental Building and Loan Association

Has helped build up several interior towns and cities of California but for the next few years its funds will be used to help restore the burned homes of San Francisco

Dr. Washington Dodge, President
Gavin McNab, Attorney.
Wm. Corbin, Sec'y and Gen'l Mgr.

Office: Corner Market and Church Streets

J. S. DINKELSPIEL

Importer of

Diamonds, Precious Stones

1021 Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

Fine Set Pieces a Specialty

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Once, in Nice, an Englishman and a Frenchman were about to separate on the Promenade des Anglais.

The Englishman, as he started toward the Cercle Mediterranee, called back:

"Au reservoir!"

And the Frenchman waved his hand and answered:

"Tanks!"

A lady was reproaching a bachelor friend for never having married, when her husband, a little bored, perhaps, said gruffly:

"He says he could have cut me out and married you if he had wanted to."

The lady started.

"Indeed!" she cried. "Why didn't he do it, then?"

"He says he owed me a grudge," the husband explained with a chuckle.

In a New Jersey suburb the town officers had just put some fire extinguishers in their big buildings. One day one of the buildings caught fire, and the extinguishers failed to do their work. A few days later at the town meeting some citizens tried to learn the reason. After they had freely discussed the subject one of them said: "Mr. Chairman, I make a motion that the fire extinguishers be examined ten days before every fire."

There is an old story of a simple Highland lass who had walked to Glasgow to join her sister in service. On reaching a toll-bar on the skirt of the city, she began to rap smartly with her knuckles on the gate. The toll-keeper came out to see what she wanted.

"Please, sir, is this Glasgow?" she inquired.

"Yes, this is Glasgow."

"Please," said the girl, "is Peggy in?"

Nothing can surpass in delicacy the reply made by an East Indian servant of the late Lord Dufferin when he was Viceroy of India.

"Well, what sort of sport has Lord Blank had?" said Lord Dufferin one day to his servant, who had attended a young English lord on a shooting excursion.

"Oh," replied the scrupulously polite Hindoo, "the young sahib shot divinely. But Providence was very merciful to the birds!"

Mrs. Langtry said of the unpleasant and impertinent questions that, under the new customs rules, had been put to her on her landing in America. "They reminded me of that lawyer's bill which is sometimes quoted to show what a lawyer, at his worst, can be. I don't remember all the bill's items, but two of them were:

"To waking up in the night and thinking about your case, $7.50.

"To dining with you after the case was lost, $5."

A certain professor was giving his pupils a lecture on Scotland and the Scots. "These hardy men," he said, "think nothing of swimming across the Tay three times every morning before breakfast."

Suddenly a loud burst of laughter came from the center of the hall, and the professor angrily asked the offender what he meant by such conduct.

"I was just thinking, sir," replied the lad, "that the poor Scottish chaps would find themselves on the wrong side for their clothes when they landed!"

A bright young man was engaged in a desultory conversation with a prominent financier of a most economical disposition, when the great man suddenly invited attention to the suit of clothes he was then wearing.

"I have never believed," said he, "in paying fancy prices for cut-to-measure garments. Now, here's a suit for which I paid fifteen dollars and fifty cents. Appearances are very deceptive. If I told you I purchased it for fifty dollars, you'd probably believe that to be the truth."

"I would if you told me by telephone," replied the young man.

In a Broadway cafe a man with a string tie, long moustache, and slouch hat, who bore in every detail the "South of Mason and Dixon's line" trademark, listened to a stage veteran, who was saying:

"Yes, we were playing the Jarrett and Palmer circuit in Othello, and—"

The Southerner's eye brightened at the familiar word.

"I saw that play once!" he broke in, delightedly. "Down in Nashville, I—"

"What did you think of it?" queried a bystander.

"Mighty good show," agreed the Southerner. "There was a nigger named Salvini in it, and I couldn't see but what the coon acted as good as any of the white folks they had."

There is a custom in French jurisprudence that sanctions the consultation by a judge, in provincial courts, with colleagues on the bench when sentence is to be passed upon certain classes of malefactors.

"What ought we to give this rascal, brother?" a judge in the Department of the Loire once asked the colleague on his right.

"I should say three years."

"What is your opinion, brother?" This to the colleague on the left.

"I should give him four years."

Whereupon the judge, assuming an air of great benevolence, said:

"Prisoner, not desiring to impose upon you a long and severe term of imprisonment, as I should have done if left to myself, I have consulted my learned brethren and shall take their advice. Seven years."

A Frenchman now visiting London has discovered why the ballet over here is as far in advance of the ballet in Paris as French drama is ahead of English drama, declares the London Chronicle. Coming away from one of our best music-halls in ecstasies, he put the matter briefly but clearly. "It is true," he said, "that the ladies of your ballet have more beautiful figures than ours, and why? In England your girls are tall and scraggy—and you can put on. In France, our girls are short and fat—helas! mon ami, you can not take off!"

Specially adapted to Asthmatics; always relieves, generally cures. Brooks' Homoeopathic Cough Syrup; 25c, at druggists.

A. Hirschman

Jeweler and Silversmith. Now at 1641 Van Ness Avenue, bet. California and Sacramento Streets.

A nervous old lady in a skyscraper hotel, on being assigned to a room on the nineteenth floor, asked the bell hop nervously if the proprietor had taken any precautions against fire.

"Yes, ma'am," said the bell hop; "he has. The place is insured for three times its real value."

Drs. Barkan & Sewall

Specialists for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat are now located at 1700 California street, corner Van Ness Avenue.

First Editor—"I tell you, we're getting on fast. Why, I got a license for my paper in two weeks." Second Editor (an old hand)—"Yes, things do happen fast nowadays. In three weeks they'll confiscate your type, in four weeks they'll suppress your paper, in six, you'll be bankrupt, and in seven you'll starve."—Russ.

Korn The Hatter

Now at 926 Van Ness Avenue Near Ellis Street.

Dr. J. J. Henderson

Specialist for Eye, Ear and Throat 1434 Post St., near Octavia.

The Fifth of November, Guy Fawkes' Day, was celebrated throughout Great Britain with more than customary enthusiasm, and this year effigies of soap trust magnates and suffragettes were offered to the flames after being paraded.

W. & J. SLOANE & CO.

ORIENTAL RUGS

Connoisseurs advise intending purchasers to buy from a reliable establishment, owing to the diversity of weaves and the difficulty in recognizing their value. All our Rugs are selected as individual pieces. Our stock therefore offers the choicest examples obtainable of Oriental Rugs.

Van Ness Ave. and Sutter St.

Nordhoff Grill

1545 Pine Street
Below Van Ness Ave.

Finest and Largest Dining Room in the City

Merchants' Lunch 11 A. M.
to 2 P. M. Daily

Ladies' Afternoon Teas
and Dinner Parties a Specialty

THE EMPORIUM

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Headquarters for Toys and Holiday Goods

Useful articles are something which is appreciated by every one. Among some very acceptable gifts which are sometimes overlooked, we suggest a book, which is always a reminiscence of the giver. For the holidays we offer some exceptional values, quite interesting, and along new channels of thought:

A Gift Book—Gray Mist

A story of Brittany by the author of the "Martyrdom of an Empress," extremely fascinating to the finish . $1.50

A Japanese Blossom

by Onoto Watana, with full page illustrations in colors, so interesting you can not lay it aside till finished, $2.00

The Christy Book.

The American Girl as seen and portrayed by Christy. In its class it is by far the most beautiful book ever published, and is the handsomest and most popular gift book of the season. Price $2.50

Send all your mail orders to THE EMPORIUM, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Golden State Limited

between

CALIFORNIA—CHICAGO

DAILY

LEAVE SAN FRANCISCO
ARRIVE CHICAGO

5:00 P. M.
10:15 P. M.

ELECTRIC LIGHTED
OBSERVATION PARLOR CAR
BEST OF DINING SERVICE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The engagement is announced of Miss Charlotte Wilson, daughter of Mrs. Russell J. Wilson, to Mr. George Cadwalader.

The engagement is announced of Miss Elizabeth Schenck, daughter of the late Colonel Schenck, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., to Captain Charles C. Smith, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A.

It is announced that the marriage of Miss Janet Watkins, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Watkins, to Mr. Harry Dimond, will take place on Wednesday, December 12, at St. Stephen's Church. The bride will have no attendants and Mr. Louis Sloss will be the best man.

The wedding of Miss Mary Small, daughter of Mr. H. J. Small, to Lieutenant Arthur J. Fisher, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., took place on Wednesday evening last, at the bride's home on Broadway. The ceremony was performed at nine o'clock. The bride's sister, Miss Barbara Small, was the maid of honor and Miss Edna McClatchy, of Sacramento, and Miss Pearl Seeley, of Los Angeles, were bridesmaids. Lieutenant Barber, Engineer Corps, U. S. A., was the best man. Only relatives and intimate friends were present.

Invitations have been received from Dr. and Mrs. Sowers to the marriage of their daughter, Eleanor Kerfoot, to Major Samson L. Faison, U. S. A., on Wednesday, December 19, at 1707 Massachusetts Avenue, Washington, D. C. The ceremony will be performed at twelve o'clock noon, in the presence of a limited number of guests, but others are invited to the wedding breakfast, at 12.30 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hopkins entertained at a large tea on Saturday last in honor of their daughter, Miss Lydia Hopkins, who made her debut on this occasion. Among those receiving with Mrs. Hopkins and Miss Hopkins were Mrs. Mountford S. Wilson, Mrs. Evans S. Pillsbury, Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. J. B. Crockett, Mrs. Sherwood Hopkins, Mrs. William Kohl, Mrs. Rosenstock, Mrs. J. R. K. Nuttall, Mrs. Augustus Taylor, Mrs. Chauncey Rose Winslow, Miss Mary Josselyn, Miss Linda Cadwalader, Miss Marguerite Barron, Miss Maizie Langhorne, Miss Julia Langhorne, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Frances Coon, Miss Lucy Gwin Coleman, Miss Louise Boyd, Miss Christine Pomeroy, and Miss Alice Herrin.

Mr. Horace D. Pillsbury entertained at dinner on Wednesday evening of last week at the Burlingame Club, his guests being Mr. and Mrs. Laurance Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Martin, Miss Jennie Crocker, Miss Virginia Jolliffe, and Mr. Edward M. Greenway.

Miss Helen Ashton was the hostess at a luncheon on Monday of last week, at which she entertained Miss Lucy Gwin Coleman, Miss Maizie Langhorne, Miss Christine Pomeroy, Miss Louise Boyd, Miss Helen Thomas, Miss Floride Hunt, and Miss Maude Payne.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Fred Kohl will entertain at dinner on Tuesday evening next at San Mateo in honor of Miss Lydia Hopkins.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a resume of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hobart and Miss Mary Eyre have returned from a fortnight's sojourn at Truckee and Tahoe.

Mrs. William S. Tevis and her four sons went down last week to their ranch near Bakersfield.

Miss Laura McKinstry spent Thanksgiving at Burlingame with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sadoc Tobin.

Royal Baking Powder

Absolutely Pure

DISTINCTIVELY A CREAM OF TARTAR BAKING POWDER

Royal does not contain an atom of phosphoric acid (which is the product of bones digested in sulphuric acid) or of alum (which is one-third sulphuric acid) substances adopted for other baking powders because of their cheapness.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Mrs. Adeline Easton returned on the Siberia from the Orient, where she has been sojourning for several months, and has gone to her home in San Mateo.

Miss Cora Jane Flood arrived last week from New York, where she has been for the past six weeks.

Count and Countess Fabbri are to leave San Francisco very shortly for Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where Count Fabbri has been appointed Italian vice-consul.

Mrs. James E. Robinson has recovered sufficiently from her recent illness to leave the hospital and is now at the home of Judge and Mrs. Cooper, on Pacific avenue. She and Miss Ethel Cooper will leave shortly for Santa Barbara.

Mr. Horace Blanchard Chase has returned to his country place in the Napa Valley, after a trip to Mexico.

Mrs. Russell Wilson, Miss Emily Wilson, and Miss Charlotte Wilson spent the week-end at Del Monte.

Miss Lily McCalla spent Thanksgiving at Santa Barbara with her parents, Admiral and Mrs. McCalla.

Mr. Frank S. Houghteling sailed last week for Europe for some months' travel.

Mrs. Frank H. Johnson, who has been ill in this city for a fortnight past, has recovered sufficiently to return to her home in San Rafael.

Mr. Norman Livermore, Mr. Sidney Salisbury, and Mr. Wilherforce Williams are living in the H. P. Livermore house on Russian Hill, for the winter.

Mrs. Paolo de Vecchi and Miss Marguerite de Vecchi have recently arrived here from the East and Europe for a visit. Dr. de Vecchi will remain in Baltimore this winter.

Miss Sarah Redington, of Santa Barbara, and Miss Frances Taylor will sail today (Saturday) from New York for the Mediterranean and will be abroad some time.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Pringle are to erect a house in Fair Oaks shortly.

Miss Eleanor Phelps has returned to her home in Oakland after a visit to Mare Island.

Mr. Charles Baldwin has returned to his home in Colorado.

Mrs. R. H. Postlethwaite and Miss Margaret Postlethwaite have returned from a lengthy sojourn abroad.

Mrs. E. A. Selfridge, Jr., has been visiting Miss Grace Baldwin at the latter's home on Lyon street.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Huntington came up recently from their home in Southern California for a visit to relatives here and in Berkeley.

Mrs. W. L. Oge and Miss Alice Oge, of San Rafael, have recently gone down to Santa Barbara for a stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Rodman Pell have returned from the East.

Miss Jeanette Hooper has returned from a visit to Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote and Miss Betty Foote in Grass Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. George Heazelton have returned to San Rafael after a week's stay at Del Monte.

Mr. Frederick Greenwood has returned to Belvedere after a trip to Goldfield.

Dr. and Mrs. Harold Brunn, who since their marriage have been residing in Los Angeles, have returned to San Francisco to remain permanently, and are now living at 1720 Broadway.

Miss D. Honig, of 1528 Bush street, has just returned from New York.

Mrs. Russell Wilson, Mrs. Charles Josselyn, and Miss Marjorie Josselyn went to Del Monte during the week en automobile. The others of the party who went by train were Miss Wilson, Miss Charlotte Wilson, Miss Gertrude Josselyn, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Chesebrough, Mrs. A. N. Dibblee, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Dibblee, Mrs. F. M. Clarke, Miss Booth, Mrs. J. G. Kittle, Mr. George L. Cadwalader, Mr. W. M. Thurston, Mr. G. L. Rathbone, Mr. Allen J. Kittle, Mr. J. C. Kittle, Mr. F. E. Booth, Mr. Charles J. Freehorn, and Mr. Lawrence McCreary.

Miss Geraldine Bonner and Miss Lora Hyde have been staying at Carmel-by-the-Sea for Thanksgiving holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Rollo V. Watt have returned to San Francisco after a short stay at Del Monte.

Mr. George Wharton James, of Pasadena, has come from Del Monte to San Francisco, where he is to deliver a lecture.

One of the cleverest craftsmen in San Francisco in repairing and restoring damaged silverware, is John O. Bellis of 1624 California street. Since the great fire he has had some difficult pieces of silverware to restore, but no matter how badly battered and burned he has succeeded in satisfying his patrons. These damaged family treasures in the hands of John O. Bellis are sure to be cleverly restored to their original form.

David Bispham, the American singer, sang the title role in a new light opera, "The Vicar of Wakefield," at its first presentation on November 12 in Manchester, England. Both opera and singer were warmly received.

ARGONAUTS FOR OUR FILES.

We would be glad to have any of the following numbers from any disconnected copies of the Argonaut that our readers have and are willing to part with.

Numbers Required to Complete an Argonaut File.

Volume VI, 1880—Nos. 6, 13, 15, 17, 18, 22, 24, 26.

Volume VII, 1880—Nos. 3, 8, 14, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24.

Volume IX, 1881—Nos. 1, 3, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.

Volumes X and XI, 1882—All numbers. Volumes XII and XIII, 1883—All numbers.

Volumes XIV and XV, 1884—All numbers.

Volume XVI, 1885—All numbers.

Volume XVII, 1885—Nos. 1, 2.

Volume XX, 1887—Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

Volume XXI, 1887—Nos. 11, 13, 22, 23.

Volume XXII, 1888—Nos. 3, 7, 11, 18, 25.

Volume XXIII, 1888—No. 3.

Volume XXIV, 1889—No. 6.

Volume XXV, 1889—Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19.

Volume XXVI, 1890—Nos. 21, 23.

Volume XXVII, 1890—No. 1.

Volume XXVIII, 1891—Nos. 1, 7.

Volume XXIX, 1891—Nos. 8, 12, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22.

Volume XXX, 1892—Nos. 6, 20, 22, 24.

Volume XXXI, 1892—Nos. 2, 3, 7.

Volume XXXII, 1893—No. 16.

Georgia Cayvan, formerly a member of the old Lyceum Theatre stock company of New York, died in Flushing, L. I., November 19, aged 45. Twelve years ago Miss Cayvan was voted a diamond star at the actor's fund fair in Madison Square Garden, as the most popular actress on the stage.

Eagleson & Co.

The Old Reliable

Men's Furnishers

Holiday Goods

Neckdress
Shirts, Gloves
Underwear
Night Robes
Bath Robes
Etc.

1453 FILLMORE

Two Doors from O'Farrell Street

For Sale at a Great Bargain

Seagoing Gasoline Schooner Yacht LILIAN. Most Magnificent Pleasure Boat on the Pacific Coast. Owner being unable to use same for year or more prefers to sell rather than have yacht remain idle. Dining room and galley on deck; four large state rooms, saloon and bathroom below deck all finished in mahogany. Yacht is completely found in every respect, and everything is in excellent condition. Further particulars of FRANK N. TANDY, P. O. Box 2684, San Francisco.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Marie L. Sweeney

Formerly of 121 Post

Is Now Located at

1536 Bush Street

WITH A COMPLETE STOCK OF EXCLUSIVE STYLES IN MILLINERY

HARTSHORN

SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart

Hartshorn on label.

Get "Improved," no tacks required

Wood Rollers

Tin Rollers

CLUBBING LIST FOR 1907.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes.

American Magazine and Argonaut	$ 4.25
Argosy and Argonaut	4.35
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut	6.20
Century and Argonaut	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut	4.35
Criterion and Argonaut	4.35
Critic and Argonaut	5.10
Current Literature and Argonaut	5.90
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut	4.70
Forum and Argonaut	6.00
Harper's Bazaar and Argonaut	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut	4.50
Judge and Argonaut	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut	6.70
Life and Argonaut	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut	6.20
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut	4.35
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut	8.00
Out West and Argonaut	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut	5.90
Puck and Argonaut	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut	5.75
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut	6.50
Smart Set and Argonaut	6.00
St. Nicholas and Argonaut	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut	5.25

ELECTRIC LAMPS

A GIFT THAT IS ARTISTIC, USEFUL AND VERY ACCEPTABLE

They come in various sizes and shapes; representing heroic figures, etc., beautifully draped—some with one light, others holding several—suitable for living room, parlor or den. One design represents a beautiful feminine figure, cleverly draped, holding a rose branch, and a light in the place of the rose—price $6.50. Also a large assortment at $15 and $20.

Nathan-Dohrmann Co.

1520-1550 VAN NESS AVENUE

PERSONAL

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Rear-Admiral William T. Swinhurne, U. S. N., transferred his flag last week from the U. S. S. Chicago to the cruiser Charleston, in this bay.

Colonel Charles H. Nohle, U. S. A., retired, and Mrs. Nohle, spent last Saturday in this city en route from Fort Seward, Alaska, where Colonel Nohle has until recently been in command of the Tenth Infantry U. S. A., to San Antonio, Texas, where they will spend the winter.

Colonel Edward E. Delevo, U. S. A., Chief Commissary, department of California, returned to the Presidio on Friday of last week, after two months' leave of absence, spent in Europe, and principally in Paris, with his daughter, Mrs. Woodruff.

Lieutenant-Colonel George M. Dunn, U. S. A., Judge Advocate, department of California, returned last week from a month's leave of absence, spent in Washington, D. C.

Lieutenant-Colonel George L. Anderson, Inspector General U. S. A., is detailed as a member of the Army Retiring Board, Presidio, of San Francisco, vice Colonel John L. Clem, Assistant Quartermaster General, U. S. A.

Lieutenant-Colonel Louis Brechemin, Deputy Surgeon General, U. S. A., has been granted one month and twelve days' leave of absence on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

Major Henry C. Morrow, Judge Advocate, U. S. A., sailed on Wednesday last for the Philippines, where he has been ordered for duty. He was accompanied by his mother, Mrs. Morrow.

Major Harry Benson, Fourteenth Infantry, U. S. A., who has been on duty in the Yosemite Valley, returned to the Presidio last week.

Major Willis T. May, Fifteenth Infantry, U. S. A., was in this city last week, en route to the Philippines.

Major Ira A. Haynes, Military Secretary, U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence for one month and ten days.

Major John Couhelin, U. S. A., recently promoted from a captain, has been assigned to the field artillery and on the expiration of his present leave of absence, will proceed to Cuba and assume command of the Eleventh Battery Field Artillery (mountain).

Commander W. McLean, U. S. N., has been detached from the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, and ordered to the Asiatic station, sailing from San Francisco on January 5.

Captain Franklin J. Draher, U. S. N., formerly on the U. S. S. Wisconsin, is at his home in Gasport, N. Y., on waiting orders.

Captain William C. Wren, Quartermaster U. S. A., is relieved from duty as quartermaster, Camp Columbia, and is assigned as department quartermaster, Marianao, and in charge of construction work at Camp Columbia, with station in Havana.

Captain B. M. Purcell, Paymaster, U. S. A., has recently gone to his station in Boston, Massachusetts, from Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Captain Bertram C. Gilbert, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., who is now a patient at the hospital at Vancouver barracks, has been ordered to proceed to the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, for observation and treatment.

Captain Lorain T. Richardson, Twenty-Second Infantry, U. S. A., who was granted two months' leave of absence, has had that leave extended for one month.

Captain George A. Nugent, Quartermaster, U. S. A., arrived in Manila on the transport Thomas, and reported to the Chief Quartermaster of that division for temporary duty under his direction with station at Manila.

Captain Henry H. Rutherford, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, left for Washington, D. C., on Wednesday last, in charge of a number of insane patients to be placed in the government hospital for the insane.

Captain Irving W. Rand, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., arrived in the Philippines on the transport Thomas, and on reporting to the commanding general, department of Luzon, was ordered to proceed to Fort William McKinley, Rizal, for temporary duty.

Chief Engineer William B. Dunning, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Dunning, sailed last Saturday from New York to Naples, and will remain abroad for some time.

Lieutenant Zeno E. Briggs, U. S. N., formerly of the U. S. S. Wisconsin, has reported for duty at Puget Sound navy yard, Washington.

Lieutenant Arthur G. Fisher, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence for one month and fifteen days.

Lieutenant Kirwin T. Smith, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., who has been a patient at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, will leave shortly for his proper station, Fort William Henry Harrison, Montana.

Lieutenant E. E. Scranton, U. S. N., has been detached from duty in charge of the naval recruiting station, Denver, Colorado, and ordered to duty at the naval station, Tutuila, Samoa, sailing from San Francisco on December 27.

Lieutenant Howard S. Baily, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., who is a nephew of Mrs. John F. Swift of this city, has been relieved from duty in the department of Mindanao, and ordered to proceed to Manila, reporting to the commanding general department of Luzon, for assignment to duty.

Lieutenant Peter R. Horton, U. S. M. C., is detached from the Marine Barracks, navy yard, Mare Island, and ordered to Atlanta, Georgia, as assistant to the officer in charge of the Marine Corps recruiting office in that city.

Surgeon V. C. B. Means, U. S. N., has been detached from duty at the Naval and Marine recruiting stations, San Francisco, and ordered to the navy yard, Mare Island.

Assistant Surgeon F. M. Shook, U. S. N., is detached from duty at the navy yard, Mare Island, and ordered to the naval hospital, Mare Island.

Election Night Rowdiness in New York.

The night of election day has come to be recognized as an annual carnival in New York. This year it surpassed itself—in an unfavorable way, remarks the New York Evening Post. A celebration which ought to have been a pleasing exhibition of American good nature and willingness to accept in good spirit the verdict of the majority was turned into a rowdy and demoralizing demonstration. Of course, there was plenty of sane and wholesome fun, sometimes rough and familiar, but the trouble was that it did not stop there, but degenerated into downright ruffianism, which was everywhere evident and sometimes in complete control.

The ruffianly, as opposed to the carnival, spirit, reached its height on Fourteenth street, between Union Square and Third avenue. A crowd of men and boys lined up for over a hundred feet on either side of the walk on the south side of the street, opposite Tammany Hall, armed with fish horns or sticks. Every person who wished to pass had to run the gauntlet. Men's derbies were hattered by blows from all sides, and women's hats were torn. The blows fell on hands and heads as well as hats, and to resist meant positive danger of personal injury. Two policemen stood watching this from across the street, and were finally appealed to by a couple of men to stop it. They protested that it would take a dozen men to do it, but, in fact, these two men broke up the crowd in ten seconds once they went at it. Later, the trouble started again in a smaller way, and with nobody else to stir the police up, continued intermittently.

Although Fourteenth street saw perhaps the roughest of last night's carnival, it was not confined there. All up and down Broadway, from Fourteenth to Forty-second street, there was rowdiness enough to make respectable people question the wisdom of turning out on future occasions if such tactics are to prevail. In some restaurants the damage done must have almost counterbalanced the additional profits from the crowds. At one popular cafe near Madison Square waiters had to be stationed to hold back the doors against crowds of men who were not wanted, and were trying to storm the place by force.

J. Pierpont Morgan has received from Europe two scrapbooks, each filled with manuscript valued at $25,000 each, and upon the two Mr. Morgan has paid $10,000 duty. The manuscripts pasted in the two books are the originals of the best poems of Robert Burns, and of many of his impassioned letters to ladies and his creditors.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Mayer (nee Son) has been brightened by the advent of a daughter, born on November 25 at their home on Broadway.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles McIntosh are rejoicing in the advent of a little son in their home.

A Poor Man's Prayer.

Protect me, Lord, from these, Thy saints,
The sanctimonious few;
O, save me from their clutches
When my mortgages come due.
O, lead me not into their hands,
These brethren, long and pale,
Who call this earth "A Vale of Tears,"
(And promptly seize the "Vale.")
O, put me not into their power,
These too uncommon good,
Who teach us what we shouldn't do
And preach us what we should.
These saints who squeeze a shilling twice,
And wear cheap aureoles;
Who take our children's bread and then
Attempt to save our souls.
Give me instead a human man,
With some few human stains
That show he has the common blood
Of manhood in his veins,
And heart that overflows sometimes
To overthrow constraints;
But in my need, protect me, Lord,
From these, Thy hungry Saints.
EMANUEL ELZAS.

Lord Charles Beresford, who has just been given the highest sea command in the British navy, with the rank of admiral, is in his sixty-first year. Admiral Bosanquet, who relinquishes the Particular Service Squadron, is sixty-three, or a year older than any American officer on the active list. The new commander of the Mediterranean station, Sir Charles Drury, is eighty-seven. Vice-Admiral Curzon-Howe, the new head of the Atlantic fleet, is fifty-six. The chief of the new Home Fleet, Rear-Admiral Bridgman, who is fifty-eight, did not reach his present rank until he was fifty-five. Prince Louis of Battenberg, second-in-command of the Mediterranean squadron, is fifty-two. Farragut was sixty years of age before he obtained flag-rank, and sixty-one when he fought his greatest fight.

Three Chilean engineers are on their way to San Francisco to study the reconstruction of the city. They are C. Hoernig, D. Galvo McKenna and D. Del Canto, all graduates of the University of Chile. Immediately after the earthquake at Valparaiso the young men were sent on their tour of investigation. After a short stay in San Francisco they will return to Chile.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Houghton are rejoicing in the advent of a little daughter in their home last week.

The White House

Holiday Gifts
Electric Portables

Large and Complete assortment ranging from $7.50 to $225.00

ART ROOMS

TAKE ELEVATOR

Raphael Weill & Co., Inc.

N. W. Corner Van Ness Ave. and Pine St.

Any Solid Silverware

that passed through the fire, of which there is a fragment left,

Perfectly Restored

To any person having this work to be done I can show wonderful results at my shop, having restored some of the choicest silver in the city.

Specialty of trophies and presentation cups. Suitable designs submitted on application.

Gold and Silver Plating.

JOHN O. BELLIS
Manufacturing Silversmith

1624 California Street Near Van Ness Ave.

A. Zellerbach & Sons
PAPER DEALERS

Now Located at

Volkman Bldg., 416 Jackson St., San Francisco
Branch: 514 Eleventh St., Oakland

FULL SUPPLY OF ALL KINDS OF PAPER

FOR YOUR WEDDING AND CHRISTMAS GIFTS

—GO TO—

GUMP'S

CHINA, PICTURES, MARBLES, GLASS-WARE, ELECTROLIERS, FRAMING, BRONZES, DESK SETS, SMOKING SETS

1645 California Street

JUST BELOW VAN NESS
Tel. Franklin 624

Open Evenings Until Christmas

Newman and Levinson.

Van Ness Avenue and Sutter Streets - - San Francisco

INVITE YOUR INSPECTION OF AN UNRIVALED COLLECTION OF

Holiday, Anniversary and Yuletide Gifts

now on exhibition in their establishment. By means of Merchandise and Glove Certificates, available in any department, two perplexing problems are solved — two questions answered:

“WHAT SHALL I GIVE?”
“WHAT SIZE DOES SHE WEAR?”

Purchase a Merchandise Certificate or a Glove Certificate
AND YOUR HOLIDAY DIFFICULTIES ARE OVER

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

Ready for business at 1165 O'FARRELL ST., bet. Franklin and Gough

Pianos Tuned, Repaired, Moved and Stored

SOHMER-CECILIAN PLAYER-PIANOS

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Mrs Knicker—"Does your husband say things behind your back?" Mrs. Bocker—"Only when he huttons my waist."—New York Sun.

Today is short. Yesterday has passed. Tomorrow may not come, hence you have no time to waste. If you contemplate doing something, better be at it.—Pittsburg News.

Woman (expecting a call from her lover)—"Oh, this waiting is something terrible! I can't stand it. (To maid.) Sophie, go outside and ring the hell three or four times, hard!"—Tales.

"I suppose your motto is 'Be sure you're right and then go ahead.'" "Not in the financial game," answered Dustin Stax. "My motto is, 'Be sure you're ahead, then you're all right.'"—Washington Star.

First Artist—"Have you sold your last sketch?" Second Artist—"Not yet. Don't you see, everybody's talking about Rembrandt? We must wait until all that noise is over."—Humorist's Blatter.

Convicted Prisoner—"But you told me that they couldn't electrocute me, and here I am sentenced to die on Friday!" Able Attorney—"If they electrocute you I'll have 'em indicted by the grand jury."—New York World.

Traveler in Parlor Car—"Porter, that man in front will give you a quarter for dusting him off, won't he?" Porter—"Yessir." "Well, I'll give you half a dollar to leave the dust on him and not brush it off on to me."—Somerville Journal.

"That man is one of my friends," remarked the novice in public life. "Which kind?" responded Senator Sorghum. "Friends, you know, are divided into two great classes: those whom you need and those who need you."—Washington Star.

A Scotch advocate, limping down High Street in Edinburgh, overheard a lady say to her companion, "That is Mr. C., the lame lawyer." Turning around, he replied, "No, madam, I am a lame man, but not a lame lawyer."—Christian Register.

Tom—"Well, darling, I have seen your father and he has given his consent." Grace—"He approves of love in a cottage, then?" "No, but he says that a girl who spends as much time golfing and motoring as you do really has not much need of a home."—Tattler.

"Where was he struck by the automobile?" asked the coroner. "At the junction of the dorsal and cervical vertebrae," answered the surgeon. "Will you please point that out on the map?" asked the coroner, indicating one that hung on the wall.—Chicago Tribune.

In a trolley accident in New England an Irishman was badly hurt. The next day a lawyer called on him and asked if he intended to sue the company for damages. "Damages?" said Pat, looking feebly over his handgates. "Sure, I have thim already. I'd loike to sue the railway for repairs, sor, av ye'll take the case."—Youth's Companion.

The daring explorer had reached the North Pole. "Well, which way now?" asked his assistant. The explorer looked irresolutely around the horizon. "Dashed if I know!" he muttered. Then his brow cleared. "Can't you see?" he said. "We've found all the north there is. We'll have to go south!" Merely stopping long enough to eat another dog, the party started in the general direction of the South Pole.—Chicago Tribune.

"Well, sir?" said the great lawyer. The visitor spoke tremulously. "I am a defaulter," he said, "and I want you to defend me." The other shook him by the hand. "Certainly I will defend you, my friend," he murmured kindly. "And how many hundred thousand did you say—" Hundred thousand?" the client interrupted. "Oh, sir, don't think me worse than I am. It is only $490 in all, and I expect to pay back every cent before I die."

"George," he said to the office hoy, "show this dishonest rascal out."—Kansas City Journal.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

To Pedestrians.
Be good,
Be kind,
Beware
Behind.
—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Gobbler Cameo.
I feel a sweet drum solo
Right through my spirit hum;
The gobbler's are the drumsticks,
My appetite's the drum.
Harper's Weekly.

Resourceful.

"Let never wine-glass touch your lips,"
My pa has made this law,
I can not disobey him, so,
Bartender, add a straw.
Princeton Tiger.

The Wail of the Rounders.

(Written for Kolb and Dill by K. K. K.)
QUAKE I.
I long for a look in at Zinkand's,
For the good old days at Swain's—
Where music and color and gladness,
Fairly hustled society's mains.
I crave for the smoke of the Orpheum
And the hoodlums applauding long,
While I dream of dinners at Marchand's
With never a thought of wrong.

SHAKE II.

My memory goes out to the Palace—
To the "Setters" there warming the chairs.
I wonder what's happened the "Dearies,"
With their smiles and dehonair airs?
Oh, carry me hack to old Frisco—
The Frisco I used to know—
Strolling her streets at night time
In the electric's glare and glow.

SHOCK III.

I'm sick of reading the fog-wash
That tells of the gas-pipe thug.
And I gag at the dust and debris
That disfigure my lovely mug.
I'm tired of viewing the ruins,
With their tangles of iron and stone.
So weary of ceaseless rubbering,
So tired of drinking alone.

TEMBLOR IV.

'Tis the damndest old wreck of a city
That graces this mundane sphere,
But I never will yield to sadness,
And I never will shed a tear.
And I'm growing distressingly healthy
In the sunlight and air of the shacks.
And I'll stay with the game of rebuilding
Till I die of old age in my tracks.

MOTHERS BE SURE AND USE "MRS. WINSLOW'S Soothing Syrup" for your children while teething.

"He's a great reformer, isn't he?"
"Oh, he's worse than a reformer. His ideas would upset the whole social and business world. He said if he had his way he'd put in jail everybody who ought to be there."—Philadelphia Press.

Any remedy that will relieve a teething baby or a feverish child is invaluable. Steedman's Soothing Powders have done this for fifty years.

A London doctor says every mau should have a silent hour at home each day. There are men who will lean to the opinion that it would be easier to have their silent hours away from home.—Chicago Record-Herald.

NEXT SUNDAY GO TO BYRON HOT SPRINGS.—You can leave Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, returning Sunday afternoon or Monday morning. Two days at the Springs, and the entire expense of the trip is $7.50. This includes the railway fare, transportation from railway station to hotel and return, a delightful ride of two and a half miles, accommodations at the beautiful Byron Hot Springs Hotel, and use of the wonderful mineral baths, all for $7.50. Try it.

Mt. Tamalpais Railway

Via Sausalito Ferry—Foot of Market St.

Lv. San Francisco	W'kday	Sun.	Leave Tamalpais	Sun.	W'kday
9:30 A	8:25 A		10:40 A	1:05 P
9:50 A	9:50 A
11:00 A
1:45 P			1:05 P
	1:45 P		2:30 P	4:30 P
Saturday			4:30 P	Saturday
4:35 P	3:15 P		5:45 P	9:30 P

Legal Holidays, Sunday Time

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

OUR STANDARDS

Sperry's Best Family.
Drifted Snow.
Golden Gate Extra.

Sperry Flour Company

MAIN OFFICE: 133 SPEAR ST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Notice of Assessment

Fireman's Fund Insurance Company

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that at a meeting of the Directors held on the 7th day of November, 1906, an assessment of three hundred (300) dollars per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately to Louis Weinmann, the Secretary of said corporation, at its office No. 401 California Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the tenth day of December, 1906, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on the twenty-sixth day of December, 1906, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

LOUIS WEINMANN,
Secretary of the
FIREMAN'S FUND INSURANCE COMPANY.
Office: 401 California St., San Francisco, California.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Co.

OF HARTFORD
ESTABLISHED 1850

Cash Capital$1,000,000.00
Cash Assets5,340,136.94
Surplus to Policy-Holders2,414,921.16

Benjamin J. Smith
Manager Pacific Department:
525 THIRTEENTH ST., OAKLAND
San Francisco Office:
2310 CALIFORNIA STREET

For YOUR

BREAKFAST

GERMEA

At All Grocers

The Johnson-Locke Mercantile Co.

AGENTS

714 Broadway, Oakland

AUTOMOBILES

Runabouts = = = $700
Reo Touring Cars = $1400

Immediate Delivery

J. W. LEAVITT & CO.
441 Golden Gate Ave.

REMOVAL NOTICE

JOHN G. ILS & CO.

Beg to announce their removal to their permanent store

827-829 MISSION STREET

Between Fourth and Fifth Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

OUR SPECIALTIES:

HIGH GRADE FRENCH RANGES AND BROILERS
BAKERY AND KITCHEN SUPPLIES

Steamship Lines

AMERICAN LINE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—SOUTHAMPTON
St. Paul.....Dec. 8 | St. Louis.....Dec.
New York.....Dec. 15 | Philadelphia.....Dec.
Philadelphia—Queenstown—Liverpool
Noordland.....Dec. 1 | Haverford.....Dec.
Merion.....Dec. 15

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT LINE
NEW YORK—LONDON DIRECT

Minnetonka.....Dec. 8 | Minnehaha.....Dec.
Minneapolis.....Dec. 22 | Mesaba.....Jan.

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE

NEW YORK—ROTTERDAM—VIA BOULOGNE
Sailings Wednesdays as per sailing list.
Statendam Dec. 5, 10 a m | Ryndam Jan. 23, no
Ryndam Dec. 19, 7 a m | Potsdam Feb. 6, 10 a
Potsdam Jan. 2, 6 a m | Statendam Feb. 20, 10 a

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP—PARIS

Vaderland.....Dec. 5 | Zealand.....Dec.
Finland.....Dec. 12 | Kroonland.....Jan.

WHITE STAR LINE

NEW YORK—QUEENSTOWN—LIVERPOOL
Oceanic.....Dec. 5 | Majestic.....Dec.
Celtic.....Dec. 12 | Oceanic.....Jan.
Baltic.....Dec. 19 | Teutonia.....Jan.

Boston—Queenstown—Liverpool.

Arabic.....Dec. 6 | Cymric.....Dec.

To the Mediterranean and Egypt, via Azores

FROM NEW YORK

Cretic.....Jan. 5, noon, Mar.
Cedric.....Jan. 5, Feb. 16
Celtic.....Jan. 19, March 2 (21,000 Ton)

FROM BOSTON

Canopic.....Jan. 12, 8:30 a m, Feb.
Republic.....Feb. 2, 1 p m, March

G. N. KOEPEL, Pass. Agt. Pacific Coast.
Room 207 Monadnock Bldg., San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

ORIENTAL S. S. Co. have opened their general offices at 217-221 Brannan Street
SAN FRANCISCO

S. S. Nippon Maru (Calls at Manila) Dec. 28, 1906
S. S. Hong Kong Maru (Calls at Manila) Jan. 24, 1907
S. S. America Maru - - - - - Feb. 13, 1907

Steamers will leave wharf, corner First and Brannan streets 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamers for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, corner First and Brannan Sts. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

Thos. Cook & Son

Now Located

1168 Broadway, Oakland

And North Nave, Ferry Building
San Francisco

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

Have Plenty of Every Kind of

PAPER

Phone Temporary 1273

473 TO 475 SIXTH STREET
San Francisco

The Argonaut.

Vol. LIX. No. 1553.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 15, 1906.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10; payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscription to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 1711 San Pablo Avenue, Oakland. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications intended for the Editorial Department thus: "Jerome A. Hart, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal." To insure consideration, manuscript submitted for publication, must be typewritten.

Address all communications intended for the Business Department thus: "The Argonaut Publishing Company, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal."

Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Buildings, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear, and by the Denison News Company on its boats and trains.

Published at San Francisco, California. Temporary Office, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, California.

THIRTIETH YEAR

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

JEROME A. HART - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: The President's Message—The Postoffice in Private Hands—Impulse and Misapprehension—Canons of Criticism—Japanese Naturalization—Adios Collection Day—State Rights Men Alarmed—San Francisco Bank Clearings—A New Treaty with Japan—American, Dutch, and Spanish Colonizers—Street Car Arbitration—The Education of Aliens—Do Not Pulverize Dunfy Yet—English Press Applaud Roosevelt—A White Man's Party	297-299
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR	300
ARE THEY UP TO THEIR JOBS?	300
CLANCEY JOHN DEMPSTER	301
ALDRICH'S BOHEMIAN CIRCLE: Brilliant and Frolicsome Young Men of Literary New York Fifty Years Ago	301
NEW YORK GRAND OPERA RIVALRY: Opening of Manager Conried's Season—Geraldine Farrar as Juliet—Caruso in "La Boheme"	302
POLITICO-PERSONAL	302
AN INVISIBLE DEMON: The Fantastic Coinage of an Opinion Eater's Brain	303
MAGAZINE MAKING AND UNMAKING: Contemporary History of the Evolution of a Monthly and Weekly	303
THE WILL OF AN EMPRESS: How Eugenie Won an Emperor and Governed a Prince	304
OLD FAVORITES: "Prescience," "Palabras Caronisas," "Nocturne," "I Do Not Vex Me with Growing Old," by T. B. Aldrich	304
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All Over the World	305
LITERARY NOTES: New Publications—Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip	306-307
ANITY FAIR	308
STAGE GOSSIP: Dramatic Notes—Musical Notes	309
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy	310-311
NEW ENGLAND AND THE WILD WEST: Views of Two Critics	312
TORVETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise	313
HE ALLEGED HUMORISTS	314
HE TUNEFUL LIAR	314

The President's Message.

Following will be found an abstract of President Roosevelt's message, dated December 3, 1906:

He recommends a law prohibiting corporations from contributing to campaign expenses, and another concerning upon the government the right of appeal on questions of law in criminal cases. He believes there should be a law to the effect that no judgments shall be set aside by the United States Courts on technical grounds; also one that will prevent any abuse of the power of injunction. While the President advocates an eight-hour day for employees in the United States, he is in favor of longer hours and alien labor on the Isthmus of Panama. He urges an investigation into the conditions of female and child labor. The employers' liability law is commended, and it is suggested that a federal commission be created with authority to investigate and report on labor disputes. He asks for legislation providing for the withdrawal from sale of public lands supposed to contain coal. He states that measures must be taken to exercise a more complete control over the great corporations, and favors permitting railroads to pool under supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The national government, he says, should impose a graduate inheritance tax, and, if possible, a graduated income tax. The President proposes that there be a constitutional amendment putting entire control of marriage and divorce in the hands of the federal government. He urges a ship subsidy bill, and currency legislation of some kind calculated to impart elasticity. He advocates free trade with the Philippines, citizenship for Porto Ricans, the appropriation of money for educational and internal improvements in Hawaii, and the reorganization of the government of Alaska. The President calls the provision of special schools for Japanese in San Francisco a "wicked absurdity," to remove which "everything that it is in my power to do will be done, and all of the forces, military and civil, of the United States which I may lawfully employ will be so employed." He also recommends that an act be passed providing for the naturalization of Japanese. As soon as a Cuban government is elected and installed, he explains, American occupation of Cuba will end. He refers to the Rio Janeiro conference with the statement that our delegates were instructed to join in the request that the Peace Conference at The Hague consider the question of collecting, by force, international debts founded on contract. Secretary Root's South American trip is also described. The President urges the ratification of the treaty with Morocco which resulted from the Algeiras convention. Referring to the destruction of the Pribilof Islands fur seals by pelagic sealing, he says that a war vessel will be sent to the islands next season to protect our interests. The message ends with a plea that the army and navy be maintained at their present strength at least, and that shooting galleries be established in schools, and rifle clubs be encouraged, that we may build up an efficient citizen soldiery.

The Postoffice in Private Hands.

The Congressional Postal Commission now sitting in Washington is hearing publishers and others in regard to the proposition of Assistant Postmaster-General Madden to quadruple the postal rates on newspapers. The somnolent nature of the sessions was broken upon the other day when publisher Boyce of Chicago seriously made to the commission the following proposition:

To take over the postoffice business of the country, thereafter to be run by a $50,000,000 private corporation under full government regulation.

To reduce all postal rates one-half; to establish a rural postal express and apply business methods throughout.

To pay the government rental for postoffice quarters, and charge it regular rates for its postal business.

To place in charge a well-known railroad traffic expert, to whom the place has been offered at $30,000 annually.

To eliminate all sinecures, politics, and the deficit.

To pay the government all profits above 7 per cent on capital.

Publisher Boyce says that his proposition is submitted in entire good faith, and that he has associates of large wealth who stand ready to provide the capital at once. If the Postal Commission will seriously consider his proposition, the names and required financial backing will be at once furnished.

It is not probable Congress will consider placing the postoffice in private hands. We do not know that it would be wise or expedient. But it is a biting comment on the way the postoffice department is conducted by the government that a private corporation is convinced that it can do the work at half the present rates, pay the government all profits above seven per cent, establish a rural package delivery, abolish the deficit, and make a good profit besides.

Impulse and Misapprehension.

The more President Roosevelt's message is studied, the more it seems that the passages attacking San Francisco are based on ignorance of the facts. After a long panegyric on the Japanese character, the President says:

"In almost every quarter of the nation the stranger from Japan is treated as he deserves. * * * But here and there a most unworthy feeling has manifested itself toward the Japanese, a feeling that has been shown in shutting them out from the common schools in San Francisco, and in mutterings against them in one or two other places because of their efficiency as workers. To shut them out from the public schools is a wicked absurdity. * * * It is a sure mark of a low civilization, a low morality, to abuse or discriminate against or in any way humiliate any stranger who has come here lawfully and who is conducting himself properly. I am prompted to say this by the attitude of hostility here and there assumed toward the Japanese in this country."

As a matter of truth, the records do not uphold these assertions. During the disorderly and lamentable conditions which have prevailed in San Francisco since the disaster of last April very many assaults have been made upon white persons in San Francisco, very few upon the Japanese. This the records of the police courts will bear out.

It is possible that even the ratio of population would show a less number, but of that we are not certain. Of this, however, we are sure, the number of assaults upon Japanese has been very small.

Furthermore, there is no "attitude of hostility" toward the Japanese in this city or State. There is, we believe, a feeling of dislike, but that exists between many races. And our observation shows that it always exists between the white race and the yellow races.

As to the accusation that the Japanese have been "shut out of the public schools," this is not true. Aaron Altmann, President of the Board of Education, says concerning this:

"Japanese children have not been excluded from the public schools of San Francisco. They have not been denied any of the advantages which are granted to the children of American birth and parentage. Not the slightest obstacle has been thrown in the way of their education. This false report arises from the fact that a section of the school law of the State of California, providing for a separate school for these children has been put into force and effect."

To which it may be added that the State law provides for separate schools for Orientals in the primary and grammar grades, but they are not excluded from the high schools, nor from the University, which is also a public school, supported by the taxpayers. From this it will be seen that these charges of the President are without foundation. We do not know from whom he obtained his information, but it is incorrect information. It has placed him in a false position from which he will be forced to recede.

Canons of Criticism.

New York, our greatest city, has temporarily turned her attention from continuous vaudeville to Shakespeare. Several companies in Gotham have simultaneously broken out in attacks on the sublime William. There seems to be marked differences of opinion as to the relative dramatic values of these Shakespearean productions. Some of the dramatic critics seem agitated over this—we think unduly so. If there are any canons of dramatic criticism, the world does not know what they are. There is no settled rule to determine whether a Shakespearean production may be classed as "good," "bad," or "indifferent"; or, to put it in more colloquial phrase, as the young lady of the period might say to her steady, whether it is "grand," "fine," or "rotten." Dramatic "criticism," therefore, means no more than the individual opinion of the individual criticising.

Nothing that any dramatic or musical critic ever said had the slightest effect on the success of any production whatever. "Il Trovatore," when produced in Italy some sixty years ago, was unanimously condemned by the critics. So was "Faust" when produced in Paris; so was "Carmen," when produced in the same city. So unanimous in their condemnation were the critics at the time that it must have inclined the philosophic mind to the belief that these operas would be successful. Such was the case. All three are among the most successful operas, and they hold the stage still. One may safely say that "Il Trovatore" probably was sung last night in at least twenty cities in different parts of the globe.

Mr. John Corbin, who is the dramatic critic of the New York Sun, is disturbed over the expression of such heterodox ideas as those we have just enunciated, to wit—that criticism has no canons; that it has no standards; that it is purely an expression of individual opinion; in short, that it does not matter at all. Mr. Corbin says that criticism is "a matter of self-expression—a creative art, though a minor one." The quarrel between the critics and the criticised is an ancient one, and one of the jeers flung at the critics by the victims has always been that they were "poetes manques"—poets who had failed to publish, painters who could not sell their canvases, sculptors who had to chisel tombstones for their bread and butter. But if Mr. Corbin be right and criticism is a creative art, what, in Heaven's name, does it create?

Japanese Naturalization.

The President in his message has requested that the Congress pass an act "specifically providing for the naturalization of the Japanese." From this we infer that the President believes the Japanese now are not eligible for naturalization. We sincerely trust he is right. Yet United States Circuit Judge Grosscup is quoted in an interview as saying:

"Any Japanese may become a citizen under the present laws if he is of good character, has resided five years in this country, and renounces his allegiance to the Mikado. The exclusion act applies only to the Chinese. I do not understand the President's meaning in this matter, nor do I understand what he means when he says that he will use all the forces of the United States, military and civil, which he may lawfully employ in the matter affecting the Japanese. * * * The national government has no right to make a treaty which will interfere with the regulation of schools by a State. That part of any treaty made by the national government which conflicts with a State's rights to regulate its own schools is void."

Adios Collection Day.

For many years the Argonaut has delighted in poking fun at that moss-grown relic of pioneer times, "Collection Day." Because half a century ago steamers used to sail twice a month for the other side of the hemisphere, San Francisco's merchants still considered it necessary to make bi-monthly collections as of yore. The puny power of the Argonaut availed little against this survival of the Paleozoic Age. It took a mighty upheaval from the lower rock-levels of Mesozoic Time to smash "Collection Day." But at last it has been smashed.

Apropos of the foregoing, we have received a note from Mr. S. M. Waterhouse of the Waterhouse and Lester Co., who says:

"Your statement that 'Collection Day' was almost universal in San Francisco was not quite correct. We know many concerns which have for years refused to recognize collectors at the cashier's desk, paying all accounts by check. Even before the fire the maintenance of 'Collection Day' was very inconvenient and expensive. The present congestion of the streets, the over-crowding of cars, the great distances, and the undesirability of carrying large sums make 'Collection Day' no longer possible. Payments should be made by check through the mails or by messenger. This has been the practice of the Waterhouse and Lester Co. for years."

We are glad to know that the Waterhouse and Lester Co. has followed this sensible practice for years, and that other houses have opposed the foolish, old custom of "Collection Day." Doubtless some mercantile Rip Van Winkles will still cling to the old custom, but there are people whom even earthquake and fire can not shake out of their ancient customs. For such there is no cure but the sound of the Archangel Gabriel's horn.

States' Rights Men Alarmed.

The remarkable stand taken by President Roosevelt against California's right as a State to conduct her own State schools is working in a way he evidently did not expect. It has aroused a strong feeling among the States' Rights men in Congress. This means the entire Southern delegation, together with a large contingent from the North. The government of this country has become highly centralized, but under the Constitution there are vested in the States still many rights of which they are most jealous. Mr. Roosevelt's threatening language and his vigorously expressed determination to coerce California into accepting Asiatics in her schools, have evidently aroused this feeling in Congress. The so-called Compulsory Pilotage bill was defeated in the House on December 7 by a vote of 164 to 110. Every effort was made to pass this bill. The Republican leaders attempted to insist on it as "a Republican measure"; Speaker Cannon, a great stickler for partisan loyalty, had his name called so that he could vote on the bill. But all these attempts failed. The States' Rights men declared that the bill was designed to interfere with privileges which the State had always controlled and always should control. Therefore, they defeated it. Any further attempt on the part of the Executive to encroach on the rights of the States will only arouse still further and more determined resistance.

San Francisco's Bank Clearings.

We have received several communications of late commenting on the great increase of bank clearances in San Francisco since the fire. Some of our correspondents ascribe the increase entirely to the large payments of insurance moneys to policy-holders. Others ascribe it entirely to the increase of business. Some satirical correspondents doubt the increase of business, and seem inclined to cast doubt on the correctness of the figures, which doubt is, of course, absurd.

It is our belief that while the insurance moneys have added to the volume of business, that this is not the principal cause of the increase. During the first five or six weeks after the fire policy-holders who had collected any insurance money were as scarce as white blackbirds. None the less, the clearances increased. Now, the square companies have very largely paid off their obligations; the payments which were pouring out in large volumes six weeks ago are now trickling slowly from the reluctant coffers of the "six-bit" companies. As for the crooked cockney and crooked sauerkraut companies, they have paid and are paying as little as they can help; they have been compromising on a pawnbroker basis, and are now threatening their policy-holders with a time-limit on their pawnshop compromise. But still the increase in clearances goes on.

What is the reason for this strange phenomenon? Can a city be devastated by earthquake and fire and still do a larger business than before? San Francisco has done an enormous business, it is true, but still it is scarcely credible that she has done more than before the fire. In our opinion, the explanation is simple. It is due to the enormous volume of business which, since the fire, has been transacted by check and which, prior to that disaster, was transacted in specie. Business men in other parts of the world could not believe, can not believe, and probably never will believe, that such an enormous volume of business could have been transacted in San Francisco by "canvas bag banking"; which means lugging around tons of gold and silver in sacks, settling accounts between the different mercantile houses with sacks, and finally making balances between the different banks with sacks. But whether they believe it or not, it is true. In our opinion the enormous increase in the bank clearances during the past six months largely represents the volume of business that previously was done by canvas-bag banking, had never figured in the bank clearances at all.

A New Treaty With Japan.

Semi-official rumors from Washington continue to be set afloat in the shape of trial balloons, as we hinted last week, to see which way the wind is blowing. Strong resentment has been aroused in California by the President's denunciation of the State for her attempt to conduct her schools in her own way. This has caused an evident attempt at Washington to make the administration stand more in line with public opinion in the far West and the South, the people of which sections are warmly sympathizing with the Pacific Coast. Therefore a rumor went out that "the President is negotiating a new treaty with Japan which will exclude Japanese coolies." This rumor was denied the next day. Probably it will be confirmed the day after tomorrow. But in whatever direction this administration trial balloon may blow, we would like to ask whether it is intended merely as a toy to amuse Californians. Why is there any necessity for making a new treaty to exclude Japanese laborers? The present treaty with Japan says that it does not "in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade, immigration of laborers, and public and private security, which are in force or may hereafter be enacted, in either of the two countries." Under this provision we have a perfect right to exclude Japanese laborers if we choose, and Japan has the equal right to exclude American laborers. Why then is it necessary to "negotiate a new treaty with Japan to exclude Japanese laborers?" If our government shall go through this solemn nonsense, it would mean merely securing something which we have already. If our government is weak enough to propose such a treaty, Japan will surely demand something in return for conceding a point which we already have won.

American, Dutch, and Spanish Colonizers.

We note with pleasure and surprise, that our fellow colonizers in Asia, the Dutch, have again put an end to their war in the Borneo archipelago. It has lasted for two centuries, and after a siege of many months the Hollander forces captured the mountain fortress where the rebels made their last stand. The assault was very similar to that in Samar, where our forces stormed a mountain Moro camp. The conditions in the Dutch possessions in the Borneo archipelago are very similar to those in the American possessions in the Philippine archipelago. The principal difference is that the Dutch have been subduing their Malays for two hundred years, and we have only been conquering ours for eight. The Dutch have conquered theirs a number of times before. This is about the two hundredth year, and their Malays have been conquered for about the two hundredth time. Spain had a similar experience in the Philippines. She was at it about four hundred years, and the accession of the Americans to power there was immediately preceded by another insurrection (against Spain) begun by Dr. Jose Rizal, and continued by Aguinaldo after Rizal had been executed. Our defeat of Spain was immediately followed by another Filipino insurrection—this time against the United States. If we conquer our Malays as rapidly as the Dutch did, we shall have them subdued in 2098 A. D. If we subjugate them as slowly as Spain, they will not be benevolently assimilated until 2298 A. D.

Street Car Arbitration.

The proceedings in the dispute between the United Railroads and its employes have dragged over a number of weeks, but are said to be approaching an end. It is sincerely to be hoped so. If injustice is being done to the carmen by the United Railroads, it ought to be stopped. If injustice is being done to the United Railroads by the carmen, it ought to be stopped. And if injustice is being done to the public by both of them, it certainly ought to be stopped.

The carmen are unanimous in testifying that their work is harder and more trying than it was before the fire. One conductor testified that in a single day on Fillmore street he carried 2325 passengers on nine trips. Another testified that the daily receipts on the Fillmore street line have more than doubled since the fire. A Sutter street conductor testified that eight months ago the daily receipts were from $25 to $30, and now they average about $70. All of them state that the cars are insufficiently equipped with sand boxes and brakes, and that most of the street car accidents are due to their insufficient equipment. All of them agree that the dust and dirt on the streets, coming from the plaster and mortar in the ruins, are almost unbearable. Many of them find it impossible to work without the use of motor goggles. This dust also, they say, ruins their uniforms, which they are obliged frequently to renew. With all of these statements the public will be disposed to agree. One conductor testified that he can seldom collect all the fares on a car because of the overcrowding, and that at the end of each day his nerves are so overwrought that he is almost in a condition of collapse. Questioned by counsel as to the effect on the nerves of the jarring and rattling of the cars and the crowding and questioning of the passengers, he replied that both were a severe trial to the temper and the nerves of conductors. He was asked what his occupation had been before he became a conductor on the United Railroads. "I was a guard in a lunatic asylum for three years," he answered. "Was not that good training for your present occupation?" questioned counsel, quizzically. "Yes, sir," replied the conductor, "but I found it much easier to manage the lunatics than I do the passengers."

Do Not Pulverize Duffy Yet.

In the midst of the dreadful clamor raised by our virtuous daily press demanding that all municipal officials shall at once be jailed, there have been of late a few innuendoes leveled at Commissioner Duffy of the Board of Public Works. Far be it from us to put any obstacle in the way of this euth-hound press, which with its nose—and its ear—to the ground, is following on the scent of scandality. The last thing that we would think of could be to retard this noble work in any way by ke-warm or adverse criticism. Whatever may be its motives—public spirit or private revenge—the daily press may accomplish something. True, it seems as yet to have accomplished nothing but great deal of noise and some bad smells. True, it has only succeeded in making the world believe that San Francisco is now suffering from a municipal upheaval worse than the earthquake or the fire which followed it. True, it has so impressed the world at large with this belief, that any prudent capitalist elsewhere would sooner waste his money in charity than to invest it in San Francisco. True, most of the witnesses who have come forward to back up the allegations of the dailies are panderers, prostitutes, and other persons whose callings and testimony are unfit for publication. But, never mind—let the good work go on, whatever its agents; even if they be evil, out of evil cometh good. The end justifies the means. Amen. So be it. Selah.

But, good and virtuous editors, spare us our Duffy. Let up on Duffy. As the editors sally forth into the tall timber with their mighty axes, let them hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may, let them not chop Duffy down. The present writer does not know Duffy, but so far as his observation goes, Duffy is the only member of the municipal government who is doing anything at all. On second thoughts we except from that remark the Board of Education, for they are certainly building some schools, and trying to get the money to build more. But with this exception let us again say that Duffy is the only man in the municipal government who is doing things. Duffy is cleaning the streets. Duffy is tearing down the dead walls. When the property owners refuse to remove their fallen bricks, Duffy chucks the bricks back on to the property owners' lots. More power to Duffy's elbow!

Let us pray the pitiless editors, therefore, that they will at least let up on Duffy until he gets the streets cleaned and the dangerous walls down. Then—but not until then—let them open out on Duffy.

"The Grand Jury for Duffy! Indictments for Duffy! The jail for Duffy!"

That is all very well. But let us keep Duffy until he gets things cleaned up.

The Education of Aliens.

Senator Rayner of Maryland introduced three resolutions in the Senate on December 5, declaring that in the opinion of the Senate the President has no right to enter into any "controversy" with any foreign government concerning the public school system of any State, and that it is the President's duty to notify the government of Japan that the public educational institutions of a State are wholly outside the jurisdiction of the federal government. The resolutions further declare that in the opinion of the Senate nothing in the treaty with Japan interferes with the right of California to control her public schools.

As a matter of fact, there is not a line or a word in the treaty which grants or implies to the Japanese any right of admission to the public schools. But even if there were such, the treaty would be an invasion of those rights and privileges which the States never delegated to the federal government. Therefore, such a treaty would not be worth the paper on which it was written.

A White Man's Party.

Senator Morgan, a couple of weeks ago, suggested that if the Democratic party wanted to find itself at the next election, it might go before the people with a single plank reading as follows: "The Democratic party is a white man's party." This proposition did not excite much attention when it was made. But since President Roosevelt has enunciated his extraordinary doctrine concerning the forcing of Asiatic children into seats with white children in the public schools of California, and naturalizing Asiatics against the law and against the will of the people, we fancy Senator Morgan's "party with a single plank" would meet with much favor on the Pacific Coast. It certainly would carry California; it probably would carry the whole of the Pacific Coast; and it might carry a majority in the United States.

English Press Applaud Roosevelt.

The London newspapers speak sympathetically of President Roosevelt's "embarrassing problem in the Western States," and say that in both South Africa and South Australia "similar anti-Asiatic feeling has created embarrassment for the Imperial authorities." There is a strong movement in several British colonies against the immigration of Mohammedans from the Asiatic colonies of Great Britain, and Australia recently offered to negotiate a preferential tariff with Great Britain "provided the goods were shipped in vessels not employing yellow seamen." This proposition the imperial government declined. The London newspapers point out to Mr. Roosevelt that "the Western States of America have no monopoly of anti-Asiaticism," and they add that Mr. Roosevelt's remarks "convey a lesson which might well be laid to heart in other quarters than that to which it is directly addressed." By which we suppose the London papers mean that for men of English blood residing in Canada, Australia, and South Africa to object to the importation of Asiatics is, as President Roosevelt says of the objections of Pacific Coast Americans, "a wicked absurdity."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

San Francisco's Harbor Front.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., NOV. 27, 1906.

EDITOR ARGONAUT: Your article on "San Francisco Harbor Front" creates an opening, and feeling that the Argonaut always wishes to assist and correct any evils that may occur, a few remarks as to some of the abuses on the harbor front may assist you, should you care to write for the good of the harbor.

It has been by those advocating changes on the water front generally to commence and form comparisons with other ports and other countries, and lose sight of our immediate needs and the corrections that should be made, and state the true conditions of what is required to help better the harbor front. The present system of construction with cement and piles, I am advised, will answer for many years, as the cement cylinders, as they are now constructed, should last indefinitely, only we want more wharves constructed in that manner; but in order to have wharves constructed properly and the business conducted as it should be, it will be necessary to have a governor who will appoint a commission of representative men to suggest some method that will put the water front on a more substantial working basis—something that will take away from the governor the power of appointing a water front commission of cheap politicians, or using the office in payment of some political debt; all the funds in the State will be of no use if expended in an improper manner, and the wharves given over to people that should not have them.

I call your attention to the Western Fuel Company—this concern has secured about the entire control of the coal produce of the Pacific Coast. They control the best part of three wharves on the north side of Market Street and four on the south side. They pay the State for the use of one side of each wharf (and conduct a business that makes the remaining side useless); for this they pay about $260.00 per month as a special privilege. Such a wharf constructed as the new wharves are now being built, would at least bring $500.00 per month for the special privilege—say nothing about the financial loss to the State. These coal bunkers should be removed to the south end around Mission Channel and should be the property of the State, and equal charges made to any person or company wishing to discharge coal, and not have it in such a manner as to help crush out any possible competition. These coal people have commenced to be one of the great monopolies of the Pacific Coast and will exact a great deal from the people of San Francisco as well as from the entire State.

If Mr. Gillett is as good a man as you seem to think he is, he ought, in some manner, to relieve this situation on the water front, as he seems to be free from the usual political obligations, but he will have to rise head and shoulders over any one who has been sent to Sacramento for a great many years. If the politicians are to run the "Front" as they have in the past, at the expiration of his term we will have the same old bunkers and the same poor facilities that we have had these many years.

I also call your attention to the use of the sea wall; it was created, as I understand, for the benefit of the grain men and farmers of this section of the State, and the privileges granted them should not be extended to grain merchants or people doing business from other States—that is the allowing of dumping cereals from the State of Oregon or Washington, occupying the space that should be open for the California farmer. This the governor can also correct and do a great deal of good for the farmer.

I would say that you are not doing justice to some of the steamship people here when you give so much praise to the U. S. Government. The government helped to save on the south side, but on the north side from Lombard Street to the Ferry was saved by the Spreckels Tow Boats, The Merchants' Tow Boat Company, The Pacific Coast Steamship Company, and The California Transportation Company. I mention this as it is but due them for the creditable manner in which they held many of their vessels at the wharves, at times at a great risk.

In closing will say that it is up to the governor to make the necessary appointment and secure people of the proper caliber to make the water front a success, and let us hope that we have found the right man.

Respectfully,

"WATER FRONT"

The Fruit and Flower Mission.

For something like a quarter of a century, there has arrived every year at the Argonaut office, on the day before Thanksgiving, the sum of fifty dollars for the San Francisco Fruit and Flower Mission, with a few kindly words accompanying it, signed "M. R. — M. F." Sometimes it would bear a foreign postmark, sometimes it would come from some point in the Eastern States, but generally from California. This year it came as usual, and we took great pleasure in forwarding it to the Mission. We have received this acknowledgment from Miss Gussie Mandelbaum, secretary of the Fruit and Flower Mission:

"We beg to acknowledge receipt of the donation of fifty dollars from our unknown friends 'M. R. — M. F.' The calamity of last April not only enlarged the circle of our dependents, but materially emphasized their needs, and has greatly widened the sphere of our ministrations. For whatever good this Mission accomplishes, the credit is largely due to our many friends, of whom 'M. R. — M. F.' are an illustrious example, in so substantially and so unostentatiously providing us with the means of continuing our humble efforts."

The "Argonaut" Criticised.

Colonel John P. Irish writes to us saying that the Argonaut's argument in favor of segregating the Japanese pupils in our public schools is "based on two false premises." The first (he says) is that we stated that the California school law makes it obligatory on school boards to provide separate schoolhouses for Asiatic children. Concerning this Colonel Irish remarks: "The law says that 'School boards shall have the power' to provide such separate schools, and therefore is permissive and not obligatory, leaving the discretion with the school boards."

The passage in our article was not textual; it did not pretend to give the wording of the law, merely the general tenor. But the sentence which Colonel Irish quotes from Section 1662 of the Political Code is followed by another which we print in italics: "Trustees shall have the power... to establish separate schools for the children of Mongolian or Chinese descent. When such separate schools are established the Chinese or Mongolian children must not be admitted into any other school." This second sentence is certainly obligatory; it forbids absolutely the admission of Chinese or Mongolian children to other public schools when separate schools have been established. It would be absurd to make such an obligatory provision when there were no separate school-houses. It would be unjust to make the erection of separate school-houses obligatory in small and poor communities which have barely funds enough for the erection of a single school.

Colonel Irish objects to the second passage in our article because (he says) it quotes "only part of Article VI of the federal constitution." The whole of Article VI reads: "The constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby; anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

"You proceed," says Colonel Irish, "to hang an argument on the word 'authority'."

We are quite willing to leave this or any argument hanging on the word "authority," when it is the authority of the United States. If President and Senate make a treaty invading any rights or privileges not expressly delegated to the federal government, such a treaty is not made "under the authority of the United States." It is made under the authority of President and Senate. They have a good deal of authority, but not all of it. The President and Senate are not the United States—yet.

Furthermore we would like to call attention to the Tenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people."

Any treaty negotiated by President and Senate, in so far as it violates these powers, is void.

Colonel Irish says that another false premise was made by the Argonaut in this hypothetical remark: "If the United States government can set aside the school law of California by which she segregates the white, yellow, and black races in her public schools," etc. He remarks: "The law of California does not segregate the black, or negro, race in her public schools."

True, but California has done so in the past. And she can do it again. Not only has the law of California segregated the white and black races in her public schools, but her right to do so was affirmed by the California Supreme Court some thirty years ago. The non-existence of such a law at present is because some communities are so poor that they are unable to provide for separate schools.

Siemens and Dabner.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., NOV. 23, 1906.

Editor Argonaut: I have made careful investigation of our payrolls covering both strikes of the Stablen's Union against our Association, and find the claim of Dabner and Siemens, that they were in our employ, to be absolutely unfounded, a search of the records of the offices of the Citizens' Alliance, under which we operate, demonstrates that they were never in the employ of that Association either.

Yours truly,
L. C. WHITE,
Secretary Stable and Carriage Owners' Assn.

ARE THEY UP TO THEIR JOBS?

Is the world really up to its job? It is an open question. Lord Roseberry in opening a lunatic asylum the other day said he found it extremely difficult to discover any convincing reason for the increase of lunacy, and he could only suggest that the asylums became fuller because it was impossible for people with slow-moving brains to keep pace with the times in which we lived.

Is the modern man overtaxed by what he has to do? In short, is the average man up to his job? By this we do not mean the carpenter who hangs doors which when shut will not open and which when open will not shut; the gas fitter who fits gas pipes so that they leak and asphyxiate the heedless citizen; the motorman who fails to put on brakes and kills the passer-by; the architect who erects a steel-frame building so that it has to be torn down; the architect who erects a concrete building so that it falls down.

No, we do not refer to these ordinary every-day men who are not up to their jobs, but those persons on the higher levels of life who have extraordinary jobs. How about them?

Are the leaders among men up to their jobs? It would seem doubtful, judging from recent events. One of the most notable is, of course, the election in New York State, where Mr. Hughes stood at the head of the poll, and where Mr. Hearst after a strenuous campaign was defeated. Yet both Mr. Hearst and Mr. Hughes had in charge of their campaigns men who were admitted to be "capable men." Mr. Hearst's men admit, by affidavit, spending over a quarter of a million, the Republican managers similarly admitted spending over a third of a million, the New York papers estimate the real amount disbursed at over two and a half millions.

New York is the greatest State in the Union. It is the richest, the most prosperous, the most populous, and has nearly eight millions of people. Surely out of eight millions Mr. Hearst and Mr. Hughes ought easily to have secured some capable man to run their campaigns. But did they? It would seem not, for both of New York's political parties seem to be much disappointed at the result.

Departing for a moment from the political side, let us ask is it always easy to get capable men in other pursuits? Probably more time, attention, and money are lavished on the art of killing men than any other human pursuit. When it comes to killing his neighbor, man is never economical. At present the great powers of Europe have under arms some millions of idle men who live upon the labor of other toiling millions. The idle warriors' only duty is to kill their fellow men in case of need. Upon the oceans ride great fleets of battleships, cruisers, and torpedo-boats, also devoted to the killing of men, and costing other millions. This country, which is ostensibly a peaceful one, is now planning a bigger battleship than the British Dreadnought, which but yesterday was the levianth man-killer of the universe. Today it is the Japanese Satsuna. When we have excelled both Dreadnought and Satsuna doubtless Germany or France will try to excel both us and Japan in size and destructiveness of battleships, if Great Britain has not already done so. There is no limit imposed by any of these great nations on the amount of money expended in this direction. How about the men they have to run these big machines? Are they up to their job? Perhaps they are, but if so they seem to live in deadly fear of their own deadly machines. Scarcely does Great Britain send a fleet to sea for tactical maneuvers that two ships do not run either into each other or into some peaceful merchantman. In default of colliding with each other or with some harmless tramp, they go ashore. Only the other day the captain and navigating officer of a British man-of-war were court-martialed for running their ship ashore in a fog. Both of them were dismissed from the service in disgrace. Court-martials are more severe in the British navy than in our own. During the last three or four years there have been many accidents in the American navy, including collisions, explosions of boilers, explosions of great guns, some times within the confined space of turrets, killing and wounding many men. Surely such powerful nations would not stint in the expenditure of some little money to get capable men to run these mighty and dangerous man-killing machines. If, then, the mishaps which occur to them prove, as they would seem to, that the men who run them are not up to their job, what can be the reason? It can not be through economy that these great nations have failed to secure men who are up to their job. The apparent reason would seem to be that it is because they can not get men who are up to their job.

Take the question of man-killing on shore. Officers in the navy are usually of a higher degree of skill than those in the army, by reason probably of sea-sickness. It is not feasible to take an adult politician and put him in command of a battleship. The chances are that he would be sea-sick, which would interfere with not only the workings of the ship but the discipline of his crew. It is, however, quite possible to take a mature man from civil life and make him a general or colonel. It is frequently done in our country—likewise in Spanish America. Thus, then, the possibilities of securing capable men are widened.

The limited number of those trained to military life from youth should be found lacking in capacity, millions of men in civil life could be drawn upon, in order to secure men up to the job.

But what has been the result? In the war of the rebellion the United States not only had many trained officers graduated from the military school at West Point to draw upon, but likewise it had hordes of militia generals, military politicians, and governors of States with national ambitions. As a result the armies of the United States for the first two or three years of the war were commanded by general after general of varying degrees of military knowledge. Yet few would admit that any one of them prior to the advent of Grant was up to his job. We are aware that many would differ with us, but when all is said and done, the sole test or capacity in war is success, and no one of them routed the Confederate armies before U. S. Grant.

When the British became involved in the Boer war they had an abundance of material to choose from, and they selected General Redvers Buller as commander. Even the most enthusiastic friend of that officer could scarcely claim that his conduct of military operations against the Boers was a success or that he was up to his job. He was followed by General Lord Roberts, a veteran well stricken in years. It was generally declared that Lord Roberts had whipped the Boers, and he was recalled to England and covered with honors. But all the same it was necessary to send General Lord Kitchener there to finish the job. And now it would seem as if the job were not finished at all, but had to be begun all over again. This is not stated on our authority, but on the authority of Mr. Kipling, who is very bitter about the matter, and who as a military critic is quite up to his job. It is easier to be up to your job as a military critic than as a military man. There are more capable critics, by the way, than capable statesmen, sailors, or soldiers. It may be because it is not so easy to tell when critics are failures.

It is scarcely necessary to advert to the recent war between Russia and Japan. It may be said that the Japanese commanders were up to their jobs. But were the Russians? Nobody thinks so. And if the Russian commanders were not up to their job, how do we know that the Japanese were? Were the Japanese successes due to the fact that their commanders were up to their job? Or because the Russian commanders were not? The fortress of Port Arthur, which the Japanese fought so long to take, seems by the light of recent events to have been surrendered either by treachery or incapacity. Its commander is now being tried for treason. The fleet which Rodjestvensky commanded and which the Japanese captured and sunk was handled by so incapable a set of men, as later developments have shown, that it is a world wonder how it ever got as far as the Sea of Japan. Admiral Rodjestvensky surely was not up to his job.

In industrial pursuits, that which has often been likened to the military in its organization is the great railway industry of the United States. Yet the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that during the last three months there has been a serious railway accident for every hour of the day. A week or two ago the president of a great railway system and several guests were killed in his private car, by a rear-end collision. The road was ostensibly run under the block system, by which a train is prevented from entering a block until the train ahead leaves it. Had the men running this road been up to their job, this collision would have been physically impossible. We are now told that the "block system" is a sham—that an engineer is not physically prevented from entering a blocked part of the road with his train but only "warned" by signals not to do so. Are the railway officials who permit this up to their job?

During the past five or six weeks (not to mention minor wrecks) three great ocean steamers have been wrecked in the Pacific Ocean, the Mongolia, the Manchuria, and the United States army transport, the Sheridan. All three of these ran on reefs which were set down on the charts, and two of them ran ashore in the daytime. One commanding officer is condemned by the testimony of his comrades another admits that he is responsible; the commander of the United States army transport has not yet been heard in his own defense. Two of these ships cost over a million dollars apiece and sometimes carried cargoes worth a million more. Would not the Pacific Mail Steamship Company employ men up to their job, if they were to be obtained? It is scarcely thinkable that it would employ incapable men because they were cheaper. The risk would be too great. The company would scarcely run the chance of losing two or three million dollars for the sake of saving a few hundred dollars a year. Can it be possible that there is difficulty in procuring men to sail ocean liners who are up to their job?

When the water-way is completed across the Isthmus of Panama great ships may travel through there, it is hoped, swiftly and safely. It is one of the most colossal undertakings ever begun by man. The work is in the hands of the richest, most powerful, and most prosperous nation on the globe. The executive head of the nation is a man in the prime of life, strong physically, vigorous and enthusiastic and with his whole heart and soul in the completion of this enterprise. Yet several years have passed since it was begun and there have been continual changes in the men engaged in digging it. Are the present men up to their job? Were the ones whom they succeeded in up to their job? Or were the ones whom they succeeded in up to their job? And if they were not up to their job, why were they chosen? Or why were the present men chosen, if they are not up to their job? We have no means of knowing, further than the fact that the men in charge are continually making excuses for not accomplishing more than they have done. As none of us outside now how much they have done, nor how much they ought to have done, we can not tell whether their excuses are required or not. We can only think that where there are so many excuses there must be some lack of performance. Is it possible that the Panama Canal is not and as never been in the hands of men up to their job?

So many buildings in San Francisco were wrecked and ruined by the recent earthquake and fire that it has turned the attention of property owners to a new building material, reinforced concrete. We call it "new" because the people do. As a matter of fact, concrete construction is almost as old as civilization, and structures largely built of concrete may be found in ancient lands today, still standing intact. The modern concrete is almost identical with the old pozzuolani, or Roman cement, and that material has been used for many ages for the construction of all kinds of buildings, even the most humble, such as wine houses and stables, which have belonged to any generations of human beings. Yet only the other day in Los Angeles, the most enterprising of the cities of California, and one which is building most energetically, a enormous hotel building was going up which was being constructed of concrete. Suddenly, without warning, the immense structure collapsed, carrying down some one hundred and fifty workmen, nine or ten of whom were killed, and a much larger number seriously wounded. Were the contractors up to their job? Were the architects up to their job? If not, what was the trouble?

Not many months ago a large city burned down. It was not destroyed by earthquake. It was consumed by fire. Property valued at something like six to seven hundred millions of dollars was wiped out in three days. This city was situated on a peninsula washed on three sides by the waters of an ocean and a bay. Yet for protection against fire it had but one large main connecting with some catchment reservoirs. It had old cisterns in distance since the pioneer days which had been allowed to its municipal authorities, its fire department officials, and its fire underwriters—to become disused. Had these cisterns all been in commission it is quite probable that the city might have been saved. The private citizens of San Francisco had their own business to attend to. They paid their municipal officials large salaries to look out for their protection. They paid the insurance companies large premiums, and the board of fire underwriters of these companies were morally obligated to see that their policy holders were duly safeguarded against fire. Did they do so? No. These fire underwriters were apparently ignorant of the very existence of these disused cisterns, and they were apparently negligent of the single water main in which the fate of so many millions hung. Are the municipal officials of San Francisco up to their job? Are the Board of Fire Underwriters up to their job?

Let us return in this curious circle to the point from which we started, the recent campaign in New York State. There may be those who will maintain that it is impossible for both the Republican and the Democratic campaign managers to be unsuccessful. They reason that in every election one side has to win; that both can win; therefore both can not be unsuccessful. But this view would be an erroneous one. The Republican campaign managers elected Mr. Hughes, but lost all the rest of their ticket. Mr. Hearst's campaign managers elected all the rest of their ticket, but defeated the man they wanted, Mr. Hearst.

The Republican campaign committee included as chairman, Timothy Woodruff, former Lieutenant Governor of New York State, an old and experienced politician, versed in the ways of the world, and a man of large wealth. The chairman of the Republican County Committee in New York State was Herbert Parsons, also a politician of experience. Note we say "experience." But were they up to their job? A Californian's opinion on New York State politics would not perhaps be of much value, but still could not be said of Governor Odell. That gentleman does not hesitate to express himself with great vigor, as he says that the campaign as conducted by the Republican Campaign Committee was "simply asinine." This is probably the Odell way of implying that its managers were not up to their job. There would seem to be some slight ground for Mr. Odell's assertions. To those who say that there was a conspiracy against Mr. Hughes among the Republican politicians of New York, and that they "hung back," sulked in their tents, and all that sort of thing, the answer is plain. The Republican machine politicians would do no such thing, because if they did they would lose the vast patronage of New York State and City. Furthermore, if they "hung back" in order to defeat Mr. Hughes, and then defeated their whole ticket and elected him, this also would serve to show that they were not up to their job.

The conclusions to be drawn on the Hearst side of the fence are even more striking. Mr. Hearst had for his campaign managers Mr. Max T. Ihmsen, Mr. S. S. Carvalho, Mr. Arthur Brisbane, and Mr. Clarence J. Shearn. All of these gentlemen are in his employ, are loyal, are high salaried, and unanimously declared to be up to their job. Mr. Brisbane is so well onto his job that he is said to get the highest salary of any newspaper man in the world; it is variously reported, but it is generally believed to be $35,000 a year. Mr. Carvalho is said to get $75,000 a year. These gentlemen were conducting the campaign with practically unlimited funds. They had Mr. Hearst's four daily newspapers, morning, evening, German, and Yiddish, at their disposal; they had likewise a cheap Hearst weekly circulating widely throughout the agricultural population. Thus, they had practically unlimited possibilities at their disposal. They had before them the vista of lofty place and unlimited power if they elected their candidate. They had before them the dazzling prospect, if they elected him Governor of New York, of eventually seating him in the Presidential chair. What dreams of cabinet positions and of the dispensing of unlimited patronage may have occurred to these gentlemen one may never know. But the immediate rewards were tempting enough. The vast patronage of the city and State of New York, including the canal work, amounts to more than fifty million dollars.

How did Mr. Hearst's campaign managers succeed with his campaign? As a result of their efforts, they elected his opponent to the governor's chair, they failed to elect Mr. Hearst, for whom they greatly cared; they elected all the rest of their own ticket, for which they did not care at all; and they inflicted a deep and perhaps deadly wound on Hearst as a Presidential candidate.

Were they up to their job?

CLANCEY JOHN DEMPSTER.

Clancey John Dempster, the San Francisco pioneer of Vigilance Committee fame, was killed in Oakland, California, on November 19, 1906, just before noon. He was run down by an electric car going rapidly south on Telegraph avenue, near 31st street about opposite East Bay Sanatorium. He received a terrible blow on the back of his head, and the wheels had almost severed his right leg near the knee before the car was stopped. Under the direction of Judge W. H. Waste of the Alameda County Superior Court, who was a passenger on the car and a witness to the accident, he was carried into the East Bay Sanatorium, where he died in a few minutes, without recovering consciousness.

Mr. Dempster was an old man. While physically very alert and active, the hardships of his early career had begun several years ago to tell upon his memory, though his faculties were otherwise perfectly sound. Just one year and two days before his death his wife died after patiently suffering from progressive paralysis for many years. Of all ideal domestic partnerships the relations existing between this pair for the fifty-two years of their married life were peculiarly tender. Her death was the first break in the family. And when, on November 20, 1905, Mr. Dempster and the five manly sons bore the devoted mother to her rest, he could not realize what had happened. During the many years of her illness, he had been constantly at her side. Not a day passed but he brought her a flower. And every day since they laid her away on the beautiful slopes of Mountain View looking out towards the Golden Gate, he had brought a flower home and asked for her. He could not be made to remember that she was dead. On the morning he was killed he had just picked the daisy flower for her and his head was turned as he put it in his button-hole when death overtook him. He went to her bearing the token of his devotion.

The quality in Mr. Dempster which impressed one first on meeting him was his gentleness. He was a little man physically, below the average stature and of slight build. His eyes were of the blue of the forget-me-not, and his kind, frank, genial smile, and his cordial hand-grasp, made one love him from the start. But his wrist bore the scar of a sabre-cut, the last blow ever struck by a certain Mexican guerrilla who fell instantly dead with Dempster's bullet through his heart. San Francisco murderers were swung by the neck out of the windows of Fort Gunnybags by his vote. Banished outlaws threatened to shoot him on sight. He faced one of these exiles once in Idaho, but the outlaw had observed some of Dempster's marksmanship, and the promised shooting was indefinitely postponed. Under his quiet exterior and gentle address, he had an indomitable soul. He was forceful and fearless, and these qualities told not only in his business, but to a greater extent even in the exercise of his unselfish public spirit. And as the country owes much to his illustrious father, so California, and particularly San Francisco, acknowledges a lasting obligation to him.

Passengers alighting from the Chicago & Northwestern trains in the beautiful town of Evanston, on the Lake Michigan shore twelve miles north of Chicago, Illinois, find themselves on Dempster street. That street is named after the Reverend John Dempster, Methodist Missionary to the Argentine in the early days, and afterwards founder of the great North-Western University at Evanston. A short distance south of Evanston in the lovely cemetery known as Rosehill lie his remains under a fine rough-hewn granite monument, recently erected there by his daughters Sara and Mary, and his son Clancey John.

John Dempster was born at Florida, Montgomery County, New York, on January 2, 1794, and died in Chicago, Illinois, November 28, 1863, just as he was planning to join his son in California, intending to establish here a Methodist University upon the same lines as the Northwestern. He was of Scotch origin, and readers familiar with Hall Caine's "Deemster," will understand the dignity of ancestry the name implies. In 1824 he married Lydia Clancey, who was born in Kingston, New York, October 2, 1802, and died at Lassellsville, New York, in April, 1875. They had four children, Sara A., now widow of the late John McKee, well known by his prominent connection with the old Tallant Bank, and whose son, John Dempster McKee is now manager of the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco; Mary E., now widow of the late Rev. William Goodfellow, Methodist missionary to Brazil, at present in Lassellsville, New York; Orrea W., who died some years ago in San Francisco, leaving her husband, Killian V. R. Lansingh, now of Pasadena, California, and two daughters and a son surviving her; and an only son, Clancey John.

Clancey John Dempster was born at Cazenovia, New York, November 3, 1828. His father gave him a good classical education. As a young boy he could take a Greek testament and read it off-hand aloud to his father in English, translating as rapidly as he could read. In his boyhood, from 7 to 12, he was in the Argentine with his father, and there acquired a perfect knowledge of the Spanish language, which he could speak with the same fluency as his native tongue. He led a wild and adventurous life there, riding with his father on horse-back over thousands of miles of the plains, witnessing stirring scenes in that revolutionary atmosphere, and acting as interpreter for more than one cut-throat dictator.

Returning to this country he went to Washington, D. C., where he became private secretary for Daniel Webster. Here he enjoyed, on frequent occasions, the conversation of Webster and Henry Clay. He was in the Senate chamber as Webster's messenger when the first message "Behold what God hath wrought," was flashed over the original Morse telegraph line.

He went through the Mexican war as interpreter and despatch rider, acting part of the time in those capacities for General Scott. During this period he received the sabre-cut on his wrist in a guerrilla ambush, and nearly lost his life in an epidemic of yellow fever at Vera Cruz. They buried the victims, twelve in each grave. His grave was ready and was kept open for him some time after the other eleven had been put into it; but he declined to accept the proffered space.

After that he was a clerk in a dry-goods house in New York. It was there that he caught the California gold fever. He was one of the early arrivals here, coming by way of the isthmus. He told many interesting anecdotes of his adventures on that and subsequent trips.

In California he obtained a job as purser on a Sacramento steamer owned and run by D. L. Ross. In the intervals of his purser's duties, he spent his extra time first in the fire-room, learning to fire; then in the engine-room, learning to run the engine; then in the pilot-house, learning to steer. Ross heard of this, and sending for Dempster told him he was just the kind of man he wanted in the office. Dempster said he would accept on condition he be given an interest in the business at once. Rather to his own astonishment the bold stroke succeeded, and he became a partner. Thus was laid the foundation of the great business of Ross, Dempster & Co., shippers, commission merchants and owners of vessels, with a branch in New York and connections throughout the mercantile world. At one time this firm owned and ran the Oakland ferry boats.

On July 5, 1853, in New York, he married Mary Elizabeth Ross, his senior partner's daughter. She was born in Rahway, New Jersey, May 8, 1831, and died, as stated, in Oakland, California, November 17, 1905. They had five children, all sons, Clancey Ross, Daniel Ross, Milen Ross, Louis Ross, and Roy Ross, all of whom survive and are active and successful San Francisco business men, actuated by the same high ideals and animated by the same public spirit as their father.

Mr. Dempster was one of the moving spirits of the San Francisco Vigilance Committee. He was first vice-president and a member of the executive committee, and many, if not most, of their important documents were drawn by him. He was a member of the committee of citizens who in the face of much opposition set apart the Golden Gate Park tract for public use, and that magnificent reservation will remain the greatest monument to his foresight and public spirit.

When he returned from New York with his bride in 1853, they first lived at the old Oriental Hotel. In 1855 he purchased a large piece of land in the Limantour tract, Willow Glen, near the Mission, and there established a beautiful home. Later he covered this property with tenement houses. His firm went through all the early San Francisco fires always with great loss. But the effect upon his finances of the epoch-making fire of April, 1906, was remarkable. All his buildings were totally destroyed. But his large insurance was in neither crooked cockneys nor crooked sauerkrauts, and was all promptly paid. The location, size and shape of his land were such that it was at once in demand, and within a few weeks after the fire had been leased for a long term upon a rising scale, netting nearly double the income which the entire property brought when improved. He leaves a large estate which he incorporated some years ago and placed in charge of his sons.

A most interesting episode of his life relates to the estate he inherited from his father. The old missionary had a good head for business, and bought for a song lands in the neighborhood of Chicago, which afterward became immensely valuable. And there was found among his papers some certificates of stock in a Chicago corporation. In looking up the value of this stock, it was discovered that through the neglect of the stock-holders the concern had fallen into the hands of two professional corporation looters. These gentlemen had resorted to all the most approved methods of transferring the assets of the corporation to their own pockets, without appearing to be doing so. They had bought property at insignificant figures and sold it to the corporation at enormous profit, lending it money at exorbitant rates, with which to make the purchase, then letting it default, and foreclosing. They were brought to book by the Dempster heirs. The case is a celebrated one in Illinois. It took seventeen years of persistent and expensive litigation to recover the property. But through all these years, much of the time bearing heavy financial burdens and suffering great discouragement, Dempster and his brothers-in-law, Lansing and McKee, stood to their guns, and finally scored a great victory. The history of the litigation will be found among the decisions of the Supreme Court of Illinois.

It was about the close of this litigation that the writer witnessed a scene in Chicago in January, 1898, which will illustrate Mr. Dempster's character. The affairs of a certain corporation were being investigated on behalf of Mr. Dempster. They had been but a short time in the charge of an officer of the corporation whose altruistic tendencies were not of the strictest kind. A fifteen hundred dollar payment for which he was responsible appeared upon the books not properly explained. Inquiry had to be vigorously pushed to get any explanation, but finally the officer regretted to state that it had been used in bribing public officials in order to obtain protection which he claimed was absolutely necessary. Whether or not this was true, or was a convenient invention, has never been definitely established. But the explanation was met by Mr. Dempster with a scathing arraignment which the writer can never forget. The quiet old man was on fire in an instant, and poured forth a scorching rebuke. He would rather lose his entire investment than have such methods used to protect him. And, as soon as it could be accomplished, the man who found it necessary to resort to such explanations, was relieved of power, which might tempt him to protect that corporation into his own pockets.

In that same month, January, 1898, a meeting of the Transmississippi Congress was held at Kansas City. San Francisco made a representative, and Mayor Phelan, hearing that Dempster was in Chicago, telegraphed him there, asking him to go down to Kansas City as delegate from San Francisco. Mr. Dempster, though declining years had already unfitted him for such a task, protested, but went. He yielded to his habitual desire to answer any call of duty. His attendance at that convention was probably his last public service.

Mr. Dempster was a devoted lover of nature. The writer has traveled many thousands of miles with him, in all seasons and weathers, from Mount Auburn, Druid's Hill and Arlington, to the orange slopes of Pasadena and Los Angeles. We were once held up at Las Vegas by a freset that carried away steel spans as if they were kindling wood. Together we went through the awful havoc of the last great flood of the Kaw. We have stood hushed amid the reverberations of Niagara, and together we mounted the roof of the continent, awed by the wonders of the Yellowstone. Together we took the saddle at Grand Canyon and climbed down the Bright Angel trail through millions of years of the history of mother earth to the granite trench of the roaring Colorado, at the very bottom. On Moran's Point with bated breath we viewed together that marvelous panorama of the ages, till abreast of us a mighty storm moved majestically into the lower foreground, and amid blinding light thundered forth the glory of God. Together on Hamilton we have looked upon the Martian canals, the moons of Jupiter and the rings of Saturn, and, descending, whispered that we had visited another world.

Years ago he broke away from the creed of his father's denomination and rejoiced in the freedom of universal religion; his faith: love and service: his life: service and love. And now that he has gone, the everlasting hills and the shining hosts of the midnight are clearer and nearer, and not so cold. We used to read together a good deal, and there comes to me now the closing words of the last poem I remember reading with him—Tennyson's "Vastness"—the great laureate's splendid climactic rebuke to the growing pessimism of his century.

"Peace, let it be! for I loved him, and love him for ever: the dead are not dead, but alive."

PALO ALTO, Nov. 28, 1906.

H.

ALDRICH'S BOHEMIAN CIRCLE.

Brilliant and Frolicsome Young Men of Literary New York
Fifty Years Ago.

TO THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.

At seventy years one well may choose
To pause in service to the Muse;
Nor count it much for blame or praise
To him whose brow is bound with bays
If she be kindly or refuse.

Least—least of all, we need excuse
The Bard who backward-looking, views
But blameless songs and blameless days
At seventy years!

And yet, Sing on. While life renews
Its morning skies, its evening hues,
Still may you walk in rhythmic ways,
Companioned of the lyre whose lays
None—in this tuneless time—would lose
At seventy years.

—Austin Dobson in the Outlook.

It was characteristic of Thomas Bailey Aldrich, the first of living American poets, and the most modest, that he was content to sit simply as an invited guest at a banquet given last month in New York in honor of the seventieth birthday of Henry Mills Alden, editor of Harper's Magazine. For Mr. Aldrich, also, had just rounded out three score and ten years, having been born on the same day as Mr. Alden. Mr. Aldrich's career has justified the quatrain of his early muse:

Though lacking gold, we never stooped
To pick it up in all our days;
Though lacking praise, we sometimes drooped
We never asked a soul for praise.

He "has always kept himself out of the range of that terrifying Polyphemic organ 'the public eye,'" says Hamilton Mabie in an appreciation of the poet in the December Outlook. In a reminiscence of Mr. Aldrich's editorship of the Atlantic Monthly, Mr. Mabie gives us this picture of him in his "den," far from the madding crowd of literary aspirants:

It was a joy in those days to climb the stairs and emerge head first, so to speak, in the old sanctum at the moment when Mr. Aldrich was telling his dog, in tones that brought a deep solemnity on that fortunate beast, that the piece of verse he had just devoured was not doggerel but poetry! It was a comfortable place, and there were blessed memories of sound learning and good English connected with it. It was very quiet, too, and Mr. Aldrich used to smoke his pipe and look out on the old burying-ground, on which the windows opened, with deep satisfaction—"they can submit no manuscripts."

Seated at the table with Mr. Aldrich at the Alden dinner were two other septuagenarian men of letters, William Dean Howells and Edmund Clarence Stedman. For half a century the three authors have been friends. How memories of their Bohemian dinners of fifty years ago must have crowded fast upon them! Memories of the brilliant and bacchanalian company who assembled nightly in Pfaff's beer cellar in Broadway; of Artemus Ward, George Arnold, Fitz-Hugh Ludlow, W. L. Symonds, Henry Clapp, Bayard Taylor, Richard Henry Stoddard, John Brougham, and Fitz-James O'Brien. The latter was one of the most talented, as well as the most erratic, of the famous coterie of young writers who made merry at Pfaff's. One of O'Brien's best stories is printed in this issue of the Argonaut under the title, "An Invisible Demon."

Albert H. Smyth, in his life of Bayard Taylor, gives an interesting account of the literary Bohemians of New York, in the late '50s, of whom Aldrich, Stedman, Howells, and William Winter are still alive. Howells, it would seem from his description of a night at Pfaff's in 1860, did not enter into the spirit of the revelry, but was one of "the respectables":

At one moment of the orgy, which went slowly for an orgy, we were joined by some belated Bohemians whom the others made a great clamor over; I was given to understand they were just recovered from a fearful debauch; their locks were still damp from the wet towels used to store them, and their eyes were very frenzied. I was presented to these types, who neither said nor did anything worthy of their awful appearance, but dropped into seats at the table, and ate of the supper with an appetite that seemed poor. I stayed, vainly hoping for worse things until eleven o'clock, and then I rose and took my leave of a literary condition that had distinctly disappointed me.

Mr. Smyth says the conditions of authorship at that period had greatly changed from what they were a decade earlier:

The Knickerbocker school had faded out. A brilliant circle of young writers of erratic lustre and small reverence had appeared. Washington Irving, "the first literary ambassador from the New World to the Old," died in 1859 and in the same year death claimed in this country Rufus Choate and William Hickling Prescott, and in England, Leigh Hunt, Thomas DeQuincey, and Lord Macaulay. In that year the Knickerbocker Magazine, tower of literary strength in New York came to an end and N. P. Willis published his last book, "The Convalescent." The cessation of the Knickerbocker and of Pu-nam's Magazine marked the passing of the old régime.

The Saturday Press was started in New York, October 23, 1858, by Henry Clapp, jr., a cynical journalist who could throw more bitterness into a single sentence than any other man of his period. Thomas Bailey Aldrich was associate editor, and Fitz-James O'Brien was dramatic editor. In December, 1860, the publication was discontinued, but after some years it was resumed with the appropriate explanation: "This paper was suspended for lack of funds; it is now resumed for the same reason." John Brougham had begun the Lantern, an illustrated comic paper, in 1852. Mrs. Grund, edited by Charles Dawson Shanly, Vanity Fair, edited by Frank Woods, and the Albion, by William Young, an Englishman, followed the Saturday Press.

It was the contributors to these journals whose unconventional night life, and daring literary work, shocked their brethren of the pen in Boston.

In New England upon the Atlantic Monthly, there was culture and tradition, order and decorum. Among the contributors to the New York papers there was fever, recklessness, gayety and melancholy. No respect was shown by the younger writers for "the various caparisoned figure-heads which were then an incubus upon American letters." John Brougham gave weekly dinner at Windust's, near the original Park Theatre, which were attended by the Aladdins who "trimmed the wit of the Lantern." The staff of Vanity Fair met on Friday in the old editorial rooms, 113 Nassau Street, and drank smoked, and discussed the next issue. The general gathering place of the clans, however, was in Pfaff's cellar in Broadway. If the New England author serene upon their transcendental heights, taught the virtues of plain living and high thinking the frequenters of Pfaff's believed as potentially in high thinking and hard drinking. George Arnold, the laureate of the long tab in this dingy cellar, is authority for it that "We were all very merry at Pfaff's."

Hither came Walt Whitman, whose cause the Saturday Press had taken up with its accustomed vigor, looking like the Phidian Jove. Here, too, came O'Brien, d figured by pugilism, a gypsy of letters, whose long periods of idleness were broken by such sudden raptures of creation as "A Fallen Star" and "The Diamond Lens." "Fitz-Gammon O'Bouncer," William North styled him. Here came "Ned" Wilkins, feeding on Montaigne, George Arnold fed on Balzac; and the cynical Clapp, who originated the saying, "A self-made man, yes, and we ships his creator;" and Shepherd, who wrote the "R. Call," and Shanly, who should be remembered for "Rifeman, Shoot Me a Fancy Shot."

A description of the diversions of the young writers is thus given:

Stoddard, Taylor, and O'Brien were frequently an able rivals in the rapid making of burlesque rhyme. Stoddard in his reminiscences thus recalls these nights of literary frolic. "We sat around a table and whenever a whim seized us, which was often enough, we each wrote down themes on little pieces of paper, and putting the into a hat or box we drew out one at random, and then scribbled away for dear life. We put no restrictions upon ourselves: we could be grave or gay, or idiotic even; but we must be rapid, for half the fun was in noting who finished out. 'Finished.' It was a neck and neck race between Bayard Taylor and Fitz-James O'Brien, we divided the honors pretty equally, and whose verse I am compelled to admit, were generally better than my own. Bayard Taylor was very dextrous in seizing the salient points of the poets we girded at, and was happy as a child when his burlesques were successful. He reminded me, I once told him, of Katerfelto."

With his hair on end

At his own wonders.

He blushed laughed, and admitted that his cleverness pleased him, and he was glad that it pleased us all. "It is good sport," he remarked, "but poetry—that is very different."

Mr. Aldrich occupied editorial positions on the Evening Mirror, N. P. Willis's Home Journal, and the Illustrated News, after which he left New York and the roystering crew at Pfaff's restaurant, Boston. Was it then that he was inspired to write his farewell to the muse of comedy?

I leave you: my soul is wrung;

I pause, look back from the portal—

Ah, I no more am young,

And you, child, you are immortal!

Mine is the gracious way,

Yours is the blossom weather—

When were December and May

Known to be happy together?

When, at last, I am cold—

Years hence, if the gods so will it—

Say, "He was true as gold,"

And wear a rose in your fillet!

The mayor of Huddersfield, England, offered a prize of $5 for every child born during his term of office which lived at least twelve months. Though several epidemics occurred, the mortality was reduced from 122 per thousand to 44, largely by the aid of women who instructed mothers

NEW YORK GRAND OPERA RIVALRY.

Opening of Manager Conried's Season—Geraldine Farrar as Juliet—Caruso in "La Boheme."

The fourth season of grand opera at the Metropolitan Opera House under the management of Heinrich Conried began Monday night, and it may well be said that the present and the immediate future in musical affairs and in society are rose tinted. Not for more than twenty years has there been such widespread interest in grand opera and its concomitants in Manhattan. It is far from being a complete statement to say that no other city in the world has seen what New Yorkers will see next week—grand opera on a magnificent scale at two rival opera houses. We have had such a conjunction before, and with disastrous results, but this time there are no forebodings. The fact that a new opera house is to open and to present a second grand opera company containing many singers of fame, under the management of an irrepressible and sagacious impresario, is a first cause, but the results will cover a range much wider than the ambitions or successes of the two managers. There are innumerable questions of import to society circles inevitable in the rivalry. The answers will be found in a new arrangement, a new inventory of accomplishments and possessions. And in the musical world there are new heights to be conquered and unsuspected depths to be sounded.

Advance announcements have told us what we may expect in the appeal of unfamiliar operas and singers new to this public, but bright anticipations founded on the promises of impresarios and press agents have been shattered many times, and seldom more completely than in the history of the operatic stage. Mr. Conried presents a fine array of great names, and if there is disappointment to come it should not be laid at his door. Such singers as Sembrich, Eames, Fremstad, Milka Ternina, Schumann-Heink, Louise Homer, Caruso, Burgstaller, Plancon, Scotti, and Van Rooy—these only a part of the list of artists whose work is well known—were named with almost as many more who would aid for the first time here for favor. Geraldine Farrar, Lina Cavalieri, Katharina Fleischer-Edel, and Bertha Morena are great sopranos, though strangers to New York; Carl Burrian and Charles Rousseliere are new tenors of fame; Stracciari, a new baritone, and, last but not important, Samuel Lovy, the new French conductor. The novelties and revivals of special note are to include Giorano's "Fedora" and "Andrea Chenier," Cilea's "Adriana Lecouvreur," Berlioz's "Le Damna-né de Faust," "Fra Diavolo," "I Puritani," "Lakme," and "Samson et Dalila." French, Italian, and German works have careful representation in the list of forty-six operas.

Monday evening the merry war began at the Metropolitan Opera House with Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette," introducing Geraldine Farrar, the new American soprano who went from Boston eight years ago to study in Europe, and who has succeeded in holding for most of that time, since her first appearance, a high place in the regard of music lovers in Berlin, where she has sung many dramatic roles. With Miss Farrar appeared the new French tenor, Rousseliere, who had followed Jean de Reszke in his greatest roles abroad and achieved success, and Simard, a new baritone. Miss Farrar did more than please the critical, though a nervous self-consciousness affected some of her higher tones in the earliest scenes. She is a winning Juliet in beauty and grace, and sufficiently dramatic in the tense action and repose of the sorrowful story. The tenor is not a great Romeo, but sings manfully and with not unpleasing effort. Simard, Plancon, Journet, and Mme. Neuendorf (formerly Georgine Januschowsky) were other agreeable members of the cast.

Of course, the greater show was in front of the curtain. Even the first night of the opera was not neglected by the society leaders, and those who limit the attractions held by the upper and lower rows of boxes, as well as those who go because they hunger for the emotional delights of heavenly music, were there in force. Still there were vacant seats, though double rows of late patrons stood in the rear vantage ground on each floor, and the demand was not sufficient to furnish inordinate profit to ticket speculators. Some canny buyers, indeed, secured good seats, about the time the performance ended, from the sidewalk vendors at less than original prices.

In the boxes it was a pearl and diamond night. About the necks of many beautiful women were strung strands of lustrous, shimmering pearls, and on their wrists, ears, and brooches of more regal gems were jets of rainbow fire in every group. Gowns of white velvet were numerous, with now and then one of deep crimson, almost black in the shadows; blue silks and satins, mauve and golden chiffons, added to the riot of bright colors, and a sweeping view of the horseshoe gave one a sensation of exquisite harmony in hues that seemed almost a fixing of the great swirl of instrumental and vocal melody from orchestra and stage. It was a distinguished audience. There were members of the European nobility and foreign diplomats there, as well as American ambassadors and members of the proudest of American families. One notable absence was remarked, that of Mrs. Astor, whose ill health, as is well known, kept her from an event such as she has seldom missed in former years.

Last night, however, came the great event of the week—"La Boheme," and the appearance of Caruso. The difficulties surrounding the tenor have been exploited by the daily newspapers, but the general verdict is certainly not an endorsement of New York law and order methods as exemplified by our intermittently active and determined officials. The public seemingly had talked of nothing else for a week, and the final judgment was awaited with intense interest. In the crowded opera house there were hundreds of Caruso's countrymen—in the gallery, particularly, they were in masses—ready to encourage and sustain him in a crisis, but there was no crisis. The great tenor was on the stage, in his garret as Rodolfo, when the curtain rose, and though his voice was not all his own at the beginning, he soon recovered his poise. Mme. Sembrich was the Mimì, and at the end of their scene, better than admirably done, the applause was a burst of enthusiasm and regard for artistic worth. Again and again the two singers came forward to the footlights and bowed, and, after eight recalls, Mme. Sembrich stopped at the wings and gently insisted on Caruso's taking alone the plaudits of the audience. In the entire affair, since the first surprise of the charge of annoying a woman, and through the scene in court, and the adverse sentence of the judge, with its petty fine, Caruso has had the sympathy of his associates and the assurance from them that the public would show its belief in his innocence, but the generous outpouring of applause undoubtedly lifted a heavy weight from the tenor's shoulders. The incident is closed, so far as general regard for his ability and art is concerned.

Manager Conried, scarcely able to hobble about with a cane, was present both nights, and is in excellent spirits, even if in ill health, and nearly worn out with his efforts. He has no fears for the success of the season, and no reason for fears. New York is large enough now to sustain two opera companies, even of the highest order. Next Monday, Manager Oscar Hammerstein's new Manhattan Opera House on Eighth avenue will open, and the issue will be joined. If there is any notable advantage it is in Conried's ability to give Wagner's great music dramas. Hammerstein has a great company, but it will give French and Italian operas only.

The present juncture recalls that momentous episode in grand opera history in New York, the rivalry of Colonel Mapleson and Henry E. Abbey. It was twenty-three years ago, when the old Academy of Music was the recognized home of grand opera in the city, the gathering place of the notables in society. The Metropolitan Opera House was built then and opened by Abbey, and the war between the two impresarios involved the members of some of the leading families. The rival companies were nearly equal in their lists of great singers, and the productions were adequate in nearly all instances. When the war ended both managers were bankrupt. Abbey paid his losses in full after a little time, but did not recover completely from the strain before his death. Colonel Mapleson, too, went to the wall, and left America. Maurice Grau succeeded Abbey, the new Metropolitan Opera House became the home of grand opera and the resort of society, and now its crown is threatened. There are several in the two companies now in New York who took part in the productions of that fateful season in 1883.

FLANEUR.

New York, November 29, 1906.

Astronomers long since came to the conclusion that the moon's surface is very hot during the height of the lunar day, which, as will be remembered, lasts two weeks, and very cold during the lunar night, which is equally long. These extremes of temperature reach their height at the lunar noon and midnight, and are greater than any natural temperatures on the earth.

No goods that bear trademarks in any way resembling a crescent can be landed in Turkey.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

The amendment to the State Constitution of California increasing the salaries of justices of the Supreme Court from $7000 to $8000 was carried at the recent election. Full returns have not yet been tabulated, and the exact result of the vote on the other amendments is not yet known.

Should Senator Platt of New York hold his place in the Senate to the end of his term, March 4, 1909, his desk might be turned over to President Roosevelt, whose term in the White House expires at the same time. The Chicago Tribune has printed a Washington despatch which declares this to be the President's plan.

Reuter's Telegram Agency says Lieutenant-General Stoessel, the defender of Port Arthur, is in such financial straits that he has applied to a charitable institution for wounded soldiers for assistance to enable him to employ a servant. The officers of the institution asked the general to produce a medical certificate showing that his health required the services of a servant.

The Republican campaign managers in New York State expended $322,011, which is something like $50,000 more than Mr. Hearst paid out, according to his statement. More than a million dollars was spent in the Empire State on the campaign, and the expenditure is called monstrous by the Springfield (Mass.), Republican. It is probably the largest amount ever paid out in a State election.

Congressman Charles S. Wharton of Chicago is the only one of the forty or more candidates for reelection opposed by Samuel Gompers, who was defeated. Mr. Wharton says he supported all of Gompers's bills faithfully, yet Gompers made a speech against him. The Chicago Chronicle asserts that Wharton's constituents refused to support him, not because Gompers opposed him, but because he yielded to Gompers.

Judge George Gray of Delaware, is mentioned by Southern Congressmen and editors as a probable candidate of the Democratic party for President. His name was suggested at the St. Louis convention in 1904, and was not unfavorably received. The talk of Judge Gray seems to indicate that Mr. Bryan's declaration for government ownership of the railroads has really alienated much of the regard formerly felt for him in the South.

James Rudolph Garfield, at present Commissioner of Corporations, and soon to be promoted to the position of Secretary of the Interior, is a son of the late President Garfield. Mr. Garfield, as was his father, is a graduate of Williams College. After admission to the bar he served several years in the Ohio State Senate, and was later appointed a member of the United States Civil Service Commission, and in 1903 President Roosevelt selected him for the place of Commissioner of Corporations.

The selection by President Roosevelt of William H. Moody, now Attorney-General, as a justice of the United States Supreme Court, in succession to Justice Brown, emphasizes the fact that Mr. Moody holds views on constitutional and large legal questions that accord with those of the President. With Mr. Moody's appointment Massachusetts will have furnished two members of the highest tribunal in the land, an honor not enjoyed by any other State. Mr. Moody will enter the court at a comparatively early age—fifty-three.

Senator Joseph C. S. Blackburn of Kentucky says that Theodore Roosevelt and William Randolph Hearst were eliminated as Presidential possibilities by the result of the election in New York, and that he still favors Mr. Bryan. Concerning Mr. Bryan's attitude on the government ownership of railroads, Senator Blackburn says that he spoke as a private citizen only in that declaration, and further "that the Congress and not the President is the source of our laws, and I am sure that no Congress controlled by Democrats would submit to usurpation or interference by the Executive Chief."

Professor Burgess of Columbia University, who recently appeared at the University of Berlin as "Roosevelt Lecturer," and in his address declared that the Monroe doctrine and the protective tariff are practically obsolete in America, has received more notice in the press since that incident than ever before. The New York Mail notes the press despatch saying that Professor Burgess has been invited to deliver a course of private lectures to Prince August, the fourth son of the Kaiser, and insists that a serious problem has been solved by relegating the American lecturer to service in the royal nursery.

AN INVISIBLE DEMON.

The Fantastic Coinage of an Opium-Eater's Brain.

[This story, originally published under the title "What Was It?" was the work of Fitz-James O'Brien, a brilliant young Irishman, one of the group of writers touched on in the article elsewhere in this number, entitled "Aldrich's Bohemian Circle." He was killed in battle early in the Civil War.]

It is, I confess, with considerable reluctance that I approach the strange narrative which I am about to relate. The events which I propose detailing are of so extraordinary a character that I am quite prepared to meet with an unusual amount of incredulity and scorn. I accept all such beforehand.

I live on a quiet street in New York. The home is in some respects a curious one. It has enjoyed for the last two years the reputation of being haunted. It is a large and stately residence, surrounded by what was once a garden, but which is now only a green enclosure used for bleaching clothes. The dry basin of what has been a fountain and a few fruit trees, ragged and unpruned, indicate that this spot in past days was a pleasant, shady retreat, filled with fruits, and flowers, and the sweet murmur of waters.

The house is very spacious. A ball of noble size leads to a large spiral staircase, winding through its center, while the various apartments are of imposing dimensions. It was built some fifteen or twenty years since, by a well known New York merchant, who, five years ago, threw the commercial world into convulsions by a stupendous bank fraud. He escaped to Europe, and died not long after of a broken heart. Almost immediately after the news of his decease reached this country, and was verified, the report spread in the neighborhood that the house was haunted. Legal measures had dispossessed the widow of its former owner, and it was inhabited merely by a care-taker and his wife, placed there by the house agent into whose hands it had passed for purposes of renting or sale. These people declared that they were troubled with unnatural noises. Doors were opened without any visible agency. The remnants of furniture scattered through the various rooms were, during the night, piled one upon the other by unknown hands. Invisible feet passed up and down the stairs in broad daylight, accompanied by the rustle of unseen silk dresses, and the gliding of viewless hands along the massive balusters. The care-taker and his wife declared they would live there no longer. The house agent laughed, dismissed them, and put others in their place. The noises and supernatural manifestations continued. The neighborhood caught up the story, and the house remained untenanted for three years. Several persons negotiated for it; but somehow always before the bargain was closed they heard the unpleasant rumors, and declined to treat any further.

It was in this state of things that our landlady, who wished to remove further up town, conceived the bold idea of renting this house. Happening to have rather a plucky and philosophical set of boarders, she laid her scheme before us, stating candidly everything she had heard respecting the ghostly qualities of the establishment to which she wished to remove us. With the exception of two timid persons—a sea captain and a returned Californian, who immediately gave notice that they would leave—all of Mrs. Moffat's guests declared that they would accompany her in her chivalric incursion into the abode of spirits.

Of course we had no sooner established ourselves than we began to expect the ghosts. We absolutely awaited their advent with eagerness. Our dinner conversation was supernatural. One of the boarders who had purchased Mrs. Crowe's "Night Side of Nature" for his own private delectation, was regarded as a public enemy by the entire household for not having bought twenty copies. The man led a life of supreme wretchedness while he was reading this volume. A system of espionage was established of which he was the victim. If he incautiously laid the book down an instant and left the room, it was immediately seized and read aloud to a select few. I found myself a person of immense importance, it having leaked out that I was tolerably well versed in the history of supernaturalism, and had once written a story, the foundation of which was a ghost. If a table or wainscot panel happened to warp when we were assembled in the large drawing room, there was an instant silence, and every one was prepared for an immediate clanking of chains and a spectral form.

Things were in this state when an incident took place so awful and inexplicable in its character, that my reason fairly reels at the bare memory of the occurrence. It was the tenth of July. After dinner was over I repaired, with my friend Doctor

Hammond, to my rooms, to take our evening pipe. Independent of certain mental sympathies which existed between the doctor and myself, we were linked together by a vice—we both smoked opium. We knew each other's secret and respected it. We enjoyed together that wonderful expansion of thought, that marvelous intensifying of the perceptive faculties, that boundless feeling of existence when one seems to have points of contact with the whole universe—in short, that unimaginable spiritual bliss which I would not surrender for a throne, and which I hope you, reader, will never, never taste.

Those hours of opium happiness which the doctor and I spent together in secret were regulated with a scientific accuracy. We did not blindly smoke the drug of paradise, and leave our dreams to chance. While smoking, we carefully steered our conversation through the brightest and calmest channels of thought. We talked of the East, endeavored to recall the magical panorama of its glowing scenery. We criticized the most sensuous poets—those who painted life ruddy with health, brimming with passion, happy in the possession of youth, and strength, and beauty. If we talked of Shakespeare's "Tempest," we lingered over Ariel, and avoided Caliban.

This skillful coloring of our train of thought produced in our subsequent visions a corresponding tone. The splendors of Arabian fairy-land dyed our dreams. Houses, walls, and streets melted like rain-clouds, and vistas of unimaginable glory stretched away before us. It was a rapturous companionship. We enjoyed the vast delight more perfectly because, even in our most ecstatic moments, we were conscious of each other's presence. Our pleasures, while individual, were still twin, vibrating and moving in musical accord.

On the evening in question, the tenth of July, the doctor and myself drifted into an unusually metaphysical mood. We prepared and lit our pipes, filled with the little bubble of opium, that, like the nut in the fairy tale, held within its narrow limits wonders beyond the reach of kings. But a strange perversity dominated the currents of our thought. They would not flow through the sun-lit channels into which we strove to divert them. Insensibly we yielded to the occult force that swayed us, and indulged in gloomy speculation. We had talked some time upon the proneness of the human mind to mysticism, and the almost universal love of the terrible, when Hammond suddenly said to me: "What do you consider to be the greatest element of terror?"

The question puzzled me. That many things were terrible, I knew. Stumbling over a corpse in the dark; beholding, as I once did, a woman floating down a deep and rapid river, with wildly lifted arms, and awful upturned face, uttering, as she drifted, shrieks that rent one's heart, while we, the spectators, stood frozen at a window which overhung the river at a height of sixty feet, unable to make the slightest effort to save her, but dumbly watching her last supreme agony and her disappearance. A shattered wreck, with no life visible, encountered floating listlessly on the ocean, is a terrible object, for it suggests a huge terror, the proportions of which are veiled. But it now struck me for the first time that there must be one great and ruling embodiment of fear—a King of Terrors to which all others must succumb. To what train of circumstances would it owe its existence?

"I confess, Hammond," I replied to my friend, "I never considered the subject before. But there must be one. Something more terrible than any other thing, I feel. I can not attempt, however, even the most vague definition."

"I am somewhat like you, Harry," he answered. "I feel my capacity to experience a terror greater than anything yet conceived by the human mind—something combining in the fearful and unnatural amalgamation hitherto supposed incompatible elements. The calling of the voices in Brockden Browne's novel of 'Wieland' is awful; so is the picture of the Dweller of the Threshold, in Bulwer's 'Zanoni'; but," he added, shaking his head gloomily, "there is something more terrible than these."

"Look here, Hammond," I rejoined, "let us drop this kind of talk, for heaven's sake. We shall suffer for it, depend upon it."

"Well, good-night, Harry. Pleasant dreams to you."

"To you, gloomy wretch, afreets, ghouls, and enchanters."

We parted, and each sought his respective chamber. I undressed quickly and got into bed, taking with me, according to my usual custom, a book, over which I generally read myself to sleep. I opened the volume as soon as I had laid my head upon the pillow, and instantly flung it to the other side of the room. It was Goudon's "History of Monsters," a curious French work, which I had lately received from Paris, but which, in the state of mind I had then reached, was anything but an agreeable companion. I resolved to go to sleep at once; so turning down my gas until nothing but a little blue point of light glimmered on the top of the tube, I composed myself to rest.

The room was in total darkness. The atom of gas that still remained alight did not illuminate a distance of three inches around the burner, desperately drew my arm across my eyes, as if to shut out even the darkness, and tried to think of nothing. It was in vain. The themes touched on by Hammond kept obtruding themselves on my brain. I battled against them. I erected ramparts of would-be blankness of intellect to keep out. They still crowded upon me. While I was lying still as a corpse, hoping that by a perfect physical inaction I should hasten mental repose, an awful incident occurred. A Something dropped as it seemed, from the ceiling, upon my chest, and the next instant I felt two bony hands encircling my throat endeavoring to choke me.

I am no coward, and am possessed of considerable physical strength. The suddenness of the attack, instead of stunning me, strung every nerve to its highest tension. My body acted upon instinct before my brain had time to realize the terrors of my position. In an instant I wound two muscular arms around the creature, and squeezed it, with all the strength of despair, against my chest. In a few seconds the bony hands that had fastened on my throat loosened their hold, and I was free to breathe once more. Then commenced a struggle of awful intensity. Immersed in the most profound darkness, totally ignorant of the nature of the Thing by which I was so suddenly attacked, finding my grasp slipping every moment by reason, it seemed to me, of the entire nakedness of my assailant, bitten with sharp teeth in the shoulder, neck, and chest, having every moment to protect my throat against a pair of sinewy, agile hands, which my utmost efforts could not confine—these were a combination of circumstances to combat which required all the strength, skill, and courage that I possessed.

At last, after a silent, deadly, exhausting struggle, I got my assailant under by a series of incredible efforts of strength. Once pinned, with my knee on what I made out to be its chest, I knew I was victor. I rested for a moment to breathe. I heard the creature beneath me panting in the darkness, and felt the violent throbbing of a heart. It was apparently as exhausted as I was; that was one comfort. At this moment I remembered that I usually placed under my pillow, before going to bed, a large, yellow silk pocket handkerchief. I felt for it instantly; it was there. In a few seconds more I had, after a fashion, pinioned the creature's arms.

I now felt tolerably secure. There was nothing more to be done but to turn on the gas, and having first seen what my midnight assailant was like, arouse the household. I confess to being actuated by a certain pride in not giving the alarm before I wished to make the capture alone and completely unaided.

Never loosing my hold for an instant, I slipped from the bed to the floor, dragging my captive with me. I had but a few steps to reach the gas burner; these I made with the greatest caution, holding the creature in a grip like a vise. At last I got within arm's length of the tiny speck of bluish light which told me where the gas-burner was. Quick as lightning I released my grasp with one band, and let on the full flood of light. Then I turned to look at my captive.

I can not even attempt to give any definition of my sensations the instant after I turned on the gas. I suppose I must have shrieked with terror for in less than a minute afterward my room was crowded with the inmates of the house. I shudder now as I think of that awful moment.

I saw nothing!

Yes; I had one arm firmly clasped round the creature, breathing, panting, corporeal shape; my other hand gripped with all its strength a throat as apparently fleshy as my own; and yet, with the living substance in my grasp, with its body pressing against my own, and in all the bright glare of gas, absolutely beheld nothing. Not even an outline—a vapor.

It breathed. I felt its breath upon my cheek. It struggled fiercely. It had hands. They clutched me. Its skin was smooth, like my own. There it lay, pressed close up against me, solid as stone, and yet utterly invisible.

Just then Hammond entered my room at the head of the household. As soon as he beheld my face—which, I suppose, must have been an awful sight to look at—he hastened forward, crying. "Great heavens, Harry, what has happened?"

"Hammond! Hammond!" I cried, "come here. Oh, this is awful. I have been attacked in bed by something or other, which I have hold of; but I can't see it; I can't see it!"

Hammond, doubtless struck by the horror expressed in my countenance, made one or two steps forward with an anxious yet puzzled expression. A very audible titter burst from the remainder of my visitors. This suppressed laughter made me furious. So great was my rage against the mocking crowd that had I the power I would have stricken them dead where they stood.

"Hammond! Hammond!" I cried again, despairingly, "for God's sake come to me. I can hold the Thing but a short while longer. It is overpowering me. Help me! help me!"

"Harry," whispered Hammond, approaching me, "you have been smoking too much opium."

"I swear to you, Hammond, that this is no vision," I answered, in the same low tone. "Don't you see how it shakes my whole frame with its struggles? If you don't believe me, convince yourself. Feel it: touch it."

Hammond advanced, and laid his hand on the spot I indicated. A wild cry of horror burst from him. He had felt it!

In a moment he had discovered somewhere in my room a long piece of cord, and was the next instant winding it and knotting it about the body of the unseen being that I clasped in my arms.

"Harry," he said, in a hoarse voice—for though he preserved his presence of mind, he was deeply agitated—"Harry, it's safe now; you may let go if you are tired. The Thing can't move."

I was utterly exhausted, and I gladly loosed my hold. Hammond stood holding the ends of the cord that bound the Invisible, twisted around his hand, while before him, self-supporting, as it were, was a rope laced and interlaced, and stretching tightly around a vacant space.

The confusion which ensued among the guests of the house who were witnesses of this extraordinary scene between Hammond and myself—who beheld the pantomime of binding this struggling Something—who beheld me almost sinking from physical exhaustion when my task of jailer was over—the confusion and terror that took possession of the bystanders when they saw all this was beyond description. The weaker ones fled from the apartment. The few who remained clustered near the door, and could not be induced to approach Hammond and his charge. Still credulity broke out through their terror. They had not the courage to satisfy themselves, and yet they doubted. I gave a sign to Hammond, and both of us—conquering our fearful repugnance to touch the invisible creature—lifted it from the ground, manacled as it was, and took it to my bed. Its weight was about that of a boy of fourteen.

"Now, my friends," I said, as Hammond and myself held the creature suspended over the bed, "I can give you self-evident proof that here is a solid, ponderable body, which, nevertheless, you can not see. Be good enough to watch the surface of the bed attentively."

The eyes of the bystanders were immediately fixed on the bed. At a given signal Hammond and I let the creature fall. There was a dull sound, as of a heavy body alighting on a soft mass. The bed creaked. A deep impression marked itself distinctly on the pillow, and on the bed itself. The crowd who witnessed this gave a low cry, and rushed from the room. Hammond and I were alone with our mystery.

We remained silent for some time, listening to the low, irregular breathing of the creature on the bed, and watching the rustle of the bed-clothes as it impotently struggled to free itself from confinement. Then Hammond spoke:

"Let us reason a little, Harry. Here is a solid body, which we touch, but which we can not see. The fact is so unusual that it strikes us with terror. There is no parallel, though, for such a phenomenon? Take a piece of pure glass. It is tangible and transparent. A certain chemical coarseness that prevents its being so entirely transparent as to be totally invisible. It is not theoretically impossible, mind you, to make a glass so pure and homogeneous in its atoms that the rays from the sun will pass through it as they do through the air, refracted but not reflected. We do not see the rays, and yet we feel it."

"That's all very well, Hammond, but these are animate substances. Glass does not breathe; air does not breathe. This thing has a heart that palpitates—a will that moves it—lungs that play, and inspire and respire."

Hammond shook his head and was silent. We sat together, smoking many pipes, all night long by the bedside of the unearthly being that tossed and panted until it was apparently wearied out. Then we learned by the low, regular breathing, that it slept.

The next morning the house was all astir. The boarders congregated on the landing outside my room, and Hammond and myself were lions. We had to answer a thousand questions as to the state of our extraordinary prisoner, for as yet not one person in the house except ourselves could be induced to set foot in the apartment.

The creature was awake. This was evidenced by the convulsive manner in which the bed-clothes were moving in its efforts to escape. There was something truly terrible in beholding, as it were, these struggles for liberty which yet were invisible.

Hammond and myself had racked our brains during the long night to discover some means by which we might realize the shape and general appearance of the Enigma. As well as we could make out, by passing our hands over the creature's form, its outlines and lineaments were human. There was a mouth; a round smooth head without hair; a nose, which, however, was little elevated above the cheeks; and its hands and feet felt like those of a boy. At first we thought of placing the Being on a smooth surface and tracing its outline with chalk, as shoemakers trace the outline of the foot. This plan was given up as of no value. Such an outline would not give the slightest idea of its conformation.

A happy thought struck me. We would take a cast of it in plaster. This would give us the solid figure, and satisfy all our wishes. But how to do it? The movements of the creature would disturb the setting of the plastic covering, and distort the mould; another thought. Why not give it chloroform? It had respiratory organs—that was evident by its breathing. Once reduced to a state of insensibility, we could do with it what we would. A doctor was sent for, and after the physician had recovered from the first shock of amazement he proceeded to administer the chloroform. In three minutes afterward we were enabled to remove the fetters from the creature's body, and a modeler was busily engaged in covering the invisible form with the moist clay. In five minutes more he had a mould, and before evening a rough fac-simile of the mystery. It was shaped like a man—distorted, uncouth, and horrible, but still a man. It was small, not over four feet and some inches in height, and its limbs revealed a muscular development that was unparalleled. Its face surpassed in hideousness any thing I had ever seen. Gustave Dore never conceived anything so horrible. It was the physiognomy of what I should fancy a ghoul might be. It looked as if it was capable of feeding on human flesh.

Having satisfied our curiosity, and bound every one in the house to secrecy, it became a question what was to be done with our enigma. It was impossible that we should keep such a horror in the house; it was equally impossible that such an awful being should be let loose upon the world. I confess that I would have gladly voted for the creature's destruction. But who would shoulder the responsibility? Who would undertake the execution of this horrible semblance of a human being?

The most singular part of the affair was that we were entirely ignorant of what the creature habitually fed on. Everything in the way of nutriment that we could think of was placed before it, but was never touched. It was awful to stand by, day after day, and see the clothes toss, and hear the hard breathing, and know that it was dying.

Ten, twelve days, a fortnight passed, and it still lived. The pulsations of the heart, however, were daily growing fainter, and had now nearly ceased. It was evident that the creature was dying for want of sustenance. While this terrible life struggle was going on I felt miserable. I could not sleep. Horrible as the creature was, it was pitiable to think of the pangs it was suffering.

At last it died. Hammond and I found it cold and stiff one morning in the bed. The heart had ceased to beat, the lungs to inspire. We hastened to bury it in the garden. It was a strange funeral, the dropping of the viewless corpse into the damp hole. The cast of its form Hammond has still.

As I am on the eve of a long journey, from which I may not return, I have drawn up this narrative of an event the most singular that has ever come to my knowledge.

FITZ-JAMES O'BRIEN.

Chrysanthemums are good to eat—that is, the leaves of the big, bushy flower, much like a beautiful cabbage, make a good salad if they are properly prepared. In fact, the dish is one that is highly prized by the Chinese

MAGAZINE MAKING AND UNMAKING.

Contemporary History of the Evolution of a Monthly and a Weekly.

Alfred Henry Lewis has written in the editorial columns of a recent issue of Human Life some personal reminiscences of the editors and owners of Everybody's Magazine which illuminate various problems in the publishing world. This is his account of the change of ownership that preceded the real growth of the magazine:

Wanamaker had owned Everybody's and grown tired of its possession. He was looking for a purchaser upon whom to unload. Extant in the magazine world were Herman Ridgway and John Adams Thayer. These worthy men had been employed upon advertising and circulation, and were penny-counters of meritorious accuracy and exactitude. Both were weary of the business end of literature—which is not unlike keeping a peanut stand—and both burned to become editors.

There are three fields wherein every American believes himself organized to shine. His very soul tells him that he is a born farmer, a born law-maker, a born editor. If he desired to become a barber or wood-chopper, or yearned to carry a hod, he would admit that some slight apprenticeship was necessary. He needs none, however, where the task ahead is no more recondit than just to till a field, or govern a nation, or edit a magazine. Thus was it with Herman Ridgway and John Adams Thayer. They knew themselves for editors from their cradles, and lusted to begin. Thus they bought Everybody's of Wanamaker—somewhat to that merchant's relief.

The editor of the magazine at that time was J. O'H. Cosgrave, and he continued under the new ownership. To him is given the credit of suggesting that an article from Thomas W. Lawson, the Boston financier, would be a good thing:

When the three arrived in Boston, the unexpected, not to say the shocking, happened. Lawson wouldn't see them. He sent his secretary to say his time was so preyed upon and eaten by his own affairs, that he could not receive a call from Everybody's publishers. This was a profound jolt to the sensibilities of Thayer and Ridgway, who felt all the elevation of editors even though personally they might neither chart a magazine course nor steer one.

But Cosgrave persevered, and after days of waiting in the outer rooms of Lawson's offices he gained an interview and finally the promise of a contribution:

And thus the sequel came: Lawson wrote "Frenzied Finance." The world was thrilled, the bedplates of reforms were laid. Everybody's soared rapidly from loss to profit, from a circulation that was little to one that was big, from obscurity to celebration. Buoyant and springing, Lawson's magic pen-powers carried Everybody's aloft to dizzyest circulation heights in spite of what dead-weights were piled upon it, in the editorial ignorance of Thayer and Ridgway and of those subaltern lead-wits derived from the daily press.

Following the success of the monthly, the idea of a national weekly was developed. The plan of printing an edition in fourteen different cities was considered and the details studied. Mr. Thayer, at this juncture, retired from the enterprise, but the plans were adhered to and the publication appeared.

After four issues of the weekly, it was discovered that there were insurmountable difficulties in the way of joining so many purely local features, and the plan was modified, only four publication offices being retained. The editors in St. Paul, St. Louis, and San Francisco, and other staff employees resigned. Charles S. Aiken, editor of the San Francisco edition returned to his former position on the Sunset Magazine.

The weekly press of the country generally welcomed the new candidate for public favor, but seemingly has found little opportunity to complement the journal on its appearance or success. The following from Life of New York, is noted as a statement of opinion that is credited to another publication:

Inside views of literary matters are often more interesting than outside. The magazine situation is thus summed up in part by an acute, if somewhat flippant and slangy, writer in an interesting trade paper called The Publisher and Retailer:

The town is still full of amaze over the Ridgway fiasco—for that is the only word which fits the most colossal fizzle the periodical publishing world has ever seen. You can't find even one man who thinks it worth the paper it is printed on—and the Good Lord knows that is little enough. Never before has a paper fallen so far short of the standard promised by its advance announcements. Not a man connected with the publishing business but expected to find in the new Ridgway's a paper he would really have to read regularly. The preliminary advertising had filled every one with a belief that the new journal would be a power to be reckoned with from the first number. Instead of that it proved to be the triflingest thing ever put on the market at the price—at any price I might almost say. As it stands it is a cyclopean failure. If it continues on the plane of the first numbers its aggregate circulation will not run to one thousand in each of the fourteen cities of its simultaneous publication. If it is revolutionized into a paper worth while the publishers have a greater task before them to get the public to buy it again than they would have if they were to start another wholly new periodical.

THE WILL OF AN EMPRESS.

How Eugenie Was an Emperor and Governed a Prince.

In May last Eugenie, one time wife of Napoleon the Third and Empress of the French, completed her eightieth year; a bowed and pathetic, but ever romantic lady; long mourning an unfortunate husband, and the brave young son who fell in English ranks in Africa, and leading at this day "a life so unobtrusive that we think of her as already half withdrawn into the shadows."

The quotation is from "The Life of the Empress Eugenie," by Jane T. Stoddart, recently brought out in London by Hodder & Stoughton. There is evident sympathy with its subject on every page of the biography, and if some of the pictures are carefully softened, and some shadowy and willful passages in the life of the lady in exile are glossed over or omitted, there still may be found much of peculiar interest and historical value in the book. One of her English reviewers, Tighe Hopkins, has aptly characterized the recent chapters of this romantic and illustrious life:

The career of Eugenie from the date of her marriage in 1853 (she being then twenty-seven and peerless, with neck and arms that painters upreid, and hair like a Titian woman's), on through the glitter of the Second Empire to its debacle at Sedan; the sorry, inevitable flight—thirty-six years ago—from the invaded Tuilleries to England, in the keeping of the good American dentist; and on again through the long years of her profound friendship with the widowed Queen Victoria—all this, or what is most important or engaging in it, must be known to very many readers.

The Empress of the French is not French, but Spanish and Irish and Scottish in blood. These are family details:

William Kirkpatrick, of Malaga (1764-1837), the grandfather of the empress, was a fruit and wine merchant, so little above his business that he sold his wines personally to customers in a parlor at the back of his shop. The back parlor became a kind of club, frequented by the young officers of the town and by foreign visitors. Among the foreign visitors was Washington Irving, who met in the back parlor the Count de Teba (afterwards, by inheritance from his elder brother, the Count de Montijo), who married Maria Manuela, who was the mother of the empress, who was the granddaughter of the wine merchant who was not superior to his trade. Here, at a glance, we have the three blends of blood. Maria Manuela, who marries into one of the most illustrious houses in Spain, is the third daughter of William Kirkpatrick, an Irishman tracing back to Scotland—and not to Scotland merely, but to the Robert Bruce of Scotland.

As could safely be set down without certain knowledge, the mother of the empress was far from being an ordinary woman. This is her description:

The mother of the empress, Maria Manuela, was everywhere and all her life a woman of remark; a fine lady with a fine tang of the gypsy; a handsome, gay Bohemian, quite scholarly at points, fascinating in any company, and holding her own in all. Prosper Merimee, and the American Ticknor, persons with no great things in common, were enslaved by her. Ticknor, historian of Spanish literature, described her as "the most cultivated and the most interesting woman in Spain." The free-thinking Rabelaisian Merimee, whose letters are our richest mine of information about her, found in Maria Manuela the realization of the "glory and romance of southern Spain." Malicious gossip has been sufficiently busy with her memory, but the case of the scandalous chroniclers seems a worse than indifferent one.

It is of events preceding the fall of the French Empire that most entertaining stories concerning Eugenie have been written, and some of them will hear repeating or enlarging upon in the light of new developments. For there are new developments, so many years after the great catastrophe. The "good American dentist" spoken of was Dr. Thomas W. Evans, a loyal Philadelphian, who left to the city of his nativity a large portion of his fortune. His heirs contested the will, and in the legal investigation many intimate relations of those earlier years in Paris, and of later ones as well, have become known. In a recent number of the Metropolitan Magazine these developments are referred to by Sterling Heilig, a Paris correspondent who knows his field well. He writes, in recalling the outset of her career:

When Kirkpatrick's daughter brought her daughter to Paris in 1851, the charming young girl was not only descended from an unsuccessful British merchant of Malaga, but was also Mademoiselle Marie-Eugenie Guzman y Palafox Fernandez de Cordoba, Leyva La Cerda, Countess of Teba, of Banos, of Mora, of Santa Cruz, of La Sierra, Marquise of Moya, of Ardales, of Osera, and Viscountess of La Calzada. Her sister, Maria Francisca, was already wedded to the fifteenth Duke of Alva.

It was the fate of Eugenie to surpass both her sister and her mother in her marriage:

Napoleon, as prince-adventurer, had loved and been loved by his cousin Mathilde and by the Duchess of Hamilton. As prince-president the Prince of Wagram offered him his daughter. And when he became emperor the Prussians proposed him a sister of the famous Hohenzollern prince whose candidacy to the Spanish throne was to be later on opposed by Napoleon, with the consequence of causing the Franco-Prussian war—and his own downfall. Thus, from the start, Eugenie was to cost Napoleon the Third his empire.

The emperor soon discovered the uselessness of throwing his handkerchief at the feet of the beautiful stranger. Though continually invited to the Tuilleries, she remained always wisely with her mother and the others. Once after having passed a parade-review in the great courtyard, Napoleon drew his horse up under the windows of the first floor, to salute the ladies. He wished to dismount and come to them.

"Mademoiselle," he said, addressing Eugenie, "which way shall I take to get to you?" (He was almost as new to the Tuilleries as she, it being his first year as emperor.)

The girl, laughing, pointed to the right. "Sire," she called down, "you must come by way of the chapel!"

As a fact, the corridor leading to the chapel was the shortest route to those rooms of the palaces; but Napoleon understood.

Even with the favor of her imperial lover, Mdle. Montijo was not altogether happy or, at least, seemed not to be:

The court ladies were in full slander of her when Napoleon had made up his mind to marriage. They had extraordinary manners, those first ladies of the Second Empire court. One evening at Compiègne when Eugenie was going in to dinner on the arm of Colonel de Toulangeon, a slight confusion permitted him to whisk her ahead of Madame Fortoul, wife of the minister.

"How!" she exclaimed audibly to her cavalier, "do you permit that creature to push past me!"

The next morning Mlle. de Montijo, with tears in her eyes, stood sadly on the terrace, apart from the others. Napoleon, who had sought her, asked her the cause of her sorrow. "I must leave Compiègne," she faltered, and she told him her long list of slights and insults. The emperor listened to the beautiful girl, tranquil and smiling. Then, when she had finished, he tore a few green twigs from a bush, deftly twisted them into a crown and said loudly, that all might hear, as he placed it upon her head:

"Wear this one—meanwhile."

It was his announcement of their marriage; indeed, it is said he never actually asked her hand—he took it. Not a murmur arose from the court ladies; and at once they flocked around her.

Ambition was not sated but given zest by the royal place Eugenie thus gained;

As it was her way to commence at the top of the ladder, she sought opportunities to act as regent. During the Italian war of 1859 she got her first chance; and in 1865, when Napoleon went on a wealth trip to Algiers, he again named her regent.

These periods of regency created the political importance of Eugenie. It became difficult to refuse her entrance to the councils and knowledge of state matters after having confided to her almost their direction during months. The ministers got in the habit of consulting her—simple acts of deference, but she profited by them; and in the course of time the emperor found himself struggling with parlis pris, born of these confidences.

Stronger proof could not be offered of Napoleon's love, which endured all tests, than the fact that there was no break between them so far as the public ever knew, though in his study he wrote these lines shortly after the war:

"When in starting to the war the emperor instituted a regency, he imagined that the march of affairs could still be directed from the imperial quarters. According to the precedents of the First Empire, the regency should function only from the moment when the emperor quitted French territory. This was the case in 1859; but in 1870 the regency took the reins of government from the moment of the emperor's departure from Paris; and although by her letter-patent the empress had only restricted powers, there came, nevertheless, to be two governments, one with the army, and the other at Paris. The Chambers were convoked without the emperor's consent. To convoke the Chambers after a military defeat, is in France, to call down revolution."

After the death of Napoleon there was still the promise of a future for the deposed empress:

Eugenie and "the Party of the Empress" had a precious hostage still—her son, the hope of the Bonapartist cause. Though scarcely eighteen years of age, the young prince had been for the past two years both the political pupil and the confidant of his father. In the nature of things, he leaned toward his father's later liberalism and placed confidence in the lieutenants lately chosen by his father. Eugenie sought to correct all this as the prince imperial grew to manhood. The means which she found in her hands were financial. When certain friends of his father came to London, he was not always able to ask them to lunch.

From that period of youthful cheer and straightened funds comes the account of this mischance:

Once it was Comte Schouvalow and General Fleury. On his way to the appointment at the St. James Restaurant the general picked up a man the young prince ought to know; it was Arthur Meyer, today director of the Gaulois newspaper. That made an extra guest, but that made it pleasanter.

Both Meyer and the general were flattered that the prince imperial clung to them so when lunch was over. He held them long over coffee, liquors and cigars. And yet, as time went on, they saw that he was much preoccupied, as if debating something in his mind. At last he rose and quit the private room, to pay the bill, they reasoned. Then a maître d'hôtel appeared and asked the general to step outside a moment. The mystery had a simple cause. The prince lacked fourteen shillings to make up the bill. He had not counted on the second guest.

Napoleon's will is to this day a document incomprehensible to the general, though plain and explicit:

After recommending his son "to the great State bodies, the people, and the army," it ran thus: "I leave to the Empress all my private domain; and I desire that when my son comes of age she shall inhabit the Elysee and Biarritz. As to my son, let him always wear the seal which I have at my watch-chain and which comes from my mother. I do not speak of my old servants, being convinced that the Empress and my son will never abandon them."

Now, to have willed his private domain to the empress was but natural when he left his son at the same time a throne and a civil list of forty million francs a year; but the same will, understandable in 1865, becomes incomprehensible in 1873—when there was no longer a throne, no longer a civil list, but only the private domain, on which Eugenie laid hands wholly.

To assist the prince there was called a "family council," which declared him to be his father's heir and entitled to half the fortune; but there were still Eugenie and fate:

Eugenie put the papers in a drawer and kept her hands upon the entire fortune, confident the prince would make no scandal by demanding his rights of an English court. And the prince, saying nothing, quitted England and his mother—to meet death as a volunteer in the Zulu war.

Since then Eugenie's life has been spent in seeking climate, writing memoirs, for which she goes twice a year to Paris and spends days searching books and manuscripts in the National Library, and causing to fructify the private domain, the Bacciochi property, and the revenues of certain Marseilles real estate left by her father, the Count de Montijo, practically without value, but in these late years become enormously productive.

A man of seventy years has given to sleep 24 years 3½ months of his life.

OLD FAVORITES.

Nocturne.

Up to her chamber window
A slight wire trellis goes,
And up this Romeo's ladder
Clambers a bold white rose.

I lounge in the ilex shadows,
I see the lady lean,
Unclasping her silken girdle,
The curtain's folds between.

She smiles on her white rose lover,
She reaches out her hand
And helps him in at the window—
I see it where I stand!

To her scarlet lip she holds him,
And kisses him many a time—
Ah, me! it was he that won her
Because he dared to climb!

—T. B. Aldrich.

Precisecoe.

The new moon hung in the sky,
The sun was low in the west,
And my betrothed and I
In the churchyard paused to rest—
Happy maiden and lover,
Dreaming the old dream over:
The light winds wandered by,
And robins chirped from the nest.

And lo! in the meadow-sweet
Was the grave of a little child,
With a crumbling stone at the feet,
And the ivy running wild—
Tangled ivy and clover
Folding it over and over;
Close to my sweetheart's feet
Was the little mound up-piled.

Stricken with nameless fears,
She shrank and clung to me,
And her eyes were filled with tears
For a sorrow I did not see;
Lightly the winds were blowing,
Softly her tears were flowing—
Tears for the unknown years
And a sorrow that was to be!

—T. B. Aldrich.

Palabras Carinosas.

Good-night! I have to say good-night
To such a host of peerless things!
Good-night unto the slender hand
All queenly with its weight of rings;
Good-night to fond, uplifted eyes,
Good-night to chestnut hairs of hair,
Good-night unto the perfect mouth,
And all the sweetness nestled there—
The snowy hand detains me, then
I'll have to say Good-night again!

But there will come a time, my love,
When, if I read our stars aright,
I shall not linger by this porch
With my farewells. Till then, good-night!
You wish the time were now? And I
You do not blush to wish it so?
You would have blushed yourself to death
To own so much a year ago—
What, both these snowy hands! ah, then
I'll have to say Good-night again!

—T. B. Aldrich.

"I Vex Me Not with Brooding on the Years."

I vex me not with brooding on the years
That were ere I drew breath; why should I then
Distrust the darkness that may fall again
When life is done? Perchance in other spheres—
Dead planets—I once tasted mortal tears
And walked as now amid a throng of men
Pondering things that lay beyond my ken.
Questioning death, and solacing my fears,
Ofttimes indeed strange sense have I of this Vague memories that hold me with a spell
Touches of unseen lips upon my brow,
Breathing some incommunicable bliss!
In years foregone, O Soul, was all not well:
Still lovelier life awaits thee. Fear not thou!

—T. B. Aldrich.

It is just forty years since Prince Charles of Hohenzollern accepted the crown of Roumania, which was converted into a kingdom one after the principality achieved its independence: and the exhibition at Bucharest, which the king opened in the summer, was intended to show the immense industrial strides made by the country under its Hohenzollern ruler. His heir is his nephew, Prince Ferdinand, who married Marie, eldest daughter of the English Duke of Edinburgh.

The picturesque Chinatown of Pacific Grove will soon be a thing of the past. The site has been given to the University of California by the Pacific Improvement Company, and a biological laboratory will soon be located there. Prof. Loeh is to be at its head, and there will be erected a group of buildings costing about a quarter of a million, and accommodating four hundred students.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

It is said in London that Lord Curzon might have been the head of the British legation in Washington had he so willed. His peerage, being only an Irish one, leaves him eligible to sit again in the House of Commons, and it is probable that he will return when a safe seat offers.

In a suit brought against him recently in New York by a former workman claiming wages, Nikola Tesla said, in answer to a question by the lawyer of the plaintiff that he was not a promoter and had never received a fee, and added "I am an inventor, and rank among the foremost men of the age."

Kuehne Beveridge (Mrs. Branson), the American sculptor, has completed in Brussels the cast of the statue of "Grief," ordered by the city of San Francisco to commemorate the victims of the earthquake. She has begun work on a second statue to represent the resurrection of the city of San Francisco, says a cable despatch.

For nearly ten years Professor H. L. Bolley of the North Dakota Agricultural College has been studying plant diseases and their preventives and cures, and it is said that his discoveries have already added millions of dollars to the value of field crops. Much of the wheat sown in the great wheat-growing State is treated by Professor Bolley's successful method for preventing smut.

John Singer Sargent, the artist, was born in Florence of American parents, was educated in Italy and Germany, and then studied painting in the atelier of Carolus-Duran in Paris. Now, at the age of fifty, he is one of the great portrait painters of the world, and is also known for his sketches of Eastern life. His work in the decorations of the Boston Public Library is remarkable for its Oriental tone. He is a restless spirit, and is as well known along the shores of the Mediterranean as in London, Paris, or New York.

Frederick William Wile, an American born in LaPorte, Ind., thirty-two years ago has been made correspondent-in-chief for Germany of the London Mail and all the other newspapers and periodicals controlled by Lord Northcliff, formerly Alfred Harmsworth. Mr. Wile went abroad some years ago. During the Swedish-Norwegian crisis last year, at which time he interviewed King Oscar, he was the first American newspaper man to interview a European monarch for publication.

The German Emperor has accepted the resignation of the Prussian minister of agriculture, Gen. von Podbielski, on the ostensible ground of ill-health. Gen. von Podbielski was connected with the Timpelkirch firm of colonial contractors, the revelations of whose business methods aroused such widespread indignation against the minister that his retirement was inevitable. His share in the Timpelkirch scandals, combined with the increased price of meat consequent on his agrarian policy, aroused strong popular indignation. The Grand Cross of the Order of the Red Eagle in brilliants was given to him on his retirement.

Delphin Michael Delmas, the California orator, who is nearly sixty-three years of age, says frankly that he hopes in New York to recoup the losses he sustained at San Francisco. Few New Yorkers have heard him speak. Possibly they know him best as the delegate-at-large from California who placed in nomination William Randolph Hearst at St. Louis in 1904. Mr. Delmas is not by any means the first lawyer or orator of reputation in other parts of the country who has gone to New York in his later days to better his fortunes. Robert G. Ingersoll of Illinois, and Daniel Dougherty, of Philadelphia, did the same thing. Both were in middle life with established reputations as orators. Neither met the success at the bar that he expected. After his first term as President, Grover Cleveland practised law in New York but he did not accumulate riches. Three former speakers of the House of Representatives moved to the metropolis within recent years. John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, and Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, succeeded. David B. Henderson returned to Iowa a broken man. Alton B. Parker is doing well. Before his Presidential candidacy he had never had a law office in New York City.

If it be true as stated, that the ousting of Stayvesant Fish from the presidency of the Illinois Central Railroad was accomplished through the votes of men whose wives are jealous of Mrs. Fish's social ambitions, a most remarkable chapter has been added to the story of "high finance." Mr. Fish has been identified with the Illinois Central since he entered its New York office as a clerk in 1871, and held the office of president for nearly twenty years. Mr. Fish and his friends charge that a majority of the directors who voted for James T. Harahan and against Mr. Fish were not residents of Illinois, as the laws of that State are said to require, and will probably carry the case to the courts.

Lord Northcliff, formerly Sir Alfred Harmsworth, of England, may be entitled the greatest newspaper magnate of the world. He owns and actively directs some forty prosperous dailies and other periodicals. Lord Northcliff has lately secured for his publications the services of Pomeroy Burton, one of the efficient young editors who have won a reputation in the United States. Mr. Burton is to receive in his new position the salary of $20,000 a year. His career has been one of brilliant successes and of repeated advancement. From the position of a boy in a small newspaper office, Mr. Burton rose in time to be the Washington correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle. Afterward he became managing editor of the New York World, and subsequently an important member of the staff of the Hearst papers in New York.

Hotel St. Francis

a credit to
San Francisco

PERFECT SERVICE EVERY COMFORT	THEY WHO GO TO SEE GO TO STAY
--	--

The famous
Grill Room
is unsurpassed

Take your friends to lunch there

Del Monte Offers

During the reconstruction of San Francisco, Hotel Del Monte offers a welcome shelter to those desiring a homelike place for rest and recreation. The park-like grounds, the golf links, the flowers, the many walks and drives were never more attractive than at the present. The entire Hotel has recently been renovated and improved, with steam heat, electric lights, hot and cold water, telephones in every room. Why not make this attractive resort near San Francisco your permanent home? Special terms for families. Address Geo. P. Snell, Manager, Del Monte, California

A Permanent Home

THE OCULARIUM

Perfect Fitting
Eye Glasses

At Moderate Prices

Lenses Replaced, 50c

Henry Kahn & Co

OPTICIANS

1309 VAN NESS AVENUE

Between Bush and Sutter

Lea & Perrins' Sauce

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

Indispensable as a seasoning for Soups, Fish and Gravies

John Duncan's Sons, Agts., N. Y.

"The Secret of my Success"

LITERARY NOTES.

A Romance of the South.

In preparing a new edition of "On Newfound River," one of his early stories, Thomas Nelson Page has enlarged it with a view of giving a somewhat fuller reflection of the life it mirrors. It is a love story of country life in old Virginia before the civil war, and it turns on the love of the son of a rich planter for the granddaughter of a poor surgeon. Although the two latter are the planter's nearest neighbors for years, they persistently refuse to accept his hospitality, or the proffered friendship of the humbler folk along the Newfound river. The planter and his son are the last of a proud old family, that had lived on the same estate for six generations, although there was an elder brother of the planter, who had left home in anger many years before, and of whom nothing was ever heard. The son, when a boy, meets the surgeon's granddaughter by chance, and the children, in a pretty scene, plight their troth. The imperious aristocrat when he hears of the clandestine meetings of the children, sends the boy to a distant boarding school for eight years. But when he finally returns to the old home, the young man by no means has forgotten the sweetheart of his youth, and when they renew the affection of earlier years, he is told to choose between the girl and banishment from his family. Parental love conquers, however, when the young man, wounded by a brutal character of the district, is brought to the old surgeon's house for treatment. The planter visits his son, and discovers that his mysterious neighbor is his elder brother, and the lovely girl his own niece. The climax is developed with exquisite art.

"On Newfound River" abounds with graphic word-pictures of a Southern rural district before the war, when the "gentry ruled in a sort of manorial manner and their poorer neighbors bore a relation to them part retainer, part friend." It is a charming book, finely bound, and beautifully illustrated.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; $1.50.

An International Affair.

"Affairs of State," the sprightly account of certain surprising adventures which befel an American family in the land of windmills, is by Burton E. Stevenson, whose detective stories had considerable vogue several years ago. A trivial incident introduces two young American ladies to a German prince and an English nobleman. The latter is stopping at a Dutch watering place presumably because of illness, but really in the interests of England, then at war with the Boers. The prince is having trouble with his succession to a pivotal duchy in the German Empire, and the young Americans innocently are drawn into complications that promise to disturb the peace of Europe. There are secret service men, diplomats, and all the personnel of an international imbroglio in the story. The situation is humorous at first but quickly becomes dramatic, and moves on to a very satisfactory climax. The plot is full of surprises and entanglements which are not unraveled until the close of the tale.

Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York, $1.50.

San Francisco and Thereabouts.

A new and very handsome edition of "San Francisco and Thereabouts," by Charles Keeler, has been published. To read in Mr. Keeler's picturesque pages of Kearny street and the flower vendors, of Telegraph Hill and its quaint old shacks, of the Mexican restaurants of the Latin quarter, of the Barbary Coast, of Chinatown gay with colored lanterns, impresses one like the reading of a story of a city of the imagination. The book teems with memories of early days, but the descriptions of the city as it was just before the great fire now have the aspect of historical reminiscences, so far away seem the picturesque phases of life that made the old

San Francisco unique among American cities. But it is the author's hope that his book may serve not so much as a reminder of what is gone forever as an inspiration to the builders of the new San Francisco to hold fast to such traditions as are vital and good, and to incorporate them in the city already taking shape out of chaos. The book is reprinted with a large number of striking illustrations.

Published by A. M. Robertson, San Francisco; $1.00 net.

Richard Harding Davis's New Book.

Richard Harding Davis has followed up his previous romance, "Soldiers of Fortune" with a biographical work entitled "Real Soldiers of Fortune." There are those who prefer hearing about men who existed to reading of the most charming characters in fiction. Some of us believe that these Dugald Dalgettys have more striking adventures than the heroes of novels. Mr. Davis has not failed to make his book interesting. It relates the very remarkable careers of General William Walker, "the gray-eyed man of destiny," Baron Harden-Hickey, General MacIver, Winston Spencer Churchill, Capt. Philo Norton McGiffen, and Major Burnham, Chief of Scouts.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons; $1.50.

Recent Fiction.

"The Von Blumers," by Tom Masson, is illustrated by Bayard Jones. Mr. Masson is well-known as the managing editor of Life. It is needless to say that his book is bright and interesting. (Moffat, Yard & Co. $1.50 net.)

"Sir Nigel," by A. Conan Doyle, is much longer than the average novel, filling nearly three hundred and fifty closely written pages. In it Sir Conan goes back to the old days in which he was so successful, as in the "White Company"—back even to the fourteenth century. The author has evidently saturated himself with old chronicles and he has certainly succeeded in giving a color to the book which is not of our time, although no man can swear that it is that of the fourteenth century. It would be difficult indeed to say what kind of English was spoken in England in 1350. Sir Conan says the kind of English spoken by the lower classes would be more difficult to understand than the Norman French of their superiors, were both reproduced. Therefore, he has very wisely used English that may be understood of every one, but with a certain quaint, archaic flavor. (McClure, Phillips & Co. $1.50)

"The Bishop of Cottonwood," by John Trotwood Moore, is a story of the Southern cotton mills. It contains a colored frontispiece and five other illustrations. (J. C. Winston Co. $1.50.)

"In The Shadow of The Lord," by Mrs. Hugh Frazer, is a novel devoted to the life of Mary Washington, her meeting and marriage with Augustine Washington, life at the Court of George III, their journey to Virginia, pre-revolutionary politics, love episodes, duels, and French and Indian wars. This is the second printing. (Henry Holt & Co. $1.50.)

"Under Pontius Pilate," by William Schuyler, is a translation of correspondence between Caius Claudius Proculus in Judea, and Lucius Domitius Ahenobarbus at Athens in the years 28 and 29 A. D. It is translated and edited by William Schuyler. The book contains eight illustrations, the first of which is a reproduction of Regnault's "Salome." The others are also reproductions of famous paintings by Rubens and other famous artists. Oddly enough, they seem to us rather better than the current book illustrations. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.50.)

"Zaos," by Roe R. Hobbs, concerns a Harvard student who dreams that he lived in Egypt six thousand years ago as Commander of the King's Guards, and that he was the lover of Zaos, a beautiful girl who is pursued by a High Priest. The story begins on the Harvard campus and harks back to six thousand years ago. (Neale Publishing Co. $1.50.)

"Gates of Flame," by Roe R. Hobbs, shows how an innocent man may be a victim of circumstantial evidence. (Neale Publishing Co. $1.50.)

"White Blood," by Rev. H. M. Wharton, is "written to demonstrate that white blood must rule." (Neale Publishing Co. $1.50.)

"The Leader," by Mary Dillon, is a "political novel" of the style made popular by the success of "Peter Stirling." There is the "man of the people," who struggles up, becomes a political leader, and marries a young lady of the four hundred. (Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50.)

"The Plow Woman," by Eleanor Gates, is a story of the far West, of army posts, Indians and adventures. (McClure, Phillips & Co. $1.50.)

"The Coming of Dawn," by Charles Egerton, is a Twentieth Century novel laid in the eighteenth century. (John Lane Co. $1.50.)

"The Mystery of the Shadow," by Fergus Hume, is another of the regular Hume stories. It is illustrated by A. T. Smith. The illustrations are nightmares. (B. W. Dodge & Co.)

"Marcel Levignet," by Elwyn Barron, is a detective story. Its hero "loiters down the stairs of the Paris Opera House" and the story then begins on the boulevard. If he loitered much crossing the square to the boulevard, a motor or a cab would have ended the novel in the first chapter. (Duffield, $1.50.)

"Katrina," by Roy Rolfe Gilson, has a "newspaper man" for a hero, who plays the same role as the brilliant and skeptical doctor in the Sardou plays. It has six illustrations in color by Alice Barber Stephens. (Baker & Taylor Co. $1.50.)

"Confessions to a Heathen Idol," by Marion Lee, a woman of forty tells her love story to a little idol on her desk. It is illustrated from photographs, presumably of the author. (Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50.)

"The Second Violin," by Grace S. Richmond, is illustrated by D. J. Rosenmyer. It was serially printed in the Youth's Companion. (Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50.)

"The Victory," by Molly Elliot Seawell, contains four illustrations of even merit, all of them being very poor. The first chapter is laid in Virginia in the ante-bellum times and the story ends "after the war." (D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.)

"Witches' Gold," by Hamlin Garland, is stated to be a new and enlarged version of "The Spirit of Sweetwater," which was its basis in a shorter serial form. It is a story of mines, miners, mine-engineers and mining camps. It is needless to state that there is also a lady in it, and it closes on the brink of a wedding. (Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.50)

"Caybigan," by James Hopper, is a story of the Philippines. Mr. Hopper is one of the few writers who have had the necessary experience for working that new literary vein. He does it very cleverly indeed. (McClure, Phillips & Co.)

"Holyland," by Gustave Frenssen, is translated from the German by Mary Agnes Hamilton. It is laid among the humble people who live on the borders of the German Ocean: (Dana, Estes & Co. $1.50.)

Juvenile Books.

"Seem-So's," by L. J. Bridgman, is a child's picture-book in two colors. (H. M. Caldwell Co.) "Racketty-Packetty House" and "Queen Silver-Bell," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Each contains twenty illustrations in color by Harrison Cady. (Century Co.; price 60 cents each.)

"Lady Hollyhock and Her Friends" is a book of nature dolls by Margaret Coulson Walker with drawings by Mary Isabel Hunt. It is illustrated in color and black and white. (Baker & Taylor Co.)

"Verbeck's Book of Bears," by Hanna Rion, Hayden Carruth, and Frank Verbeck, contains a number of pictures in color and black and white. (J. P. Lippincott Co.)

"Animal Serials," by E. Ward Blaisdell, are copiously illustrated in black and white. (T. Y. Crowell & Co.)

"The Auto Cued" is a pictorial alphabet by James Jay O'Connell and Rudolph E. Leppert. (E. P. Dutton & Co.)

"Beastly Rhymes," by Burgess Johnson, with pictures by F. Ward Blaisdell, has an introduction by Celett Burgess. (T. Y. Crowell & Co.)

"Doors of War," by Walter Emmanuel is illustrated by Cecil Aldin. (Charles Scribner's Sons; $1.25.)

"The Golden Goblet" or "The Flying Dutchman Junior," by Curtis Dunham, illustrated in color by George F. Kerr. (Bobbie-Mell Co.)

"The Punch and Judy Book," by Helen Hay Whitney, has pictures by Charlotte Harding. (Duffield & Co., New York.)

"The Babies' Hymnal" is selected by Marion H.P. McFadden, with designs by Abraham Poole, Jr. It is a very artistic piece of work. (A. C. McClurg & Co.)

Harper Publications.

"Some Successful Marriages," by Abby Meguire Roach, is illustrated by Alice Barber Stephens. It discusses the romance and philosophy of married life. ($1.25.)

"Balboa," by Frederick A. Ober, is a popular life of the discoverer. ($1.00 net.)

"Beyond the Rocks," by Elinor Clyn, is a love story laid in London, the Riviera, and Paris. ($1.50.)

"Gray Mist," by the author of "The Martyrdom of an Empress," is illustrated in color from paintings by the author. The scenes are laid in Brittany among humble fisher folk. ($1.50 net.)

"The Life of Christ Without—Within" by Henry Ward Beecher, is made up of two of that divine's sermons. ($1.00.)

"Kate" is a comedy by Bronson Howard, one of the most successful among the elder American dramatists. The comedy deals with the modern question of international marriages. The author has published his play in book form before producing it on the stage. Stage directions and repetitions of names are omitted, making the reading easier.

New Publications.

"Through the Gates of the Netherlands," by Mary E. Waller, contains twenty-four artistic illustrations in photogravure by A. Montferand. It describes the life and habits of the Netherlands with much attention to detail. The book is an extremely handsome one. Little, Brown & Co.; $3 net.

"The Worker, and Other Poems," by Coningsby William Dawson, are meritorious verses on melancholy themes. Although the poet prays that "grievous men grow glad because of me," he can not expect them to wax merry over poems that sing of death and suffering, injustice and sin. The Macmillan Company, New York; $1.25 net.

"The Birch-Tree Fairy Book," edited by Clifton Johnson and illustrated by Willard Bonte, contains a number of the old favorites. If children nowadays are as they used to be, they greatly prefer the fairy stories they know to those they never heard before. There are such time-honored favorites as "Jack the Giant-Killer" and "The Forty Robbers" in this volume, which leads us to believe rejoicingly that all of the children nowadays are not yet grown up. There are over one hundred pictures in the book and it is handsomely bound in decorated cloth. Little, Brown & Co.; price $1.75.

GAS HEATERS

$1.50

Six feet of TUBING FREE
AT YOUR SERVICE

THE GAS COMPANY

500 Haight Street 421 Presidio Ave.
1260 Ninth Ave. 2965 16th St.

SPENCERIAN

STEEL PENS

To write easily and smoothly, you want a pen that's even of point.
To get a pen that's even of point, buy the Spencerian Pen.
Made of the best steel, by expert hand workers. Every one perfect. No seconds. There's a Spencerian Pen made for you.
Sample card of 12 pens, different patterns, sent upon receipt of 6 cents in postage.
SPENCERIAN PEN CO., 349 Broadway, New York.

LIBRARIANS TAKE NOTICE

PROBATE SALE

Full set (except 1856) of SAN FRANCISCO DIRECTORIES for sale, including Kimball's for 1850, Parker's for 1852-53, LeCount and Strong's for 1854, Langley's for 1858 to 1895 (both inclusive), and Crocker-Langley's from 1896 to 1904 (both inclusive); in good condition.

Sealed bids received until noon Saturday, December 22, 1906.

Address: JOSEPH HUTCHINSON
1117 Mission Street San Francisco, Cal.

Books at Cost

CLOSING OUT ENTIRE LINE OF
NEW BOOKS AT A REDUCTION OF 33 1/3 per cent on regular books
20 " " " net

A SAVING OF 50c On Every $1.50 Book
35c On Every $1.00 Book
25c On Every 75c Book

JAMES D. BLAKE

AT THE SIGN OF THE LAMP
643 Turk Street Near Van Ness Ave.
Open Evenings after 7 o'clock

EDUCATIONAL

St. Matthew's Military School

Burlingame, California

Easter Term begins January 10, 1907

For illustrated catalogue address

REV. WILLIAM A. BREWER, Rector

IRVING INSTITUTE

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Accredited by the universities. Special advantages in music art, and elocution. Twenty-eighth year.

MISS PINKHAM and MISS MACLENNAN, Principals.
2126 California Street, San Francisco.
Easter Term opens Monday, January 7, 1907, 9 a. m.

Twin Oaks Camp School.

Outdoor life on a Ranch for boys under fifteen.

Each boy has a tent-house and saddle horse.

Best of references.

Address

MISS MARGARET MARSH-PARKER,
SAN MARCOS, San Diego Co., California.

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL

Palo Alto, Cal. Home and Day School for Girls. Intermediate and Primary Departments. Certificate admits to Stanford, Vassar and Wellesley. Number limited. Reopens August 20th.

MR. HUGO MANSFELDT

Announces his removal to 2090 Fell St., corner of Shrader. Telephone West 1736.

U. REVEL, A. M.

Post-Graduate from Florence Italy.

ITALIAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

918 Alice Street Oakland

LITERARY NOTES.

Jack London's Drama.

Jack London has written a three-act drama, but Messrs. Fitch, Howard, Thomas, et al., need not look to their laurels. Unless London writes another and a better drama the playwrights have not a dangerous competitor in the novelist.

"Scorn of Women," is the title, Dawson is the scene, and 1897 the time of the play. The characters include a Greek dancer, a Klondike millionaire, a Hungarian adventurer, a United States army captain and his wife, an Indian dog-driver, and a young girl of "the soft and clinging kind." The play is concerned with the love affairs of a young Eldorado king, a man of almost childish emotions. He is easy prey for designing women, and when the dazzling Hungarian appears on the scene, she has no difficulty in persuading him to elope with her to civilization to enjoy his millions. But a sweetheart from the States, whom he had sent for, is hastening over the ice, and is hourly expected. The dancer and the army captain's wife learn of the intended elopement, and each contrive plans to detain the young fellow until his sweetheart's arrival. The "unco guid" of the camp believe that Freda, the Greek girl, is actuated by mercenary motives, but the matronly interest of Mrs. Captain Eppingwell is beyond reproach. It is the dancer who finally succeeds in preventing his departure, by simulating affection for him, and the fickle miner asks her to be his companion in the elopement instead of the Hungarian. The girl from the States arrives in the midst of his passionate dialogue with Freda, and he just as lightly transfers his affection to her.

The dramatic vigor of London's stories is absent from the play, which seems to have been hastily constructed. The comedy is bright at intervals, but on the whole the book is only mildly interesting.

Published by The Macmillan Company, New York; $1.25.

Susan Coolidge's Poetry.

Susan Coolidge is, perhaps, better known for the "Katy Did" series, and other books for children, than as a writer of poetry. The reason is probably that the frankly religious tone of many of her poems has limited her admirers among the general reading public. Whether it be a fact to deplore or not, the lover of poetry, however devout he may be, does not usually woo the halo-crowned muse.

There is an eloquent sketch of Susan Coolidge in a posthumous volume of her poems, "Last Verses." The verses are marked by the cheery, sympathetic note that is characteristic of her writings. Her intense and vivid interest in life, her "words of rejoicing for all who are happy, and words of consolation for those who are sad," will find for her "Last Verses" a warm welcome in many hearts. The opening poem, "Helen Keller," is a beautiful tribute to the talented blind girl.

Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $1.00 net.

Pike's Peak to The Pacific.

"The Land of Enchantment," by Lilian Whiting, has thirty-five full page illustrations from photographs. It describes the continent "from Pike's Peak to the Pacific," the various places described and pictured are the Grand Canyon, Summit of Pike's Peak, the Devil's Slide near Cripple Creek, Gateway of the Garden of the Gods, Cathedral Spires near Colorado Springs, Cathedral Rocks, the Enchanted Mesa, the Cliff Dweller Ruins, the Watch Tower, New Mexico, the Petrified Giant Forest, and other views in Arizona.

Published by Little, Brown & Co.; $2.50 net.

Shakespeare Texts.

Professor Thomas R. Lounsbury has written a work entitled "The Text of Shakespeare," which covers the ground from the publication of the quartos and folios down to the editions of Pope and Theobald. Professor Lounsbury discusses the earliest editions and the differences of the early texts. He also devotes much space to Pope's edition, his treatment of the text, Pope's attack on Theobald, Warburton's attack on Pope, the reception of Theobald's edition, its defects, his difficulties, and Shakespeare controversies generally, including the great one of 1728. Professor Lounsbury has delved deeply in mounds of dead and gone newspapers, and his work is a monument of original research.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Century Company Publications.

"The Chateaux of Touraine" is a handsome volume, the text by Maria Horner Lansdale, pictures by Jules Guerin. Of illustrations there are over three score, some in color, the rest in black and tint from photographs. Among the interesting chateaux in the pictures are Chinon, Plessis-le-Tours, Loches, St. Ours, Langeais, Amboise, Blois, Luynes, Chenonceaux, Cheverny, and finally Chambord, the historic chateau of which the last Bourbon Pretender to France's throne wore the name while exiled in Austria. Historic chateaux are these indeed, and to forget their Gothic beauty. Those who have not seen them could not do better than to examine their counterfeit presentiments in Miss Lansdale's book. There is much historic lore in the volume, and the pictures of the chateaux, towers, and dungeons show windows from which famous persons escaped, and cells in which other famous persons were imprisoned. There is an elaborate analytical table of contents and a complete index. (Price, $6.00 net. Postage, 27 cents.)

"Georgie," by Dorothea Deakin, is a story of a "big, blonde, boyish Englishman," who loves a different girl in every chapter. Were he an American he might divorce and marry a different wife in every State—if he could get them, bona fide. Being an Englishman, he probably never thought of that. There are many amusing situations in the story. ($1.50.)

"Don-A-Dreams," by Harvey J. O'Higgins, is the story of a Canadian youth who seeks his fortune in New York, and of the girl whom he loves, who tries to make her living there by teaching music. ($1.50.)

"A Modern Madonna," by Caroline Abbott Stanley, is a novel with a motive, which is to bring about the repeal of laws taking the custody of children away from their mother. This story is laid in Washington, D. C., where by District law a widow is deprived of her child under her husband's will. ($1.50.)

H. G. Wells has written his greatest book, "In the Days of the Comet," a romance of intense human interest. Before "the great change," when earth became Utopia, men lived in a dark world; it was full of preventable disorder, preventable diseases, preventable pain, of hardships and cruelties. The story of three persons—a middle-class English girl and her two lovers—who lived at this evil period is told in "In the Days of the Comet." The girl elopes with one of the men at a time when the population has been watching a beautiful comet which has been lighting the sky for weeks. The discarded lover, who has been seeking his rival and the girl, finds them at the moment when the comet grazes the earth. All living things are suddenly asphyxiated by the green vapors of the comet, and when the world awakes a marvelous change has come over the spirit of the people. The ideal of peace and good will is realized at last; the young lover has lost his enmity; the warring of the classes has ceased; the "brotherhood of man" has dawned. The love story from this point is one of exhilarating interest. While the book is remarkable as a work of the imagination, it is also a stirring arraignment of the faults of the present time. ($1.50.)

Travel Books.

"Rosemary in Search of a Father," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, is one of the "travel novels" now so much in vogue. The authors are notable for their successful motor-car novels. This is in the same vein; it begins with "a rose-girl at the Monte Carlo Casino," and a young man; it ends with a fire kindled by a jealous woman at Eze, which is one of the villages on the Corniche Road. The book is handsomely illustrated, and has ornamental borders and end pieces. (McClure, Phillips & Co.)

"Pictures from the Balkans," by John Foster Frazer, contains forty full page plates from photographs, a colored frontispiece, a map, and an index. The book is quite up to date, the author having apparently visited the Balkan peninsula as recently as a year ago. (Cassell & Co.)

"Italian Days and Ways," by Anne Hollingsworth Wharton, contains eight illustrations after photographs. The book is in the form of letters written home. It begins at Genoa, goes along the Riviera, to Rome, and ends at Lake Como. (Lippincott & Co.; $1.50 net.)

"The Fair Hills of Ireland," by Stephen Gwynn, is illustrated by Hugh Gwynn in color and crayon. There are four colored plates and over thirty black and white illustrations. It is, as the author says, "a guide book to places of historic interest in Ireland" but it is a great deal more. The author is a strong lover of his native land and even prints some Gaelic poems in the book. (MacMillan & Co.; $2.00.)

Books for Boys and Girls.

"Deeds of Daring Done by Girls," by N. Hudson Moore, illustrated in colors by Archie Gunn. (Stokes Co.; $1.50.)—"Things Worth Doing," by Lina Beard and Adelia B. Beard, tells how to make toys and play games. (Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.00.)—"The Field and Forest Handy Book," by D. S. Beard, tells how to make kites, aquariums, herbals, ums, boats, camp-o-vens, log houses, and how to camp out. (Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.00.)—"Lost in the Forbidden Land," by Edward S. Ellis, tells of Americans who trace the Pileomayo River to its source. (John C. Winston Co.; $1.00.)—"The Further Fortunes of Pinkey Perkins," by Captain Harold Hammond, U. S. A., is the story of a mischievous boy. (Century Co.; $1.50.)—"Jack the Young Canoeeman," by George Bird Grinnell, illustrated by Edward Willard Deming, describes a canoe voyage along the coast of British Columbia. (Stokes Co.; $1.25.)—"The Crimson Swastika," by Ralph Henry Barbour, illustrated by C. M. Relyea, is an "athletic story" of hazing, hockey, and boating. (Century Co.; $1.50.)—"The Beautiful Story of Doris and Julie," by Gertrude Smith, illustrated in colors, is for small girls. (Harpers; $1.20 net.)—"Poems for Young Americans," by Will Carleton is illustrated. Poems, patriotic and humorous. (Harpers; $1.25.)—"A Little Son of Sunshine," by Ellen Douglas Deland. Story of an orphan boy. (Harpers; $1.25 net.)—"Dunnie," by Philip Ver-rill Mighels. Story of a little boy from the East who goes to live in a Western lumber camp. (Harpers; $1.25.)—"Wee Winkles and Snowball," by Gabrielle E. Jackson. Story of a pet pony. (Harpers; $1.25 net.)—"The Orange Fairy Book," by Andrew Lang, illustrated by Henry Ford. Stories from South Africa, from the Punjab, and other strange places. (Longmans; $1.50 net.)—"The Fairy Ring," by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Nora Archibald Smith is a compilation from many other standard collections of fairy stories. (McClure, Phillips & Co.)

Harper Bros. Publications.

"The Illustrious O'Hagan," by Justin Huntly McCarthy, is laid in a German principal in the eighteenth century. O'Hagan is a soldier of fortune, and rescues Dorothea from her dissolute husband. When a lady is rescued from her husband by a gallant young man there is but one ending, which is apparent to the meanest intellect. ($1.50.)

The author of "The Garden of Allah," Robert Hichens, has written a story that throbs with emotional power in "The Call of the Blood." It is the tale of a young English couple who are spending their honeymoon on the Island of Sicily. Into their life comes a beautiful peasant girl who forces the Englishman to play a leading part in a series of dramatic adventures. ($1.50.)

Those who have the sailor's love and knowledge of the sea and ships will read Joseph Conrad's "The Mirror of the Sea," with great enjoyment, but the book has less of interest for the landsman. There are fifteen papers on as many phases of sea life, and all are written in the masterly style that distinguishes Mr. Conrad's work. ($1.50.)

A romance that at once suggests "The Prisoner of Zenda," and which many will read with equal interest, is Anthony Hope's new story, "Saphy of Kravonia." A high-spirited English girl, who saves the life of the Prince of Kravonia, and who thereby becomes entangled in court intrigues, conspiracies, and exciting adventures, is the chief character in the story. ($1.50.)

Bobbs-Merrill Co. Publications.

"Romance Islands," by Zona Gale, contains three illustrations in tint of Hermann C. Wall. ($1.50.)

"Jewel Weed," by Alice Ames Winter, is illustrated by Harrison Fisher, and its illustrations are above the average. An Oriental from the far East framed in a middle-Eastern setting is an unusual note. ($1.50.)

"Saul of Tarsus," by Elizabeth Miller, begins "in the year 30 A. D." Herod, Agrippa, and other Biblical personages figure in it. It is illustrated by Andre Castaigne. Mr. Castaigne has not the time to draw so well as he used to do. ($1.50.)

"The Charlatans," by Bert Leston Taylor, is a "musical novel," and tells the story of a Western farmer's daughter who goes to the big city to study music. ($1.50.)

New Publications.

"The Incomplete Amorist" justifies E. Nesbit's conspicuous place among the leading women novelists. It is a story of art and social life in and around Paris, although the principal characters are English. The author is at her best in humorous dialogue, in fact her love of the ridiculous is so keen that the more serious situations are interrupted by comedy incidents. (Doubleday, Page & Co. New York; $1.50.)

HOLIDAY BOOKS

THE FIRST FORTY YEARS OF WASHINGTON SOCIETY

From the Letters and Journals of Mrs. Samuel Harrison Smith (Margaret Bayard). Edited by Gaillard Hunt.

Illustrated. $2.50 net Postpaid $2.70

"With a keen sense of humor, an eye for the picturesque, warm sympathies and considerable cultivation, Mrs. Smith could not fail to be a good correspondent, and her writings are of genuine value and most entertaining."—N. Y. Tribune.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS' new book

REAL SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE

In his great novel, "Soldiers of Fortune," Mr. Davis described the ideal adventurer. Here he tells even more brilliantly the true and extraordinary histories of such men as General William Walker, Baron Harden-Hickey, General MacIver, Winston Spencer Churchill, and Capt. Philo Norton McGiffen, and Burnham, chief of scouts.

Illustrated, $1.50 net (postage 12 cents).

CAMP FIRES IN THE CANADIAN ROCKIES

By W. T. HORNADAY Illustrated with photographs by J. M. Philips

"There were adventures with grizzlies, a great mountain-sheep hunt, wonderful trout-fishing, and the grandest of scenery to fill the trip with unalloyed delight and give zest to every page of the book. Mr. Hornaday is in very close sympathy with nature, abounds in humor, writes well, and, best of all he abhors the ruthless destruction of animal life."—New York Times Review.

$3.00 net (postage 24 cents).

THE QUEEN'S MUSEUM and other Fanciful Tales

By FRANK R. STOCKTON Illustrated in colors, $2.50

The best and most popular of Stockton's inimitable fairy stories, full of the whimsical humor and gay spirits that make them perfect of that kind, and beautifully illustrated in sympathetically quaint and fanciful manner.

A LITTLE BOOK OF BORES

By OLIVER HERFORD With drawings by the author

"Those who have suffered from the various varieties of Bores will feel a sense of thankfulness to the author."—Brooklyn Eagle. $1.00 net (postage 8 cents).

THE DOGS OF WAR

By WALTER EMANUEL Illustrated by Cecil Aldin

"In no book since 'Rab' has the life of the common cur been portrayed with so much proudness and truthfulness."—Newark Advertiser.

BY ITALIAN SEAS

By ERNEST C. PEIXOTTO Illustrated by the author

"Without exception this is one of the most entertaining books on travel it has been our good fortune to meet with, pleasant reading, vivid description, bright and genial tone."—Philadelphia Press.

$2.50 net (postage 20 cents).

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, New York

Pears'

My grandmother used Pears' Soap; perhaps yours did, too. We owe them gratitude for that.

Use Pears' for the children; they soon acquire the habit.

Established in 1789.

ROBERTSON'S

NEW LOCATION

1539

Van Ness Ave., near Pine

"Next to the White House"

Mr. Robertson calls attention to the above address, which is very centrally located.

JEFFERSON.

VANITY FAIR.

Athletic sports of college young men and women were topics discussed in a recent interview with President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard. He favors but two of those formerly in high favor.

"Basketball is very objectionable," he said. "It is too rough and there are too many chances for cheating. The rules have been stretched so that they spoil the game. It would be a good thing to have basketball especially discontinued.

"Rowing and tennis are the only sports in which honorable play altogether is practiced. You can no more cheat in those two sports than in a game of cards; you would be crowded out of society if you tried.

"To baseball there are many objections. Still, I would not advocate its discontinuance, because it is so popular. Some forms of track sports are also objectionable. There is too much cheating on records.

"Hockey is altogether too rough. It requires team work, and I must say I have no use for a game that requires that. It is not open enough and, as in basketball, its rules have been distorted.

"I have explained my objections to football. I know it is popular, but, as I have said, the university would not suffer if there were no more football.

"I can not say too much in favor of rowing. Not only is there an absence of cheating, but it is the most healthful and interesting as well as one of the two most honorable sports.

"Tennis can be played with profit by any one. All it requires is individual skill and brains. There is no underhanded team work to it."

Society in Berkeley, the California University town, has been shocked by the abrupt disbandment of a new exclusive cotillion club, because of a "rough house" that took place at the second dance given at the Town and Gown clubhouse. Several of the members of the defunct organization have allowed the facts of the lively evening to leak out and have even gone so far as to confide to some of their friends that it formed one round of joy for a number of frolicsome high school lads. The jollity of the young men would probably have been overlooked had it not been for the fact that a bill for repairs was sent by the Town and Gown Club, the exclusive women's organization, to the ladies who acted as patronesses. The sum was quite a large one, and, although there was considerable money in the treasury of the Cotillion Club most of it was expended in meeting the bill. The patronesses were so incensed at the turn of affairs that they hurriedly called a meeting at once, framed a curt note stating that the Cotillion Club had been disbanded and sent copies of it to all the members.

Judging from the admission made by some of the guests at the function, there was no end of fun for the young society lads who gave vent to their mischievousness. One of the pastimes consisted in catching unwary swains and locking them in an ante-room, which was used as an improvised bastille. Determined to keep the engagements on their dance programmes, some of the young men kicked out the panels of the door which held them in, and made their escape to the main floor again. Another amusement consisted in breaking open a locker in which the ladies of the Town and Gown Club keep their banquet dishes. The china was found to make an excellent noise-maker, especially when it was dropped to the cement sidewalk outside. Water was squirted from faucets and the wainscoting scratched. All the details of the damage were itemized in the bill sent to the patronesses.

While the members of the Cotillion Club, whose existence has been so suddenly terminated, were nearly all students at the Berkeley High School, the organization was conducted principally under the direction of the parents of the young people. Nobody was considered to be in the social swim in the high school unless he had an invitation to the cotillions. As a result, invitations to the affairs were eagerly sought for. It is said that the members of the Lambda Theta Phi sorority and the Phi Delta Kappa fraternity were most conspicuous on the guest list of the cotillion. The patronesses included many of the best known ladies of Berkeley society.

The quality of the American girl's voice, and the uses to which the voice is put, furnished subjects for some remarks by the editor of the North American Review that must be called acidulous. There is nothing beyond mere appearance that pleases him in this connection, as may be seen from his criticism:

Our girls have not yet acquired the peculiar method of the cultivated English voice because of a continuing disposition to speak with the muscles of the throat rather than of the lips; but this practice is very far removed from the nasal method, and possesses a distinct advantage in freedom from the English doll-like monotony. We find little that is interesting, aside from her physical appearance, in the American girl of today between the ages of 15 and 22. She has failed to keep pace in any respect with the American boy, whose advancement we recently remarked with satisfaction. Indeed, if the blunt truth be spoken, she is an intolerable bore, self-conscious, ignorant and concerned chiefly with matrimonial aspirations. To the Englishman her pertness, which he imagines to be chic, is fascinating and indicative of mental brightness, but this effect is attributable largely to his own dullness. It is the clever management of a limited number of phrases, supplemented by copious use of what he considers delightful slang, not substance or even measurable information, that appeals to his jaded mentality. In point of intelligence, she is, we believe, the equal if not the superior of her English cousin, but in the choice of language she is sadly inferior.

In the Review editor's conclusion there is at least some apparently exact information concerning the derivation of recently coined terms:

The use of slang by boys finds some excuse in an unavoidable association with unrefined men; its use by girls is simply odious and a direct reflection upon the attention and taste of their mothers. This is easily proven by inquiry into the source of the petted phrases. Take, for example, two of the latest—"Twenty-three" and "Skidoo." These have slightly different meanings, the exact interpretation of the former being "to the rear," and the latter "scamper," or "flee in haste." The former had its origin at the race track, which ordinarily has only sufficient width to accommodate twenty-two horses standing side by side, so that the twenty-third is necessarily relegated to an unfavorable position. The use of the coined phrase, therefore, implies a knowledge of details of professional sport, the possession of which by a young girl is distinctly unbecoming. The second is a mere substitute for "skedaddle," itself of American origin and now regarded by common consent as egregiously vulgar. Scores of like illustrations might be put in evidence; but these should suffice to convince a mother, teacher, or even a comparatively ignorant girl herself of the desirability of seeking the roots of terms whose use she has come to regard as an evidence of smartness.

Being a soldier and not a financier Lord Wolseley has lost steadily in reckless commercial enterprises with which he has occupied himself since he vacated his position as Commander-in-Chief. In spite of the fact that England showed her appreciation of the hero of Tel-el-Kebir by a grant of $275,000 and a peerage, his fortune now is so reduced that it is said mortgages have been piled upon his country house, Glynde, in Sussex, and he has been compelled to accept the king's grant of apartments at Hampton Court Palace, which is a kind of royal almshouse and, with this he is compelled to sell his magnificent collection of ancient arms and armor.

IT IS EASY WITH ELECTRO SILICON
to Clean and Polish
SILVERWARE
Send address for a FREE SAMPLE, or 15c. in stamps for a full box. Electro-Silicon Soap has equal merits.
THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 30 Cliff St., New York.
Grocers and Druggists sell it.

The Little Palace Hotel
corner of
Post and Leavenworth Sts.
IS OPEN
The same excellence in cuisine and service that obtained in the Old Palace is duplicated in the new "Little Palace."
JOHN C. KIRKPATRICK
Manager

Hotel del Coronado
A gem set in semi-tropical surroundings
Dryest marine climate known
No winter, but perpetual spring or early summer
Outdoor sports 365 days in the year
Golf, Polo, Tennis
Fishing, Boating and Bathing
Choicest cuisine of any hotel in the West
American plan only
All modern conveniences
All outside rooms
Send for illustrated booklet.
MORGAN ROSS, Mgr., Coronado Beach Cal.
H. F. NORCROSS, General Agent
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

These trade-mark crescent crosses are on every package
CRESCO FLOUR For (Formerly called GLUTEN FLOUR)
SPECIAL DIABETIC FLOUR
K. C. WHOLE WHEAT FLOUR
Unlike all other goods. Ask grocers.
For book or sample, write
FARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N. Y., U. S. A.

PRINTING CARES of Business People taken care of by
SPAULDING-GRAUL COMPANY
Formerly GEO. SPAULDING & CO.
being a concern where the wants of those desiring Printing, Lithographing, Bookbinding, Designing, Engraving, Etc., are given prompt attention. Give us a trial.
914 Howard Street at Fifth
Phone Temp. 2351 San Francisco

HOTEL COLLINGWOOD
35th St., between 5th Ave. and Broadway
NEW YORK CITY
New fire-proof hotel, located in the shopping and theatre district, containing every modern device for comfort of guests.
Positively exclusive. Service a la carte.

JAMES TRICYCLE CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF
Rolling Chairs
FOR ALL PURPOSES
Self-propelling Tricycle Chairs
FOR THE DISABLED
INVALID CHAIRS
Wholesale & Retail and For Rent
SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE,
1808 Market St., San Francisco, or 837 South Spring St., Los Angeles.

BANKING.

STEAMER DAY YIELDS TO MODERN METHODS

Now that Steamer Day is abolished, it is no longer necessary to keep large sums of money on hand, tempting theft or burglar. The safer and more convenient method is to open a bank account and mail checks when accounts are due.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Company

Pays Interest on Checking Accounts

and extends every courtesy to its depositors—large or small. You are invited to open an account at the Home Office or one of our branches.

HOME OFFICE

California and Montgomery Streets

West End Branch 1531 Divisadero
Uptown Branch 1850 Geary, near Fillmore
Mission Branch 927 Valencia

Mutual Savings Bank

710 Market St., Opposite Third

SAN FRANCISCO
Guaranteed Capital $ 1,000,000
Paid-up Capital 300,000
Surplus 320,000
Assets 10,000,000
Interest paid on deposits.
Loans on approved securities.

Officers—President, James D. Phelan; First Vice-President, S. G. Murphy; Second Vice-President, John A. Hooper; Secretary and Cashier, Geo. A. Story; Asst. Secretary and Asst. Cashier, C. B. Hohson; Attorney, Frank J. Sullivan.
Directors—James D. Phelan, John A. Hooper, Frank J. Sullivan, Jas. M. McDonald, S. G. Murphy, James Moffitt, Roht. McElroy, Charles Holbrook, Rudolph Spreckels.

French American Bank

Union Trust Building (Third Floor)

Ready to accommodate its customers and do a general banking business. We will collect on insurance policies for those wishing our services.

THE FRENCH SAVINGS BANK

occupies offices in the same building.

Officers—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Bocqueraz, Vice-President.
Directors—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Berg-erot, E. J. DeSahla, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, J. J. Mack, Geo. Belaney, Leon Kaufman.

Our Branch Bank is Now Open

at No. 810 Van Ness Avenue, near Eddy St.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $ 2,552,719.61
Capital actually paid up in cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, June 30, 1906 38,476,520.22

F. Tillmann, Jr., President; Daniel Meyer, First Vice-President; Emil Rohte, Second Vice-President; A. H. R. Schmidt, Cashier; Wm. Herrmann, Asst. Cashier; Geo. Tourny, Secretary; A. H. Muller, Asst. Secretary; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

Board of Directors:

F. Tillmann, Jr., Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, N. Ohlandt, J. W. Van Bergen, E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

Helping the Homeless

The Continental Building and Loan Association

Has helped build up several interior towns and cities of California but for the next few years its funds will be used to help restore the burned homes of San Francisco

Dr. Washington Dodge, President
Gavin McNab, Attorney.
Wm. Corbin, Sec'y and Gen'l Mgr.

Office: Corner Market and Church Streets

A. Zellerbach & Sons
PAPER DEALERS

Now Located at

Volkman Bldg., 416 Jackson St., San Francisco
Branch: 514 Eleventh St., Oakland

FULL SUPPLY OF ALL KINDS OF PAPER

THE LATEST STYLES IN
Choice Woolens

H. S. Bridge & Co.

Merchant Tailors

1176 O'Farrell Street

STAGE GOSSIP.

Dramatic Notes.

Ernest Hastings, a former Alcazar favorite, is now leading man with the Baker Theatre Stock Company in Portland, Oregon.

"The Man of the Hour," a comedy of political life by George H. Broadhurst, was produced a few days ago at the Savoy Theatre in New York, and achieved instant success. William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer, the managers, have had some unfortunate experiences at that theatre, but believe they will make up for them with this production.

Thomas Jefferson will play "Rip Van Winkle" in Paris next year, in the French language and with a French company.

The freakish play entitled "The Doctor's Dilemma," by George Bernard Shaw, is not likely to prove a great success in spite of its author's present vogue. It was produced recently at the Court Theatre in London, and called "a tragedy in four acts and an epilogue." Of the fourteen characters in the play, six are doctors. Mr. Shaw is said to have treated the medical profession with more consideration than was expected, but there is no little satire in the piece. The plot concerns a physician who is obliged to choose which of two patients he will save.

Some London theatres refuse to allow uniformed messengers to hold a place in the line of waiting ticket-buyers. Managers say that people of wealth can secure advantages by means of these paid servitors that others can not have.

Lulu Glaser will soon begin rehearsals of Paul M. Potter's comedy, "The Beauty Shop," in which she will appear late in December.

The denials of engagement by George Ade and Helen Hale, the dancing comedienne, do not strike one as convincing. Mr. Ade tries to turn it off lightly with a jest that it is a malicious attempt to injure Miss Hale's theatrical career, and Miss Hale says: "It is the first I have heard about it"—possibly with the mental addition "from outside parties." The public will notice not only that no affidavits are offered, but also that no flat and explicit denials are made.

Across the street from the school in Chicago where he studied when a boy, was a building called "Honore's Barn," and it was therein that Louis James first donned the sock and buskin, says a writer in the Los Angeles Graphic. There he used to appear in the borrowed table-cloth of his mother and recite the love-story of Antony to the Cleopatra of Bertha Honore, whose father owned the barn. Bertha Honore is now the universally known Mrs. Potter P. Imer, and many times did he and she divide the pins paid for admission to witness their shows. Leaving school, their lives became divided, she to be a millionaire's wife, he to be an actor.

Musical Notes.

The Lambardi Grand Italian Opera Company, which is now appearing in Los Angeles, will come to San Francisco for a brief season, opening Christmas night. "Aida" is the first opera to be produced, and "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Rigoletto," and other favorites will follow.

"The Belle of Mayfair," Leslie Stuart's latest musical comedy, is a success at Daly's Theatre in New York, and is said to bid fair to eclipse the vogue of "Florodora." Irene Bentley, Christie MacDonald, and Ignacio Martinetti are prominent in the cast.

Oscar Hammerstein's new Manhattan Opera House, at Eighth Avenue and Thirty-Fourth Street, was opened Monday evening, December 3. Bellini's opera, "I Puritani," with Bonci, the new tenor, were the chief attractions, and they were sufficient to crowd the new and handsome theatre. Many representatives of New York exclusive society circles were present, and no less than 700 carriages were in the line that moved slowly past the house twice during the evening. The new tenor, Bonci, created a favorable impression, and though his voice is said to be not so robust as that of Caruso, it is called remarkably pure and the art with which it used is highly praised. Other members of the cast, the chorus, and the conductor, were given good notices in the New York papers, and Mr. Hammerstein congratulated in his success, fairly won and without assistance from any clique. New York now has two grand opera companies of the highest rank.

Alice Neilsen, who is with the San Carlo Grand Opera Company in New Orleans, is a popular favorite there. Her singing in the role of Gilda in "Rigoletto," was given high praise.

Puccini's opera, "Madam Butterfly," presented in English at the Garden Theatre in New York by Henry W. Savage's company, continues to draw large audiences in spite of strong counter-attractions. Many artists of the Metropolitan and Manhattan grand opera companies go often to see the opera. This is its first American production.

Harry B. Smith, author of the librettos of many light opera and musical comedy successes, was married recently to Irene Bentley, an actress of reputation and now appearing in "The Belle of Mayfair."

Captain Basil Hood has adapted Sardou's "The Merveilleuses" for the English stage. Dr. Hugo Felix has written the comedy-opera music for the piece. and Manager George Edwardes has produced it successfully at Daly's Theatre in London. It is spoken of as a bright and thoroughly entertaining production, with the music an important and pleasing part of the work.

The Gabrilowitsch Concerts.

The following programme will be played by Gabrilowitsch at his first appearance next Tuesday night, December 18:

Beethoven.... Rondo, G major, Op. 51.
Bach..... Prelude, A minor.
 Sarabande, E minor.
 Gavotte, B minor (arranged by Saint-Saens).
Schubert..... Moment Musical, A flat major.
 Menuet, B minor.
Chopin..... Sonata, B flat minor.
Arensky..... Two preludes, Op. 63 (new).
Leshetzky.... Intermezzo in octaves.
Gabrilowitsch Theme Varie, Op. 4.

The same programme will be given at the Oakland concert, Thursday afternoon at three o'clock in Ye Liberty Playhouse.

At the Saturday afternoon concert at Lyric Hall the artist will include in his programme the Sonata in A minor by Schubert, a group of Chopin works, some Mendelssohn "Songs Without Words," a Brahms Rhapsodie, and smaller numbers by Faure, Glazounow, Moszkowski, and Liszt. Manager Greenbaum is endeavoring to arrange a fourth concert at which the young artist can play the new sonata by Glazounow, which has created a furor wherever played.

Soirees Parisienne.

Mons. L. Planel, a native son, who has for the past twenty years or more resided in Paris, where he has been honored with the cross of the Legion of Honor and holds the position of an officer of public instruction, is visiting his old home, having been summoned on account of losses in the late disaster. Accompanying Mons. Planel is his wife Mme. Tekley-Planel, a prominent actress and reader and a member of the celebrated company of the Theatre Francaise.

Will Greenbaum has arranged to give two typical "Soirees Parisienne" with these artists. The programmes will be typically French and devoted to music and poetry by modern French masters. Mme. Tekley-Planel will recite some poems written expressly for her and some with musical settings composed by her husband, who is an accomplished violin virtuoso and composer as well as a singer. These affairs will be given Thursday evening, December 27, and Sunday afternoon, December 30, at Lyric Hall.

Maxine Elliott Coming.

The appearance at the Novelty Theatre of Maxine Elliott, commencing Monday, December 17, will be an event of moment. Aside from the notable popularity of the actress, there is bound to be an interest manifested in the engagement through the first appearance of a star of such magnitude since the fire in April. Theatre-goers are given this opportunity to enjoy the first high class attraction seen here in the past eight months through the efforts of Gottlob, Marx & Co., and the management of the Novelty Theatre. The latter have been induced to discontinue their vaudeville attractions for the week and make way for the presentation of Miss Elliot and her play "Her Great Match." The engagement is limited to six nights and one matinee, as the regular season of the Novelty Theatre begins on Monday night December 24

The Orpheum.

John Hyams and Leila McIntyre, two of the most popular entertainers before the public, will make their first joint appearance in vaudeville in San Francisco at the Orpheum Sunday afternoon in the skit, "Two Hundred Wives." The three Leightons will make their initial bow here in "A One Night Stand in Minstrelsy." Thomas Armstrong and Ella Verne, an Australian comedy duo, will also be new. Julius Steger, and his company, with their musical-dramatic playlet, "The Fifth Commandment," remain for the second and last week. Katherine Nugent will vary her imitations, Mlle. Dziria and her companion will change their terpsichorean work, Charles Serra, Palfrey and Hoefler, the comedy cyclists, and Orpheum Motion Pictures will complete the programme. The great Orpheum Road Show, bigger, brighter than ever will pay its annual visit during the Christmas and New Year holidays.

J. S. DINKELSPIEL

Importer of
Diamonds, Precious Stones
1021 Van Ness Ave.
San Francisco, Cal.
Fine Set Pieces a Specialty

Any Solid Silverware

that passed through the fire, of which there is a fragment left,

Perfectly Restored

To any person having this work to be done I can show wonderful results at my shop, having restored some of the choicest silver in the city.

Specialty of trophies and presentation cups. Suitable designs submitted on application.

Gold and Silver Plating

JOHN O. BELLIS
Manufacturing Silversmith

1624 California Street Near Van Ness Ave.

W. V. N. BAY

B. L. STONE

Stone & Bay Co.

1344 VAN NESS AVE.

Between Sutter and Bush

RUGS ORIENTAL ALL SIZES DOMESTIC

Draperies, Lace Curtains, Portieres
Couch Covers

A VISIT WILL BE APPRECIATED

AMUSEMENTS.

GABRILOWITSCH
The Russian Pianist

at Will Greenbaum's new

LYRIC HALL
corner Turk and Larkin Sts.

Tuesday Eve next, December 18, at 8:15
Saturday Aft. " " 22, " 3

Seats, $1.50 and $1.00 may be obtained at Sherman, Clay & Co's, Van Ness Ave., above California

OAKLAND Concert Thursday Afternoon, Dec. 20, at 3
YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE

NEXT! "Soirees Parisienne" by Mme. Tekley-Planel of the Theatre Francaise, and Mons. L. Planel, Violinist

NOVELTY THEATRE
Corner O'Farrell & Steiner
LOVERICH & LUBELSKI, Props. and Mgrs.
By Special Arrangement with Gottlob, Marx & Co.
Engagement Positively Limited to SIX NIGHTS AND MATINEE SATURDAY
Beg. Monday, December 17
Miss MAXINE ELLIOTT
in the Clyde Fitch Comedy, HER GREAT MATCH
Entire New York Production
Sunday, December 23: "Yon Yonson"

ORPHEUM

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee Dec. 16
Matinee Every Day Except Monday

Invigorating Vaudeville:

JOHN HYAMS and LEILA MCINTYRE; The Three Leightons; Armstrong & Verne; Katherine
Nugent; Mlle. Dziria and Her Dancer; Charles
Serra; Palfrey & Hoefler; Orpheum Motion Pictures and Last Week of JULIUS STEGER & CO., in "THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT" Coming for the Holidays: The Great ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW.

PRICES—10c, 25c, 50c. Down town Box Office at Danlon's Drug Store, Fillmore and Sutter Sts.
Phone, West, 6,000.

CHUTES AND ZOO—Open daily from 10 a. m. till midnight. Admission 10c; Children 5c.

RACING! RACING!

NEW CALIFORNIA
JOCKEY CLUB
OAKLAND TRACK

Six or more Races each Week Day
RAIN OR SHINE

Races start at 1:40 P. M. sharp

For Special Trains stopping at the Track take the
S. P. Ferry, foot of Market Street, leaves at 12, thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 p. m.
No smoking in last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

Returning, trains leave the track after fifth and
last races.
PERCY W. TREAT, Sec.
THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

P. Centemeri & Co.

KID GLOVES

New Location

1551 Van Ness Ave.

Between Pine and California

San Francisco

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors
Supply-houses, Business Men and Corporations.

Allen's Press Clipping Bureau
Kohl Building

For Christmas Cheer
La Questa

A LUSCIOUS OLD RED WINE

L. M. WALTER Corner California
and Devisadero Sts.

McCAW BROS. - 401 Devisadero

Producer:
E. H. Rixford
Kohl Building, San Francisco

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For CHAPPED HANDS, CHAFED and all skin troubles. "A higher in price perhaps, of in demerits, but a real relief in the relief after shaving and after a hot bath, or after a long day's work."—The New York Times.

Gerhard Mennen Company, - Newark, N. J.

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The engagement is announced of Miss Louise Redington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Redington, to Dr. Albion W. Hewlett. No date has been arranged for the wedding.

The engagement is announced of Miss Miriam Thomson, daughter of Mrs. S. E. Thomson, of Berkeley, to Mr. Frederick Parsons Tatum.

Invitations have been issued by Dr. and Mrs. George Herman Powers to the marriage of their daughter Katharine, to Mr. Edward Chapman, at St. Paul's Church, San Rafael, on Wednesday, December 26.

The marriage of Miss Janet Watkins, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Watkins, to Mr. Harry Dimond took place on Wednesday last at St. Stephen's Church. The ceremony was performed at eleven o'clock, by the Rev. Cecil Marrack. The bride was unattended and Mr. Louis Sloss was best man. Only relatives and a few intimate friends were present.

The marriage of Miss Josephine Tillman, daughter of Mrs. Frank Tillman, to Mr. C. Maitland Cline, took place on Tuesday last at the home of the bride on Van Ness avenue. The ceremony was performed at noon by the Rev. Father Cottle. There were no attendants and only the immediate relatives were present.

In Seattle, on Wednesday evening, December 5, Miss Helen Stuart Wilson, daughter of former U. S. Senator and Mrs. John L. Wilson, was united in marriage to Mr. William Wallace Chapin, of Sacramento.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott will entertain at a dance on Friday evening, December 28, at the Burlingame Club, in honor of Miss Jennie Crocker and Mr. Templeton Crocker.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pope will entertain at a dinner dance on Tuesday evening, December 18.

Invitations have been sent out by Captain Henry B. Clark, U. S. A., Lieutenant Guy E. Manning, U. S. A., and Lieutenant Clarence Carrigan, U. S. A., to a dance at Fort Baker, Marin County, on Wednesday evening next.

Mrs. Margaret Irvine and her son, Mr. J. W. Byrne, entertained at a dinner on Friday evening of last week, at the Palace Hotel, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Sharon. Among those present were: Dr. and Mrs. James W. Keeney, Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Garceau, Mrs. Lansing Kellogg, Mrs. Hyde-Smith, Mr. Alexander S. Lilley and Dr. Harry L. Tevis.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Howard entertained at a luncheon at the Burlingame Club on Sunday of last week, their guests being: Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Coleman, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Schmiedell, Mr. and Mrs. Mountford S. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hobart, Admiral and Mrs. Swinburne, Miss Josephine Brown, Mr. William Coleman, and Mr. H. P. Bowie.

Mrs. Henry L. Dodge entertained at a large tea on Thursday of last week in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Remington Quick, the latter of whom is Mrs. Dodge's niece. Assisting in receiving were: Mrs. Peter Quick, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. Ira Pierce, Mrs. Cyrus Walker, Mrs. Horace Davis, Mrs. Rosenstock, Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, Mrs. J. R. K. Nuttall, Mrs. Frank Griffin, Miss Jennie Blair, Miss Laura McKinstry, Miss Quick, Miss Mabel Dodge, Miss Emily Wilson, Miss Jeannette von Schroeder, Miss Anita Harvey, Miss Mary Keeney, and Miss Genevieve Harvey.

Dr. Wallace Smith, U. S. N., was the host at a dinner, on board the U. S. S. Pensacola on Wednesday evening of last week. Those present were Mrs. Marguerite Hanford, Miss Amy Porter, Miss Ruby Johnson of Sacramento, and Lieutenant-Commander Barnes, U. S. N., and Dr. Riggs, U. S. N.

Mrs. George Beardsley entertained at a tea on Friday afternoon of last week at her home on Sacramento street. Assisting in receiving were: Mrs. Charles Morrison Woods, Miss Ethel Shorb, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, Miss Colburn, Miss Molly Dutton, and Miss de Young.

Among the many dinners before the Greenway ball last Friday night, was that given by Mrs. Walter Martin at Tait's, in honor of Miss Anita Harvey.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a resume of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians.

Mr. and Mrs. William Henckley Taylor and Dr. and Mrs. Grant Selridge spent the Thanksgiving holidays at the Bakersfield ranch of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Tevis.

Miss Anita Dibblee left recently for the East and will sail very shortly for Europe to spend several months.

Mrs. A. E. Head, who has been in California for the past few months, has returned to London, where she will spend the winter with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Mounteney-Jephson.

Mr. Horace Pillsbury left this week for Boston to join Mrs. Pillsbury, who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, there for the past six months and who will return with Mr. Pillsbury.

Mrs. Edward J. Pringle, Miss Nina Pringle and Miss Hess Pringle, who have been travelling in Mexico and the East, since their return from Europe in August, have arrived here and are staying in Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hopkins and Miss Lydia Hopkins have been registered during the week at the Little Palace Hotel.

Mrs. Antoinette Naglee Burke and her daughter, who have been spending some weeks in Paris, have gone to Naples.

Mrs. William Disston of Philadelphia, who is spending the winter in Santa Barbara, visited San Francisco for several days last week.

Mr. Lawrence McCreery, who has been living at the Burlingame Club for some time past, has recently gone to Del Monte and will probably spend the winter there.

Mrs. C. O. Alexander left this week for Europe where she will spend several months.

Mr. James D. Phelan has returned from a brief trip to New York.

Mr. Edwin McAfee spent the Thanksgiving holidays at Santa Barbara.

Mrs. Gaston Ashe has been spending a fortnight in San Francisco as the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Webb.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Robbins, who went abroad during the summer, are at present in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Fred Kohl spent last Friday night in town at the Little Palace Hotel, where they attended the Greenway ball.

Mrs. Drury Melone and Miss Ethel Melone of Napa, have been spending several days in the city recently as guests of Miss Marion Huntington.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Hammond (formerly Miss Ruth Merrill), who left for Australia via Japan and the Philippines, immediately after their marriage in the summer, have reached their destination, and will make it their home for the next year.

The Misses Ysabel, Marie, and Elena Brewer and Mr. Louis Brewer, Jr., who have been at San Mateo during the summer, have taken an apartment on Green street near Fillmore, for the winter.

Mr. Frank King has returned from a month's stay in the East.

Miss Edith Bull will leave shortly after Christmas for New York, where she will spend some time.

Mrs. Ives and Miss Florence Ives will leave shortly for Coronado to spend the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. George D. Dornin, of Berkeley, will be at Del Monte for several weeks.

Among recent arrivals at Del Monte are Dr. and Mrs. F. C. S. Sanders, Capt. F. R. Day, and Mrs. Day, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Smith, Mr. H. V. Carter, Mr. Richard Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Hauser, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Douglass, Jr., Mr. W. J. Otis, Mr. P. J. Aaron, Mr. E. N. Fellers, and Mr. W. H. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hillis, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Cole, and Mr. and Mrs. Albert H. Elliott.

A new edition of Helen Keller's "Story of My Life" is being brought out, the ninth since its first appearance. The book has been translated and printed in French, German, and Spanish.

In an obscure but picturesque little village of far off Germany there is a place called the "Chocolate Cure," where thin people go to become stout, says an English paper. The patients eat and drink cocoa and chocolate all the time while they rest, admire the scenery, gossip and grow fatter every day. The true secret of the great success of this treatment is the happy way chocolate has of fattening just the right places, settling in the hands, the arms, the neck and the shoulders, making the fair patient prettier and plumper all the time. The really effective part of this cure may be tried at home by any persevering woman, and the medicine is so palatable and the method so simple that there is actually, it seems, no reason why all of us should not be of just the desired weight.

A "literary press agent" is represented in the current number of The Bookman, by an alleged confession of methods adopted to force the sale of books. Among the advertising plans described is that of critical, even abusive, letters from friends of the "press agent," written to the newspapers with the object of stirring up discussion. It is said that many books that would have slumbered in obscurity have been sold rapidly by this scheme of forced public attention.

To enable those who buy and read as they run to choose discriminatingly, London Punch suggests a new color-scheme for bindings. "Novels shall be bound and colored according to their contents. Thus, sensational fiction must be issued in red boards, idylls of rural tranquillity in green or tree-calf, whilst brown covers are reserved for essays of the ruminating type, dispatched from study windows and the like."

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Porter Bishop are rejoicing in the advent of a son in their home.

They who make the glasses we sell are skilled workmen of the highest grade.

A lens that we produce is perfect—you are invited to visit our factory.

HIRSCH & KAISER,

1757 Fillmore Street

Opticians

CLUBBING LIST FOR 1907.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes.

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$ 4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.35
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Criterion and Argonaut.....	4.35
Critic and Argonaut.....	5.10
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.90
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazaar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.20
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.35
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut.....	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut.....	5.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.75
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.50
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	6.00
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut.....	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

Practical Holiday Gifts

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FROM AN IMMENSE STOCK

We have all the novelties formerly carried

BOHEMIAN GLASSWARE

SUCH AS COMPORTS, BEAUTIFUL SYMMETRICAL PATTERNS

Prices, $2.50, $3.50, $4.50, $5.50

CUT GLASS

EXCLUSIVE DESIGNS FROM LEADING FACTORIES

Flower Baskets from $6.50

5 o'clock Tea Kettles make serviceable gifts

They come in Brass and Copper. Prices, $4.50, $6.00, $7.50 and up

CHAFING DISHES

A large assortment to select from. Copper and Nickel Plated
$5.00, $5.50, $6.75

Nathan-Dohrmann Co.

1520-1550 VAN NESS AVENUE

THE SUPREME COURT

Having by unanimous decision declared the
BURNT RECORDS ACT constitutional,

The Lawyers Title Company

Is prepared to restore your title and notify you of any adverse or encroaching suits that may be brought by others. Owners should register their properties with the Company at once.

DIRECTORS

FRANK P. DEERING
A. F. MORRISON
R. T. HARDING
CHARLES W. SLACK

J. C. MCKINSTRY
CHARLES P. ELLIS
C. B. SESSIONS
J. W. LILIENTHAL

PETER F. DUNNE
CARTER P. POMEROY
E. S. HELLER
WILLIAM THOMAS

OFFICE, 1916 SUTTER STREET

TELEPHONE WEST 6373

A MATTER OF HEALTH

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

Cream of Tartar Powder, free from alum or phosphatic acid

HAS NO SUBSTITUTE

The White House

Men's Furnishing Department

Now showing a complete line of Holiday Novelties in NECKWEAR, GLOVES
SUSPENDERS
SMOKING JACKETS
WOOLEN AND CRASH ROBES
SILK MUFLERS, UNDERWEAR
SOCKS, ETC., ETC.
UMBRELLAS
FOR MEN AND WOMEN
SPECIAL
MEN'S FOUR-IN-HAND
SCARFS 50^c ea

Raphael Weill & Co., Inc.
N. W. Corner Van Ness Ave. and Pine St.

The Waldorf Hair Store
1528-1530 Bush St., near Van Ness
MISS D. HONIG, Prop.

The place to buy your Christmas and
New Year's
Presents

Imported French Novelties
Hair Goods, Perfumeries, etc.
BRANCH STORE, 3461 SACRAMENTO ST.

Goodyear Rubber Company
Have Returned to Their Old Home, Where
They Were Located Before the Fire,
573-579 Market St., near Second
Tel. Temporary 1788

HOTEL RAFAEL
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.
50 minutes from San Francisco. Complete
Change of Climate
TIBURON OR SAUSALITO FERRY
All modern Conveniences
R. V. HALTON Proprietor

Sing Fat Co.

San Francisco

生發公司 金山國正埠
Dragon Trade Mark
記為龍金 LARGEST AND OLDEST

CHINESE AND JAPANESE BAZAAR

Has Resumed Business at 1121 POST ST., near Van Ness Ave
Mail orders promptly filled
FORMERLY 614 DUPONT ST.
Chinatown San Francisco

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points.

Rear-Admiral Swinburne, U. S. N., sailed on his flagship Charleston, on Thursday of last week for Santa Barbara, accompanied by the former flagship Chicago, the gunboat Yorktown and the destroyers Paul Jones and Preble. After a brief stay in Santa Barbara, the fleet will proceed to Magdalena Bay for target practice, probably visiting San Diego, en route South.

Colonel John A. Lundeen, Artillery Corps, U. S. A. has assumed command of the Presidio post and the Artillery District of San Francisco, vice Colonel Charles Morris, Artillery Corps, U. S. A.

Colonel E. E. Dravo, U. S. A., Commissary General, Department of California, who has recently returned from two months' leave, expects to leave in March for the Philippines.

Colonel Charles Morris, U. S. A., for several years commanding officer of the Presidio post, left on Saturday of last week for Fort Williams, Maine, where he will assume command of the post.

Lieutenant-Colonel George M. Dunn, U. S. A. Judge Advocate, Department of California, who has recently returned from a month's leave spent in Washington, D. C., will probably go in April to the Philippines.

Captain Wendell L. Simpson, Quartermaster, U. S. A., has been relieved from further duty in the Army transport service, and ordered to report in person to Colonel Bellinger, U. S. A., depot quartermaster at San Francisco, for duty as his assistant.

Captain Grayson V. Heidt, Eleventh Cavalry, U. S. A., who is now in San Francisco, has been ordered to join his regiment.

Captain Meriwether L. Walker, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A., Fort Mason, has been granted two months' leave of absence, which took effect today (Saturday).

Captain Evan H. Humphrey, quartermaster, U. S. A., is assigned to duty as quartermaster at Honolulu, H. T.

Captain Albert E. Truby, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., having reported his arrival at Newport News, Virginia, in compliance with orders heretofore issued, has been ordered to repair to Washington, D. C., and report in person to the Surgeon General of the Army for consultation. Upon the completion thereof he will proceed to join his proper station, in this city.

Captain W. R. Eastman, Medical Department, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, has been granted a month's leave.

Dr. John Evelyn Page, U. S. N., has been ordered to duty as surgeon of the U. S. S. Milwaukee.

Lieutenant John Burke Murphy, U. S. A. has been compelled to give up his course in the Artillery School, Fort Monroe, Virginia, on account of illness, but has been assigned to a battery at that post.

Lieutenant Rollo F. Anderson, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., San Luis Obispo, has been granted ten days' leave of absence to take effect upon completion of his duties in connection with the Progressive Military Maps of the United States.

Lieutenant Charles M. Gordon, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., a patient at the Army General Hospital, having reported fit for duty, has been ordered to proceed to his proper station, Fort Missoula, Montana.

Lieutenant Kerwin T. Smith, Sixth Infantry, U. S. A., a patient at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, having been reported fit for duty, will proceed to his proper station, Fort William Henry Harrison.

Lieutenant Charles L. Foster, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A., has reported at the headquarters of the Department of California and been assigned to duty at the Army General Hospital at the Presidio of San Francisco.

In the spirit of brotherly love the Oakland Tribune comes to the defense of San Francisco in this style:

"In a burst of flatulent boasting the Los Angeles Herald says Los Angeles is the largest city and the commercial metropolis of the Pacific Coast. During the year ending June 30, 1906, the customs district of San Francisco exported goods to the value of $39,915,269, while Los Angeles exported goods to the value of $12,581. During the same period the imports of San Francisco totaled $44,133,271, as against $827,059 for Los Angeles. These figures show the emptiness of the claim that Los Angeles is a metropolis. It can hardly be classed as a maritime city, since San Pedro is little more than a lumber landing."

Old Ira carried the United States mail on his buckboard about a dozen miles through the woods twice a week. He was an ill-humored, taciturn old fellow. One day a passenger rode with him who was somewhat talkative and plied Ira with questions. At last, the old man said, "I'm tired of your talk. I wish you'd mind your own business and let me mind mine."

The passenger subsided.

After driving an hour or two in silence Ira discovered his mail pouch was missing. He stopped the horses, looked all about the buckboard, and finally said to his passenger:

"I wonder what has become of that mail bag! Have you seen it?"

"Yes."

"Where is it?" asked Ira.

"It fell off the wagon about an hour ago."

Newman and Levinson

INCORPORATED

Van Ness and Sutter

San Francisco, Cal.

OPEN EVENINGS TILL CHRISTMAS

HOLIDAY ANNOUNCEMENT

Novelties in every department suitable for

Yuletide, Anniversary and Wedding Presentation

Remarkably varied assortments at modest prices

Merchandise and Glove Orders

ISSUED to any amount

YOUR INSPECTION IS SOLICITED

Gamossi Glove Co.
101 Post Street
Destroyed by Fire
April 18, 1906

PRESENT LOCATION

OF THE

The Glove House
Cor. Market and
O'Farrell Destroyed
by Fire, April 18, '06

Geo. A. Moss
Glove and Umbrella Co.

1520 Van Ness Avenue

Between Pine and California

The Umbrella House
12 Grant Ave., near
Market—Destroyed by Fire, April 18, 1906

OUR GLOVE ORDERS

Insure Recipient Good Merchandise

MOSS
1210 Market, above
Taylor—Destroyed by Fire, April 18, 1906

A Fine Line of
Holiday Perfumes and Toilet Articles

AT

Boericke & Runyon Co.

1554 Van Ness Ave.

PHARMACISTS

Near California Street

Dr. Deimel
(LINEN-MESH)
Underwear

A COMPLETE STOCK OF

Men's, Women's and Children's Underwear

at our Retail Store, 1107 Van Ness Ave., near Geary

CUSTOMERS' MEASUREMENTS PRESERVED
UNAPPROACHABLE HANDKERCHIEF VALUES
FREE BOOKLET

The Deimel Linen-Mesh Underwear Co.
San Francisco, Cal.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

Ready for business at 1165 O'FARRELL ST., bet. Franklin and Gough
Pianos Tuned, Repaired, Moved and Stored
SOHMER-CECILIAN PLAYER-PIANOS

NEW ENGLAND AND THE WILD WEST.

Well-Meant Efforts for Enlightenment and Reciprocity.

Peculiar views of the West and of Western people are cherished in the East and reflected in newspapers, magazines, and even in pretentious books. Regarding these peculiar views the Western reader assumes various attitudes. One of the serious, yet good-humored, positions is illustrated in these paragraphs from an editorial in the Modesto (Cal.) Evening News:

A typical Westerner who knows the transmississippi country from Manitoba to the Rio Grande, from Seattle to Omaha, by reason of thirty-five years of intimate rubbing against the West, the real West, not the West of the magazines, says:

"Why don't you Western newspapermen and Western writers generally, say something about the kind of yawp that is published about us in the East? The stuff that is designed to make us out to be strange and different from the rest of the human race, and our fellow-Americans particularly. It makes me sick. Even the President of the United States gets foolish when he mixes in Western matters; he puts us all wrong. Somebody ought to go back there and raise h—l with Roosevelt. Look here!"

Then the Western man showed a magazine picture of the President of the United States with a bearskin cap on his head, a handkerchief knotted about his neck, befringed buckskin "pants" and an assortment of hardware in his belt.

That picture was funny. It showed that Roosevelt is not a Westerner, never was, and never will be. Nobody but the Easterner ever has his picture taken in a get-up like that. The Westerner puts on store clothes. Buckskins and a beltful of shooting-irons have no more to do with the West now than a bell-shaped "plug" bat and a high stock have to do with New York. William Allen White, Owen Wister, Frederick Remington, and Roosevelt himself, and all that bunch of Easterners who feed the Eastern mind are responsible for this. They come West, bury themselves in some God-forsaken cow ranch, relic of the '70s—cow ranch that no more is representative of the West than Fulton's steamboat is of a motor boat on the Hudson, and then, ever after, the White-Wister-Roosevelt literature is chuck-ablock with wisdom.

We of the West are tired of being discovered. The White-Wister-Remington sharps blow out here, hunt up some bairy, moth-eaten individual who lives up a creek with a few cows and a '71 model 44, and straightway throw up their hats in the air and yell: "Here be is—that's it!" Then the literary sharps write to the magazine and tell us how to throw a diamond bitch, build a grass fire, and spell "sure" with an h.

There are several millions of us here who are not long-haired, nor profane, nor given to gambling, to whom hairy "chaps" and leather cow clothes are merely ill-smelling relics of history; and who occasionally get into evening clothes and go to "shows."

But you couldn't get the Easterner to believe it. And the magazines dare not admit it. The New York-Boston literary bunch couldn't stand for it; they must nose around and smell sweat, hair, and leather before they are convinced that they are across the Missouri.

That's what makes the Western man amused. When the President of the United States is himself photographed in "chaps," and with his abundant cutlery on, the Western man has to laugh. The man with the hairy "pants" is about as much a curiosity in the West as he is to the six-months' tourist from Yonkers. It must be that the Eastern literary sharp gets his funny ideas from people like C. F. Lummis of Los Angeles, who is addicted to leather and corduroys, and Joaquin Miller of Oakland, who has his monogram worked on his boot-straps.

It might be illuminating to the unsuspecting Eastern writer to know that the West regards Lummis's gay get-up and Joaquin Miller's roseate bootstraps with vast amusement—such as it gives to Roosevelt's bad imitation of that freak-o'-nature, the Magazine Western Man.

Contrasting sharply with the method of the editor whose disclaimer is given above, is that of Emerson Hough, the novelist and magazine contributor. Mr. Hough visits the enemy's country and treats it much in the way the West is treated by some Eastern writers. His superiority to ordinary matter-of-fact statement, and conscious humor, give his article an attractiveness it might otherwise have lacked. The selections are from the current issue of Appleton's Magazine, Mr. Hough's contribution bearing the title, "My Discovery of New England." At the beginning the author describes his journey to Boston, through the Hoosac tunnel, and then takes up the striking features of that city for discussion.

The population of this city is Italian, as is customary in New England. The government is wholly Irish. A few French Canadians dwell in the suburbs. I saw also three or four natives who confided to me that they could not get away.

Of the hospitality of Boston, I may not say much, save that it consists largely of pie, this being in consonance with the simple New England character. Coming to a caravansary the clerk thereof frowned upon me, asking me what family references I could give. Upon my admitting that my parents were not born in New England, and that I was married, but to a near-Yankee, he remarked, "To the woods with youse!"

Among the literary lights of New England and their favored mediums of illumination, Mr. Hough found subjects for passing mention:

Boston has always been the centre—indeed, one may say, the exact centre—of letters. It has produced three noted writers, one of whom was born and educated in Ohio. These are Thomas W. Lawson, who made New York famous; William Dean Howells, who made the St. Lawrence River famous; and Charles Felton Pidgin, who has made the English language famous. Boston is renowned likewise for its literary magazines, of which there are two, the Atlantic Monthly and the Black Cat. I mention them in alphabetical order, that there may be no petty jealousy.

In Rutlandvermont, and most other New England centres of thought there is but one newspaper read, that being the Boston Transcript. This is the most ably edited journal north of Flatbush, Long Island, its news features being reprinted from the works of Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, and Pidgin. The Transcript uses the three-color process in comic supplements, and employs the fables of .Esop and other humorists as special features when not crowded out by news matter.

An adventure in another city of New England is thus described:

Pawtucket, Rhode Island, is another intellectual centre, situated about fourteen miles southwest of Boston, I believe. Pawtucket is not to be confused with Woonsocket. I went there for the purpose of looking into the industrial conditions, as I am thinking of going into socialism. Approaching the leading factory—after passing on the left a graveyard where are buried those most interested in child labor—I was surprised to see a long row of feminine heads thrust out of the windows. "Oh, sir, will you marry us?" they called in unison. Impulsively I cried, "I will, I will"; then, remembering that I was already married to a near-Yankee, I fled.

The real "down East" region was not neglected by the indefatigable discoverer:

In this district I saw the justly celebrated Maine Wilderness, which so overshadows that of the American West. Not having been notified, I crossed it unwittingly one morning before lunch; but was warned not to let this occur again. It is illegal to cross the justly celebrated Maine Wilderness without a licensed robber as a "guide," and without having the proper high boots, long knife, copies of "The Call of the Wild," and "The Trail of the Sandhill Stag," and a folding camp outfit. My Western gaucherie caused me endless trouble all during my voyage of discovery.

On the Nahant Peninsula, as he returned from the wilderness, the explorer found a noted historian and statesman:

Senator Lodge was sitting on the veranda of his simple villa at the Sign of the Boneless Codfish, with his feet comfortably buried in a pair of carpet slippers, when I approached the picket fence which shuts off Nahant Peninsula from the rest of the world. He gazed in wonder at my costume, and I at his. He asking me my errand, I told him I was upon a journey of discovery; whereat he grew suddenly pale and would have retired into the house in order to lock the door. Assuring him that I was not after his record, he seemed relieved.

The author's reflections as he approached Plymouth Rock, show his familiarity with tradition and with modern progress as well:

"Here," thought I, "is the birthplace of our liberties as a people. Here stood Miles Standish and Sebastian Cabot. Christopher Columbus and Cotton Mather. Within a few yards of this circumscribed locality there was inaugurated that Revolutionary War—where, by the way, New England had a Southern general to do the leading and Pennsylvania riflemen to do the shooting; but no matter, for New England has always had help—that Revolutionary War which has given us the greatest example of interlocking corporate money-making machines the world has ever witnessed. Here," thought I, "began that great democratic doctrine that all men are equal if they have the price; that the man who practices temperance, frugality, and high tariff is destined to shine among his fellowmen. Here," I reflected, "began the art, the culture, the wisdom, the superiority of that New England the scent of whose full flowering is about us today. Here began our first acquaintance with a square deal, our first opportunity to trample to earth the hated doctrine of special privileges, of caste."

At least one of Boston's many advantages was appreciated by this humorist:

It was Mr. William Dean Howells, of Boston, Ohio, and New York, I believe, who said that the best thing about Boston is the five o'clock train to New York. Mr.

Howells is not always absolutely and literally accurate as a realist. A better thing in Boston is the three o'clock train. I took the three o'clock.

"Who ever heard," she said, "a woman complain about her food? Who ever beard of women gourmets? Even the really fine cooks are all men, for women do not take sufficient interest in food to attain to such excellence in its preparation as Brillat-Savarin or Gavarni had."

"I am reminded of a little story about a man. This story would fit many men, but where is the woman it could be applied to?"

"An old gentleman, pointing to his favorite dog, said proudly:

"That dog certainly seems almost human at times."

"Yes," said his wife, "he growls over his food as much as you do."

LIQUEUR PÈRES CHARTREUX

—GREEN AND YELLOW—

THIS FAMOUS CORDIAL, KNOWN AS CHARTREUSE, HAS FOR CENTURIES BEEN THE PREFERRED AFTER-DIN-NER LIQUEUR OF POLITE SOCIETY.

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés, Bartez & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Sole Agents for United States.

L. KREISS & SONS

CABINET MAKERS
UPHOLSTERERS
DECORATORS

Dealers in Fine Mahogany, Early English Oak Furniture; reproductions of rare examples of Antique Fabrics of all the important periods of English, French and Italian Arts in Tapestries, Brocaded Silks, Damasks, Embroideries, Etc.

Our stock is complete and contains many Odd Pieces suitable for Gifts.

1219-23 POST ST.

Above Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

If you are going East use the California Limited

The Finest Train Across the Continent

Palace Pullmans, Observation, Library,
Smoking, Dining Cars.

Every luxury will be found on this train.

See the

SANTA FE AGENT

FERRY BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A reviewer said to a friend: "I get rough, on an average fifty hooks a week." "Good gracious!" said the friend, "How do you manage it? Why, it takes me at least a day to read one book." "I don't read them," he said, "I review them."

Considerable amusement was once caused by a slip of Emporer Nicholas's pen in accepting the offers of several companies of Siberian militia, who volunteered for service at the front. The petition read, "We humbly lay at your Majesty's feet our desire to be permitted to fight and die for the fatherland." The Emperor, in accepting, wrote on the margin of the petition in his own hand, "I thank you sincerely, and hope your wishes may be fully realized."

A Washington woman invited to her house an attaché of one of the legations, famous for his extreme politeness. The invitation was formally accepted, but on the morning of the appointed day she received a note, written by the diplomatist's valet, and couched in the following terms: "Señor Blank regrets much that he will not be able to attend Mrs. So-and-So's reception on the evening of the 22d instant, as he is dead."

The following conversation between two old Scotchwomen was overheard one day: "Can ye tell me, wumman, what is it they all a jubilee?" "Well, it's this," said her neighbor, "When folk has been married twenty-five years, that's a silver wuddin'; and when they have been married fifty years that's a golden wuddin'. But if the non's dead, then it's a jubilee."

A western Congressman was making a speech in the House. "Mr. Speaker," he shouted, "I insist that my interpretation of the meaning of this phrase is the same which is put upon it by the author of our immortal dictionary, Daniel Webster"—a colleague sitting just behind him yanked at his coat tail. "Not Daniel Webster," prompted the man behind, "you mean Noah!" "Noah hell," retorted the orator, "Noah huilt the ark."

Rebecca, aged five, who claimed a handsome, heavily bearded young man for a sweetheart, was asked by a young lady if she would not give her a claim also on the young man. "No," said Rebecca, positively, "I want him all to myself." "But won't you give me a part of him—just a little bit?" pleaded the young lady. "You see, I haven't any sweetheart." "Well," answered Rebecca, deliberating, and somewhat softened by the appeal, "you may have his whiskers."

The crew of a certain life-saving station on the New England coast drew much satirical comment from the people at the summer resorts near by. One rainy day, at the appointed time, the crew failed to appear at practice. A summer boarder went over to the quarters of the crew to learn the reason. "Aren't you going to practice today?" asked he. "Not today, sir." "Why not?" Then the brave lifesaver, hero of many rough seas in the past, made an explanatory gesture toward the sky, and said, "What, in this rain?"

A fat Irishwoman, bearing a number of bundles, entered a crowded street car. The only semblance of a seat she could find was a small space at the right of a smartly dressed youth. Into this space, sufficient only for an individual of ordinary size, the fleshy Irishwoman squeezed herself, much to the annoyance of the youth. After a moment or so the Irishwoman produced a cheese sandwich, which she proceeded to devour with every evidence of relish. At this the youth gave her a look of ineffable disgust and drew the skirts of his frock-coat closer to him. "I suppose, my lad," good-naturedly said the woman, "that ye'd prayfer-r to have a gentelman sittin' nixt to ye." "I certainly would!" snapped the youngster. "So would I," calmly responded the fat person.

A clergyman recently spoke in a penitentiary and noticed that one of the convicts seemed extraordinarily impressed. After the service he sought him out and said: "My friend, I hope you will profit by my remarks just now and become a new man." "Indeed I will," was the cheerful reply. "In fact, I promise to you that I will never commit another crime, but will lead an exemplary life to my dying day." "I am very glad to hear you say that," said the clergyman, "but are you certain you will be able to keep the promise?" "Oh, yes," said the convict. "I'm in jail for life."

ARGONAUTS FOR OUR FILES.

We would be glad to have any of the following numbers from any disconnected copies of the Argonaut that our readers have and are willing to part with.

Numbers Required to Complete an Argonaut File.

- Volume VI, 1880—Nos. 6, 13, 15, 17, 18, 22, 24, 26.
- Volume VII, 1880—Nos. 3, 8, 14, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24.
- Volume IX, 1881—Nos. 1, 3, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.
- Volumes X and XI, 1882—All numbers.
- Volume XII, 1883—Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 17, 24, 25, 26.
- Volume XIII, 1883—All numbers.
- Volumes XIV and XV, 1884—All numbers.
- Volume XVI, 1885—All numbers.
- Volume XVII, 1885—Nos. 1, 2.
- Volume XX, 1887—Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.
- Volume XXI, 1887—Nos. 11, 13, 22, 23.
- Volume XXII, 1888—Nos. 3, 7, 11, 18, 25.
- Volume XXIII, 1888—No. 3.
- Volume XXIV, 1889—No. 6.
- Volume XXV, 1889—Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19.
- Volume XXVI, 1890—Nos. 21, 23.
- Volume XXVII, 1890—No. 1.
- Volume XXVIII, 1891—Nos. 1, 7.
- Volume XXIX, 1891—Nos. 8, 12, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22.
- Volume XXX, 1892—Nos. 6, 20, 22, 24.
- Volume XXXI, 1892—Nos. 2, 3, 7.
- Volume XXXII, 1893—No. 16.

Specially adapted to Asthmatics; always relieves, generally cures. Brooks' Homoeopathic Cough Syrup; 25c, at druggists.

W. A. Hirschman

Jeweler and Silversmith. Now at 1641 Van Ness Avenue, bet. California and Sacramento Streets.

The old, old accusation against woman that she cannot keep a secret. "A woman," said Miss Anthony, "can keep an important secret as well as a man. The secrets she reveals are slight and harmless ones, such as any man would reveal. Where is the woman who ever tells a secret that reflects on her husband or her own children? I know a man who one day refused to tell his wife the outcome of a business transaction in which, naturally, she took a deep interest. 'No,' he sneered, 'I won't tell you. If I did you'd repeat it. You women can never keep a secret.' 'John,' said the woman quietly, 'have I ever told the secret about the solitaire engagement ring you gave me eighteen years ago being paste?' "

rs. Barkan & Sewall

Specialists for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat are now located at 1700 California street, corner Van Ness Avenue.

Clyde Fitch, at a dinner in Philadelphia, praised the originality of certain French playwrights.

"Originality," he said, "is what above all things the drama needs. A young lady said to me:

'Isn't it awfully, awfully difficult to find new ideas for plays?' 'I don't know,' answered I. 'I have never tried it.' "

Korn The Hatter

Now at 926 Van Ness Avenue Near Ellis Street.

Dr. J. J. Henderson

Specialist for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat. 1434 Post St., near Octavia.

Oliver Herford was in an editor's office one afternoon when a young novelist entered. "Mr. Herford," said the novelist eagerly, "I value your opinion very much. Now I want you to tell me candidly what you think of my new book." "No, no," said Herford, hurriedly, "let us remain friends."

W. & J. SLOANE & CO.

S

ORIENTAL RUGS

Connoisseurs advise intending purchasers to buy from a reliable establishment, owing to the diversity of weaves and the difficulty in recognizing their value. All our Rugs are selected as individual pieces. Our stock therefore offers the choicest examples obtainable of Oriental Rugs.

S

Van Ness and Sutter

Nordhoff Grill

1545 Pine Street
Below Van Ness Ave.

Finest and Largest Dining Room in the City

Merchants' Lunch 11 A. M.
to 2 P. M. Daily

Ladies' Afternoon Teas
and Dinner Parties a Specialty

THE EMPORIUM

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Headquarters for Toys and Holiday Goods

Useful articles are something which is appreciated by every one. Among some very acceptable gifts which are sometimes overlooked, we suggest a book, which is always a reminiscence of the giver. For the holidays we offer some exceptional values, quite interesting, and along new channels of thought:

A Gift Book—Gray Mist

A story of Brittany by the author of the "Martyrdom of an Empress," extremely fascinating to the finish. $1.50

A Japanese Blossom

by Onoto Watana, with full page illustrations in colors, so interesting you can not lay it aside till finished, $2.00

The Christy Book.

The American Girl as seen and portrayed by Christy. In its class it is by far the most beautiful book ever published, and is the handsomest and most popular gift book of the season. Price $2.50

Send all your mail orders to THE EMPORIUM, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Golden State Limited

between
CALIFORNIA—CHICAGO
DAILY

LEAVE SAN FRANCISCO	5:00 P. M.
ARRIVE CHICAGO	10:15 P. M.

ELECTRIC LIGHTED
OBSERVATION PARLOR CAR
BEST OF DINING SERVICE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"Pa, what's a philosopher?" "A poor man who is trying to make other people believe he doesn't want to be rich."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Whereabouts was Sam Simpson's son hurt, doctor?" "He was injured in the lumbar region." "I want to know! Tree fell on 'im. I s'pose!"—Judge.

Colorado surgeons cut a man open and found a gold nugget in his appendix. These searchers will go anywhere in a mad race for gold.—Baltimore Sun.

"What'll you take for that pipe?" "Oh, you wouldn't care to smoke this old pipe."

"No, but I'd like to buy it and throw it away."—The Tobacco Leaf.

"How in the world did you happen to be run over by the automobile?" "I was trying to dodge the ballast that the balloonist was throwing down."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Do you expect to get money out of that mine?" "No," answered the conscienceless promoter. "Not out of the mine. Out of the subscribers to stock."—Washington Star.

"But, Tommy," said his mother, "didn't your conscience tell you you were doing wrong?" "Yes'm," replied Tommy. "but I don't believe everything I hear."—Philadelphia Press.

"See here," feebly complained the victim after the accident, "I thought you said it was perfectly safe to go up in that old elevator?" "Well," replied the elevator man, "so it was safe to go up; you see, the dangerous part of it was comin' down."—Philadelphia Press.

The foreign nobleman puffed his cigarette dejectedly, and refused to be consoled. "And to think," he sighed. "I proposed to her on my knees every night for two weeks." "And did you bag the beautiful heiress at last?" asked the interviewer. "No; all I bagged was my trousers."—Chicago Daily News.

"Listen to this, Maria," said Mr. Stubb as he unfolded his scientific paper. "This article states that in some of the old Roman prisons that have been unearthed they found the petrified remains of the prisoners." "Gracious, John!" replied Mrs. Stubb, with a smile. "I suppose you would call them hardened criminals."—Chicago Daily News.

Wealthy Physician—"I didn't have $500 worth of practice until I bought an automobile." Aged Invalid—"Made your own patients, I suppose?" Wealthy Physician—"Well, you see, I'd run over people, load them in the tonneau, carry them to the office and operate on them before they came to. Couldn't leave them on the road you know."—Judge.

The editors of the Plumas Star have received word from their financial agent on Wall Street that the price of diamonds has been advanced. We therefore beg leave to inform subscribers that a crisis confronts us. In order to meet our margins in our diamond speculations, we may be compelled to advance the subscription rates of the Plumas Star, or else quit smoking cigarettes.—Plumas Star.

Your chances of escape are about equal whether you stay in town with the automobiles or go to the Adirondacks and run the risk of being taken for a deer.

"Of course you are going to Palm Beach this winter?"

"No? I thought your position in society was such as to make it absolutely necessary for you to go."

"Our position in society now is such that we don't have to go anywhere."—Sun.

A squire of Andover decided to take into his employ a brother of Patrick, one of his hired men. The terms were made with Pat before his brother's arrival, and the following conversation is a specimen of what they agreed upon:

Squire—"I'll pay your brother one-fifty a day, Patrick." Patrick—"Yis, sor, and will he ate himself or will ye ate him?" The squire thought Mike had better eat himself.—Harper's Weekly.

Pittsburg Millionaire—There's a swell copy of "Diana's Hunt."

His Friend—So? Who the deuce was Diana, anyhow?

Pittsburg Millionaire—What? And you visiting New York most every month? Why, Diana's the fairy doing the pose on Madison Square Garden tower!—Puck.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

A Christmas Story.

Little Jack London
Sat in a corner
Writing a Christmas story;
He dipped in his pen
And wrote five thousand words,
And made about nine hundred dollars.
—New York Mail.

It's Profitable.

All lawyers like to take a rest,
Like most of us, and still
The average lawyer's bappest
When working with a will.
—Philadelphia Press.

A Penman's Reward.

On a time a pale student from Ga.
Was pinched for being a fa.
Said the judge with a smile;
"Young man, for a while,
Free of charge we are going to ba."
—Yale Record.

His Scheme.

A beautiful woman named Esther
Met a man in the dark who caresther,
And she raised such a row
That her hub explained how He'd arranged the whole thing just to tether.
—Houston Post.

Youse.

I've knowd a lot uv Molliess, dear,
But w'en yer face I seen
I says, "I guess it's pretty clear
Dat she's de only Queen."
So I fergits de odder bunch,
Fer I has changed me views
An' all de world, I've got a hunch, Is Yousse! Yousse! Yousse!
—Puck.

Major Green said to his servant one morning: "James, I have left my mess boots out. I want them soled."

"Yes, sir," the servant answered.

The major, dressing for dinner that night, said again: "I suppose, James, that you did as I told you about those boots?"

James laid 35 cents on the bureau.

"Yes, sir," said he, "and this is all I could get for them; though the corporal who bought 'em said he'd have given half a dollar if pay day hadn't been so far off."

"If seven sheep were on one side of the fence, and one of them jumped over to the other side, how many were left?" propounded the teacher to the primary class. Pauline's observations of animal life had not been in vain, despite her tender years. "There wouldn't be none left," she replied, knowingly. "If one jumped over, they'd all follow."

MOTHERS BE SURE AND USE "MRS. WINSLOW'S Soothing Syrup" for your children while teething.

Dr. Julius Grinker, of Chicago, says a man ought to choose his wife just as he would a fine horse. Many of us would get badly fooled in a horse trade.

Any remedy that will relieve a teething baby or a feverish child is invaluable. Steedman's Soothing Powders have done this for fifty years.

One day Percy, aged three, was playing with the tail of a big dog. "Look out," said a careful aunt; "he'll bite you dear." "Oh no, auntie," he said. "I'se not at the bitin' end."—Harper's Weekly.

NEXT SUNDAY GO TO BYRON HOT SPRINGS.—You can leave Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, returning Sunday afternoon or Monday morning. Two days at the Springs, and the entire expense of the trip is $7.50. This includes the railway fare, transportation from railway station to hotel and return, a delightful ride of two and a half miles, accommodations at the beautiful Byron Hot Springs Hotel, and use of the wonderful mineral baths, all for $7.50. Try it.

THIRD STREET PROPERTY

FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN

137½ Feet and Two Corners

$75,000. MUST BE SOLD

Two 50 Varas

Vicinity North Point and Taylor Sts.

Fine Manufacturing Site or Lumber Yard

Particulars at office

GUY. T. WAYMAN

517 Market St.

REAL ESTATE

San Francisco

Connecticut Fire Insurance Co.
OF HARTFORD
ESTABLISHED 1850

Cash Capital$1,000,000.00
Cash Assets5,340,136.94
Surplus to Policy-Holders.....2,414,921.16

Benjamin J. Smith
Manager Pacific Department:
525 THIRTEENTH ST., OAKLAND
San Francisco Office:
2310 CALIFORNIA STREET

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

Have Plenty of Every Kind of

PAPER

Phone Temporary 1273

473 TO 475 SIXTH STREET
San Francisco

For YOUR

BREAKFAST

GERMEA

At All Grocers

The Johnson-Locke Mercantile Co.

AGENTS

714 Broadway, Oakland

Mt. Tamalpais Railway

Via Sausalito Ferry—Foot of Market St.

Lv. San Francisco	W'kday	Sun.	Leave Tamalpais	Sun.	W'kday
8:25 A	9:50 A	11:00 A	10:40 A	1:05 P	1:05 P
1:45 P	1:45 P	4:30 P	2:30 P	4:30 P	4:30 P
Saturday	4:35 P	3:15 P	5:45 P	9:30 P

Legal Holidays, Sunday Time

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Thos. Cook & Son

Now Located

1168 Broadway, Oakland
And North Nave, Ferry Building
San Francisco

Steamship Lines

AMERICAN LINE

PLYMOUTH-CHEERBOURG-SOUTHAMPTON
St. Louis Dec. 22 | St. Paul Jan. 5
Philadelphia Dec. 29 | New York Jan. 12
Philadelphia-Queensdown-Liverpool
Haverford Dec. 29 | Merion Jan. 19
Noordland Jan. 5 | Haverford Feb. 2

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT LINE
NEW YORK-LONDON DIRECT

Minneapolis Dec. 22 | Mesaba Jan. 5
Minnehaha Dec. 29 | Minnetonka Jan. 12

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE

NEW YORK-ROTTERDAM, VIA BOULOGNE
Sailings Wednesdays as per sailing list.
Ryndam Dec. 19, 7 a m | Potsdam, Feb. 6, 10 a m
Potsdam Jan. 2, 6 a m | Statendam Feb. 20, 10 a m
Ryndam Jan. 23, noon | Ryndam, Feb. 27, 5 a m

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK-ANTWERP-PARIS
Zeeland Dec. 26 | Vaderland Jan. 9
Kronland Jan. 2 | Finland Jan. 16

WHITE STAR LINE

NEW YORK-QUEENSTOWN-LIVERPOOL
Baltic Dec. 19 | Teutonia Jan. 9
Majestic Dec. 26 | Majestic Jan. 23
Oceanic Jan. 2 | Teutonia Feb. 6

Boston-Queenstown-Liverpool.
Cymric Jan. 19, Feb. 23, Mar. 30

To the Mediterranean and Egypt, via Azores

FROM NEW YORK
Cedric Jan. 5, 9:30 a m, Feb. 16
Celtic Jan. 19, 9:30 a m, March 2 | 21,000 Tons
Cretic Mar. 30, noon, May 9, June 20

FROM BOSTON
Canopic Jan. 12, 8:30 a m, Feb. 23
Republic Feb. 2, 1 p m, March 16

G. N. KOEPEL, Pass. Agt. Pacific Coast.

Room 207 Monadnock Bldg., San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

ORIENTAL S. S. Co. have opened their general offices at 217-221 Brannan Street SAN FRANCISCO

S. S. Nippon Maru (Calls at Manila) Dec. 28, 1906
S. S. Hong Kong Maru (Calls at Manila) Jan. 24, 1907
S. S. America Maru Feb. 13, 1907

Steamers will leave wharf, corner First and Brannan streets 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, corner First and Brannan Sts. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

AUTOMOBILES

Runabouts = = = = $700
Reo Touring Cars = $1400

Immediate Delivery

J. W. LEAVITT & CO.
441 Golden Gate Ave.

REMOVAL NOTICE

JOHN G. ILS & CO.

Beg to announce their removal to their permanent store

827-829 MISSION STREET

Between Fourth and Fifth Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

OUR SPECIALTIES:

HIGH GRADE FRENCH RANGES AND BROILERS
BAKERY AND KITCHEN SUPPLIES

The Argonaut.

Vol. LIX. No. 1554.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 22, 1906.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10; payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscription to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 1711 San Pablo Avenue, Oakland. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications intended for the Editorial Department thus: "Jerome A. Hart, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal." To insure consideration, manuscript submitted for publication, must be typewritten.

Address all communications intended for the Business Department thus: "The Argonaut Publishing Company, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal."

Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Buildings, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear, and by the Denison News Company on its boats and trains.

Published at San Francisco, California. Temporary Office, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, California.

THIRTIETH YEAR

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

JEROME A. HART EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: Petticoat Diplomacy—France and the Vatican—The Case of Japanese in Schools—The Nobel Prizes—Restoration of Burned Titles—Simplified Spelling—The Effacement of the States—The Power of the Press—On His Hands—What Is a Mongolian?—Who Is Scared?.....	317-320
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....	320
OPINIONS ON THE PRESIDENT'S ATTITUDE.....	321
POLITICO-PERSONAL.....	321
A LONDON LITERARY VEXATION: "Piccadilly" Writes of the War of the Booksellers and the "Times"—Secrets of the Trade.....	322
OLD FAVORITES: "Christmas in California," by E. R. Sill.....	322
THE CHRISTMAS PLAY: Reminiscences of Old San Francisco.....	323
THE LOST SHIP MARIGOLD: A Strange Tale of an Inhabited Island in the Pacific Not on the Charts.....	324
THE CHRISTMAS CAROL. By Wordsworth.....	325
THE OFFICIAL VOTE OF CALIFORNIA.....	326
CURRENT VERSE: "The One Road," by Marie Van Vorst; "December Twilight"; "The Cornish Wind," by Arthur Symonds; "The Mist"; "Love in a Garden," by Coningsby William Dawson.....	326
INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes about Prominent People All Over the World.....	327
LITERARY NOTES: New Publications—Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.....	328-330
STAGE GOSSIP: Dramatic Notes—Musical Notes.....	331
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	332-333
VANITY FAIR.....	334
STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....	335
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.....	336
THE TUNEFUL LIAR.....	336

Petticoat Diplomacy.

The story disclosed by the quarrel between President Roosevelt and the Storer family is indeed an amazing one. We are used to reading in old-time memoirs of masterful ladies who directed Cabinet councils and ruled great rulers. But since the days of the "Kitchen Cabinet" and Mistress Peggy O'Neil in Jackson's time, American diplomacy had been considered free from petticoat rule. The Storer story forces us to revise our views.

Bellamy Storer occupied a diplomatic position when Theodore Roosevelt acceded to the Presidency by the assassination of President McKinley. The Roosevelt and Storer families had been extremely intimate. Mrs. Storer even says that she and her husband "made Roosevelt" by going to Canton, Ohio, and personally urging President McKinley to appoint Mr. Roosevelt Assistant Secretary of the Navy. Much as Mr. McKinley admired Mr. Roosevelt, he hesitated, on the ground that the candidate was "too much of a fighter," but the President finally yielded. The intimacy of the Roosevelts and Storers lasted until it was suddenly terminated by the dismissal of Mr. Storer by the President from the post of United States Ambassador to Austria-Hungary.

The tangled story of the dismissal may be disentangled from the mass of correspondence by those who care to read it. These letters are between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. and Mrs. Storer. Letters were also exchanged between Mrs. Roosevelt and the Storers. One pregnant letter does not appear in the printed correspondence—this, a letter from Mrs. Storer to Mrs. Roosevelt, was on its way over the ocean when Mr. Roosevelt chopped off Mr. Storer's official head. Thereupon a cablegram shot under the ocean to Mrs. Roosevelt, requesting her to return this fateful missive unopened, which was done. The letter has not yet been divulged to a waiting world.

This voluminous correspondence shows how intimate were the relations of the various parties. President Roosevelt's letters to Ambassador Storer were addressed "My Dear Bellamy," the Embassadress he addressed as "My Dear Maria"; Mrs. Storer addressed the President as "Dear Theodore."

Mr. and Mrs. Storer assert that Mr. Roosevelt, while Governor of New York, urged them to use their influence with the Vatican in securing a cardinal's hat for Archbishop Ireland; they alleged that Mr. Roosevelt hoped that Archbishop Ireland in return would aid in solving the vexatious problems connected with the Roman Catholic church in the Philippines. The closeness of the Storers to the Vatican is explained by the fact that they are converts to Roman Catholicism. The closeness of the Storers to the President is explained partly by his high position, partly by their high position, partly by their desire for higher position, and partly by the fact that Mrs. Storer is aunt to Nicholas Longworth, the President's son-in-law.

Mr. Roosevelt denies that, as President, he sought Archbishop Ireland's advancement, but only in his private capacity. He states that he admired Archbishop Ireland, but that he "could not interfere for his promotion, or, indeed, in any way in the ecclesiastic affairs of any church." According to the President's letters, "Mrs. Storer insisted to me often that their change of creed [to Roman Catholicism] had proved a deadly blow to her husband's career and that they were suffering for conscience's sake." The President also says that Mrs. Storer "at one time wrote to me with great bitterness against Protestant missionaries who were being sent to the Philippines, and at the same time requested me to champion Archbishop Ireland because he had been loyal to the United States during the war with Spain, which, she stated, was not true of another Roman Catholic Archbishop, whom she named." In reply the President wrote to her:

"There are many people who think about their religion just as you think about yours. They can no more understand your turning Catholic than you can understand a Catholic turning Protestant. I can not stop missionaries going any where they choose. The worst thing that could happen for the Catholic inhabitants of the tropic islands and the Catholic church, would be for the Catholic church to champion the iniquities that have been committed, not only by lay but by clerical leaders in the Philippines and elsewhere. If any man, clerical or lay, archbishop or priest, or civilian, was in any way guilty of treasonable practices with Spain during our war, he should be shot or hanged."

The President goes on to say that he continually received complaining letters from Mrs. Storer asking for the promotion of Mr. Storer. Eight days after President McKinley's death she wrote urging that Secretary Root should be removed from the War Department and the place given to Mr. Storer. When informed that the Cabinet would remain as it was, Mrs. Storer suggested that Mr. Choate be removed from the Embassy at London, or General Porter from the Embassy at Paris, as they "were not proper persons to be Embassadors," and that Mr. Storer be given the choice of place. Being an Embassadress, Mrs. Storer is doubtless fluent in French. She ought to adopt as a motto "Ote-toi de la, que je m'y mette."

Mr. Roosevelt in his reply reposed a surprising confidence in the Storers. He wrote:

"In filling any vacancy in the Cabinet I am sure that Bellamy would be admirable, but I would have to take note of all kinds of considerations. I should count Bellamy's religion in his favor for a place in the Cabinet. Other things being equal, I should like to have a Catholic in the Cabinet. I do not know whether, geographically, he would be the right man. For instance, I would like to get a Pacific slope man in the Cabinet, and particularly in the Navy Department. At present I see no Pacific slope man who would be competent to fill the position. * * * A Catholic just at present would not be a man whom it would be wise to send to Germany. For wholly different reasons it would not be wise to send him to Italy."

And the President points out that none of the Cabinet officials or Embassadors whose positions Mrs. Storer wanted "for dear Bellamy" seemed at all inclined to vacate in his favor.

Mr. Storer alleges that he had an audience with the Pope, December 2, 1903, at which he "transmitted a verbal note, the basis of which had been given me by President Roosevelt." The gist of this was that President Roosevelt earnestly desired the elevation to the rank of cardinal of Archbishop Ireland. When Mr. Roosevelt repudiated the action of the Ambassador, Mr. Storer and his wife, having no Presidential letters to back up their assertions, drew certain "verbal memoranda" which they had made at the close of conversations between them and Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt speaks with just indignation of this action, which he stigmatizes as "simply dishonorable," and he adds that "it is nonsense to bind me to a memorandum of private conversations, the existence of which was concealed from me." In this most people will agree with the President.

Mr. Storer thus finds his story without corroboration from the principal person concerned. Likewise, it is denied by a New York attorney, Edward Philbin, whom Mr. Storer cites as having knowledge of this arrangement, while at Rome. The attorney says he has no knowledge of it, and that he was not in Rome at the time. And for a crusher, the statement is given out by the Vatican "that President Roosevelt had never done anything through official channels to make Archbishop Ireland a cardinal."

Thus the President would seem to stand cleared of everything except of having reposed too implicit confidence in his friends. And this is an error into which a man of his impulsive and generous disposition may readily fall, and for which all people will freely forgive him.

France and the Vatican.

December 12 was the last day allowed by the French government for the citizens of France to comply with the law affecting religious organizations. The substance of this law has been so often printed that it is unnecessary to repeat it here. The Protestant and the Jewish citizens of France have complied with the law, and therefore the Protestant churches and Jewish synagogues will not be molested. Many of the high Roman Catholic prelates of France have urged that Roman Catholic citizens should also comply with the law, and for a time it had been thought that the Vatican would also recommend Roman Catholics to obey the law. But suddenly, at the last moment, and to the surprise of the French government and French Roman Catholics, the Vatican suddenly veered, and ordered non-compliance. The high prelates who had advocated obedience made haste to change their attitude, and revised their instructions. As a result the entire Roman Catholic priesthood and a large body of Roman Catholic citizens in France are now in open defiance of the government and the law.

The first official act testifying that the French government is about to use the strong hand, was the arrest of Monsignor Montagnini, former Secretary of the Papal Nunciature or Embassy, who has been Acting Nuncio, or Charge d'Affaires, since the recall of his superior. The French government promptly sent Monsignor Montagnini to the frontier under military escort, and seized a vast quantity of papers and documents in his office. These, the government declares, include copies of confidential instructions issued by the Pope to the French bishops, and letters to and from Roman Catholic members of the legislative chamber, showing clearly a deliberate anti-Republican campaign against the French government by the Vatican.

A curious feature of this matter is the anomalous position of the Vatican by reason of its claiming temporal power in Rome, although there domiciled on the territory of another government, while at the same time it issues orders to French citizens, although not situated on French soil. As Monsignor Montagnini is an Italian subject, the recent proceedings affect his civil and not his ecclesiastical status. Therefore, any protest against his expulsion, or the searching of his residence, or the appropriation of his papers, can not come from the Vatican, but must come from the Italian government, of which he is a subject. Otherwise, the French foreign office can take no cognizance of any such protest. But as the Vatican refuses to recognize the existence of the Italian government, and refuses any official intercourse therewith, no protest can come from that government.

Further steps to be taken by the French government are these: the suppression of certain pensions now going to the Roman Catholic clergy; the immediate liquidation of State property occupied by the Church; the alienation of Roman Catholic clergy houses, bishop's seats, and seminaries; the summoning of Roman Catholic ecclesiastical students to rejoin their regiments by December 15, which will bring to the colors some 5500 young men.

The principal newspaper organ of the French government, the Republique Francaise, thus expresses the official view: "The time has passed when a Pope could successfully threaten to release French subjects from their allegiance. Defiance of the law will only cause the priests to be regarded as subjects of a foreign power, by which they would forfeit their rights as Frenchmen."

It is evident that a deplorable struggle is about to begin, which will be attended with many lamentable scenes. But we in America can not condemn an attempt to separate church and state, for to us their union seems iniquitous. Even Roman Catholics in the United States so believe. And no fair-minded man can deny the right of the people of France, acting through their duly elected representative, to rule their country in their own way, untrammelled by the interference of any foreign government. And the Vatican claims to be a government.

The Nobel Prizes.

The Nobel Peace Prize has been conferred on President Roosevelt for his services in bringing about peace between Russia and Japan. The President announces that he will use the money, some $40,000, to establish at Washington a permanent Industrial Peace Committee with the view of maintaining peace in the industrial world. The Nobel Peace Prize is part of a bequest left by Dr. Alfred Bernhard Nobel, a Swedish scientist who died in 1896. A large part of his fortune was by his will devoted to five annual prizes, each valued at about $40,000. They are awarded for the most important discoveries in physics, chemistry, physiology or medicine, for the most distinguished work of an idealistic tendency in the field of literature, and for the best effort toward the fraternity of nations and the promotion of peace.

This is the first time that the Nobel prize has been awarded to an American. It has excited some surprise, for while in European eyes America does not lead the world in the arts or letters, she certainly would seem to lead in more material things, such as inventions, mechanics, systems of transportation, etc. It may be that no American candidate had ever been proposed prior to the candidacy of President Roosevelt. Under the terms of the Nobel bequest, the candidates must be proposed by legislative bodies, peace organizations, or universities. It is stated that the President's proposers were Professor H. P. Judson, acting president of Chicago University; Professor Baldwin of Yale, Professor Harberger of the University of Munich, and the faculty of Georgetown University, Washington.

Test Case for Japanese in Schools.

United States District Attorney Devlin, by arrangement with President Altmann of the San Francisco School Board, has been making up an agreed statement of facts in the case of a Japanese child who has been allotted a desk in the Oriental public school. This statement, after much discussion between the parties, has finally been forwarded to Attorney-General Moody in Washington for his approval. The administration then intends, if it continues its crusade, to bring initial action in the State courts, not in the federal tribunals. This, according to Attorney Devlin, is to "avoid the appearance of attempting to coerce the State." Exactly—it is to coerce the State, but to avoid the appearance of doing so. The end sanctifies the means. Let us avoid the appearance of evil. If the administration shall fail in the State tribunals, it is then time enough to begin all over again in the federal courts. If they fail in the federal courts, the attempt could then be made to carry out the scheme by an "executive order." If the federal judges find this too strong for their stomachs, the President might establish a school, sustained by the federal government, here in California for Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, Lascars, Malays, and other Asiatics. To this educational institution the federal office-holders on the Coast would doubtless be glad to send their sons and daughters to share the seats with the Asiatics. From their adoring attitude, and the pæans of admiration they emit for the Presidential utterances on this Asiatic question, they doubtless would be overjoyed to have such an opportunity to testify their faith in his works.

We suggest to the San Francisco School Board that they go slow in this matter of an "agreed statement of facts." If the facts were brought out in the usual course of court procedure by the testimony of witnesses, we fancy they would find the result less apt to work to their discomfiture and the discomfiture of the State. Attorney-General Moody is about to go on the Supreme Bench. He has at his disposal the large force of trained legal and diplomatic experts to be found in the Washington Departments. The "agreed statement of facts," after it has passed this legal battery, will be a perilous document for our State and municipal attorneys to work with. Furthermore, the case will go to the United States Supreme Court on this "agreed statement of facts." Doubtless Attorney-General Moody by that time will be Mr. Justice Moody. A hypersensitive jurist might decline to sit in the consideration of a case in which as Attorney General his subordinates took part. But Mr. Moody has shown himself hypersensitive only to executive and not to public criticism during his term as Attorney General. It will be remembered that he made haste to discredit the acts of his own specially retained counsel in the Paul Morton case when they arrived at conclusions from "statements of facts" which were unpalatable to the President. Therefore, we would advise the San Francisco School Board to be extremely cautious about what "statement of facts" they agree on. In short, to paraphrase Mr. Roosevelt's favorite motto, let them "walk softly and beware of the Big Stick."

Restoration of Burned Titles.

The Supreme Court has unanimously upheld the validity of the Burned Record Act, generally known as the "McEnerney Act," intended the restoration of land titles when the records have been destroyed. It is to be hoped that a similar law now on the statute books, known as the "Torrens Act," may also be passed upon by the Supreme Court, in order that the land owner may know exactly what procedure is necessary to rehabilitate his title. As soon as this is done, it will be possible for the land owner firmly to establish his title by a decree of court. It will then be unnecessary to have long searches of title, and costly abstracts prepared, these methods of procedure redounding only to the benefit of title companies and attorneys. It is said that there are some seventy thousand land owners in San Francisco, and that each of these will probably bring suit under this act to re-establish title.

Simplified Spelling.

The umbra of simplified spelling, which so lately shadowed this vast country and cast its penumbra on the rest of the English-speaking world, has suddenly shrunk till it is no larger than the palm of a man's hand. What did this? What caused the Big Stick to tremble, to vacillate, and finally to fall—not on the heads of the orthographical rebels, but nervelessly to the ground? Money did it—coarse, common clammy money. Money, says the old saw, makes the mare go. Money apparently makes the Big Stick pause.

When there came a direct lock-horns between the President—cheered from afar by his loyal little band of simple spellers—and the other eighty-five millions of the American people who intend to spell the way they learned at school, the crisis came through the Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives. During the Congressional recess Public Printer Stillings received his orthographical orders from the President, and made haste to follow them. He printed the President's message in simple spelling. He printed the President's executive orders in simple spelling. And he wrote his own orders to his own slaves in simple spelling.

The solicitors to the Treasury and other Departments made haste to write their letters and print their briefs and opinions in simple spelling. Some of them got into trouble with the Supreme Court for quoting the decisions of that august body according to Mr. Roosevelt's executive order. The solicitors were crisply informed that when they quoted the decisions of that tribunal they should quote them as the justices wrote them. Not wishing to lose their official cases, the solicitors complied—when in the Supreme Court's jurisdiction. Not wishing to lose their official heads they disobeyed—when outside of its jurisdiction. Therefore they were placed in the position of printing their legal pronouncements for the executive eye in simple spelling, and for the judicial eye in American spelling. It was very embarrassing.

So with Public Printer Stillings. Mr. Stillings, like all the world, wants to hold down his job, but he also likes to get his wages. The President gives the Public Printer his job, but the House pays his wages. It would be a heroic and admirable thing to back up the President and to stand by simple spelling through thick and thin, and thus hold down his job. But it would be a tiresome and disgusting thing to get no money for holding down his job. Therefore, when the Public Printer was held up before the House Committee on Appropriations the other day, he was apologetic and explanatory. He admitted that if Congress adopted simple spelling, it would be necessary to get out new editions of dictionaries, new editions of school books, and new editions of many other works of reference. His head proof-reader, when called before the Committee, explained the printing of the public documents in both forms of spelling, and said it was "very wearing" on both the proof-readers and the men. The foreman of the Government printing office admitted that the men had great difficulty in memorizing the 300 words of the present simple system, and said that if the contemplated 1200 words should be adopted, they would all come to grief.

As Public Printer Stillings had fired the first reform gun by printing the Appropriation bill itself according to the President's simple spelling, he may be looked upon as the aggressor. But the House Committee did not smite him. It was merciful. It merely studied the appropriations for the printing office with thoughtful and anxious faces. This was unusual—the printing appropriation is very large but is usually passed without scrutiny, for the Public Printer is a pet of Congress. Still the committee hesitated over the simple spelling. It asked Public Printer Stillings if he intended to do it any more. He said it would not occur again. He was then released.

The President was not so easy to manage. He clung to his simple spelling. But the President, while not so much in need of his salary as the Public Printer, requires a great deal of other money to carry on his large volume of executive, legislative, and judicial business. It would embarrass him seriously to run this great country all alone if the Appropriation Committee did not open up freely. Therefore, the President, swearing that he would not consent, yet consented. But he demanded that the compulsion should be set down in the record. This was done. Now the House stands guilty of having by force majeure undone the President and ravished from him his simple spelling.

Once upon a time there was a German Emperor who attempted to change the gender of a noun. He failed. He passed into history as Sigismund Super Grammaticam. The President's simple spelling will now be laid away with the epicene substantive of Sigismund. The President's messages to Congress will now be spelled in the ordinary American way. For the President has been forced to yield.

But how about the others? How about the Secretaries and the Secretaries' secretaries? The gentlemen's gentlemen? The heads of Bureaus? The Solicitors to the Treasury and the other Departments? How about the Embassadors, the Ministers, the Secretaries, the attaches of legation? If these gentlemen are loyal they must by this time have changed their spelling in honor of their august chief. But what do they do now? True, their chief has changed back again, but it is on compulsion, like many a ruler before him, because a low crowd of commoners held the purse strings. He has yielded, but in his heart of hearts he unquestionably clings to his simple spelling.

Would it not then be a base and unknighly thing for these gentlemen to repudiate their lord's spelling because he is under duress of his stubborn commoners? These gentlemen of the chambers may spell as they list. When the exiled Count of Chambord insisted he was Henry Fifth, Roy de France, he always spelled "Roy" in the ancient spelling of his ancestors. A sure sign of defection among his followers was when any of them began spelling "Roi" in the modern fashion with an i. It generally meant that the backslider wanted a nice fat job from a Republican government. Will the loyal appointees of President Roosevelt follow simple spelling to the end? By that we do not mean to the end of their terms, but to the end of his term—that is to say, until his successor is duly elected and qualified. It would be a pleasing, a chivalric, perhaps a profitable thing for them to do. Thus, by the spelling of a diplomatic or consular official we could readily tell that he belonged to the Roosevelt regime and did not fear Congress. It goes without saying, of course, that any prudent official would drop the simple spelling instant after the Presidential election of November, 1908. This would be considered "flagging" the President-elect. There might, however, be some isolated instances of more protracted loyalty—consuls, let us say, in choleraic or malarial stations like Madagascar or Zanzibar, or at distant points within the Arctic Circle where mail comes but once a year. Some of these might still be found—until discovered and axed by President Roosevelt's successor—holding the fort, thoroly loyal, sticking still to simple spelling thru thick and thin.

When the famous Three Hundred voted first, last, and all the time for Grant for a third term, some admirer in the convention had a bronze medal struck in their honor. It is still treasured by them and their sons. Why would it not be well for President Roosevelt to have a medal stamped on rich crushed oak-tanned Levant, to give to those of his gentlemen of the chambers who remain loyal to him and to simple spelling? It might bear on its reverse Guy Heavystone's motto "Thru!" in simple spelling, and on its obverse the proud legend of the Rohan family, modernized and simplified:

ROI NE PUIS,
PRINCE JE DAIGNE—
ROOSEVELT JE SUIS.

The Effacement of the States.

In the curious correspondence between the President and the Storer, which recently amazed a wondering world, occurred some passages about Secretary Root which take on a deep significance in the light of later events. Writing to Mrs. Bellamy Storer from the White House under date of October 4, 1901, President Roosevelt said:

"MY DEAR MARIA:—You need never be afraid of writing me or asking anything. If it is in my power to grant it, I shall do so. Bellamy was right. * * * I think of both of you all the time, and have several times gone over possible plans. First, as to the Cabinet: It is very unlikely now that I shall change any member of the present Cabinet. * * * Secretary of War Root is one of the very strongest men before the people in our whole party. His Canton speech was the most effective delivered in the campaign last year. * * * He is a sick man, a condition which gives me great uneasiness. * * * If he went out I should have to consider nothing whatever but the question of getting the best man. * * * It may be that I should conclude that Bellamy was the man. * * * I should count Bellamy's religion in his favor for a Cabinet place. * * * I should like to have a Catholic in the Cabinet. * * * The present Cabinet is not so strong as it should be. * * * There is no one of them, with the possible exception of Root, who can appear before the country with the prestige of a great political leader to explain and champion my administration."

These words are indeed significant when one recalls that Root entered the New York campaign at the eleventh hour for the purpose of making a bitter attack on Hearst, which he was careful to explain represented the views of the President. The President also freely gave out that Secretary Root in his speech expressed the Administration views on Hearst. Considering the President's remarks on Root in the confidential letter to Mrs. Storer, as well as the inspired utterances of Root in the Utica speech, we are justified in concluding that the Secretary has again expressed the views of his chief in his latest public utterance. This was at a dinner given by the Pennsylvania Society on December 12, at which Mr. Root was the guest of honor. In the course of his speech, the Secretary of State predicted the ultimate centralization of our Republic, and the practical effacement of State lines. To use his language:

"By the side of the present strong and glowing loyalty to the Nation, the sentiment for separate States has become dim and faint in comparison."

The dispatches say that this caused "a profound sensation among the guests." They had reason to be moved. Secretary Root went on to say that the framers of the Union would never have believed it possible that the form of government they constructed could be maintained among eighty-five millions of people, if they could have foreseen the great development of transportation, the workings of free trade between the States, and the growth of national sentiment. Referring to the increasing centralization of power in the national government, the Secretary said:

"It is useless for the advocates of State rights to inveigh against the supremacy of the constitutional laws of the United States, or against the extension of national authority in the fields of control where the States themselves fail in the performance of their duty. The instinct for safe government among the people of the United States is too strong to permit them long to respect any one's right to exercise a power which he fails to exercise."

Justice Brown of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in his remarks took occasion to say that the courts of the United States would interpose a check when Congress went too far—"or even Presidents." His remarks were received with loud applause, and were construed as a rebuke to Secretary Root for his extraordinary pronouncement. That the Secretary's outburst created a sensation among the guests is not remarkable. Mr. Root goes as far toward disunionism by attacking the States themselves as Calhoun and the early Secessionists did in the other direction by attacking the Union. But both have a single end—the destruction of our Union of Federated States. If Secretary Root uttered such language as this without the approval of the President, we would advise Mr. Roosevelt to disavow it at once. If not, the President will stand committed in the eyes of the people to the endorsement of these dangerous doctrines. We say "dangerous." We use the word advisedly. They are dangerous to the Administration. They are dangerous to the Republican party. And if that party does not repudiate them, they will become dangerous to the Federal Union of American States.

The Power of the Press.

Shortly after the recent State election, Los Angeles had a municipal one. Los Angeles, which is a queer town, loves elections, whether they be State, Congressional, municipal, bond, or referendum. At this particular election there were six candidates for mayor: Republican, Dr. Walter Lindley; Non-Partisan, Lee C. Gates; Democratic, A. C. Harper; Labor Union, Stanley B. Wilson. The Prohibition and Socialist candidates cut no figure. The leading morning papers in Los Angeles are the Times, Herald, and Examiner. The three prominent evening papers are the Express, News, and Record. The Herald and Express supported Gates, the Non-Partisan. The Times and News supported Lindley, the Republican. The Record leaned slightly toward Gates. The Examiner remained neutral. As for the Democratic candidate, Harper, not a single paper advocated his election. Even the Examiner, which claims to be a Democratic paper, did not take up his cause, for the reason, so the Los Angeles gossips say, because it feared to lose advertising business.

After the election it was found that Harper had received 11,240 votes, Gates 8464, Lindley 6949, Wilson 3869. Thus we see that Lindley, the man who had two powerful dailies behind him, received a trifle more than half as many votes as Harper, the man who had no daily at all. This proves the power of the press. It also seems to show that there are still some Democrats in Los Angeles.

A not unamusing feature of the contest was the stupefaction of the various dailies when they recovered from their pipe-dreams the day after the election and discovered that the only man who was in the race at all was the one without a newspaper behind him. Another fact adding to the gayety of nations was the effort of the serious Express to take daily straw votes, each of which was to prove that its candidate, Gates, would be elected by a large majority. About the fifth or sixth day the Express discovered that there was a nigger in the wood pile, for its own straw vote predicted the election of Lindley by about 50,000 majority. On investigation the Express discovered that the Times was stuffing the Express ballot boxes with forged postals. Thereupon, the Express raised a wild clamor and demanded the arrest of the Times outfit for "forgery and counterfeiting." Stuffing of straw votes not being a statutory offense, either under State, Federal, or Rooseveltian law, the Times staff are still at large.

On His Hands.

It will be remembered that Grover Cleveland, when President, once wrote an indiscreet letter to a friend, or a letter to an indiscreet friend, in which he remarked that he "again had Congress on his hands." President Roosevelt, from his general tone, seems to be in the same annoying position as his predecessor. He is reported to have remarked at a recent dinner party that he "would like to get after the Senate with a shot-gun." Mr. Cleveland did not have so much trouble as the present President. Mr. Roosevelt in his recent message, in addition to the many executive innovations which he urges, recommends not less than two amendments to the Constitution, both designed to place greater power in the President's hands. Thus it will be seen that President Cleveland only had Congress on his hands, while President Roosevelt has both Congress and the Constitution.

Who Is Scared?

The Eastern newspapers as they arrive fill Californians with wonder. They are one-half hysteria and the other half scare. They seem to think that mobs of Californians, in a frenzy of rioting, have been killing Japanese and burning Japanese houses. They believe or affect to believe that after the rioting was over the Californians began to shiver with apprehension lest a Japanese fleet should appear. But these curious phenomena are not apparent here. Everybody is busy and everything is quiet. The Japanese are not being attacked, and all of them who want work are busy. The Californians are not trembling over threatened attacks either from Admiral Togo or Colonel Roosevelt. In short, everything here is moving along in the most matter-of-fact manner. The trouble is all on the other side of the continent. The general tone of the press and people on the Atlantic seaboard is that the little island Empire is coming over to lick Uncle Sam. Washington seems to lead the gloomy chorus. Well, this hysteria is not remarkable when one remembers the dreadful scare of 1898. At that time every city on the Atlantic coast from Maine to Georgia was howling for at least three battle-ships apiece to protect them from Admiral Cervera. Here there has been no such demand.

By the way, that reminds us—we have no battle-ships here at all. The President took three or four of them with him on his little trip to Panama—battle-ships to right of him, battle-ships to left of him. And at Oyster Bay a few weeks ago he had them all. President Lincoln once said that if General McClellan did not want to use the Army of the Potomac he would like to borrow it. Correspondingly, when President Roosevelt gets his war scare properly worked up, perhaps he will lend us one battle-ship, if he can spare it—to patrol the Pacific Ocean.

What is a Mongolian?

It is stated that the Administration, in its attempt to force Japanese adults among little white girls and boys, intends to lay great stress on the word "Mongolian" in the California school law. Further, that the Administration will claim that the Japanese are not Mongolians, that their ancestors did not come from Mongolia, and that they are a distinct race indigenous to the islands of the Japanese archipelago. Very likely they are autochthones—probably they sprang like Venus from the foam of the sea. But we assure the Administration that if their attorneys can split hairs over the meaning of the word "Mongolian," the California legislators will settle that next month. They will pass another statute which will make quite clear what they mean, if the Administration does not already know.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Correctional Suggestions.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., DEC. 7, 1906.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—Your journal has an enviable reputation among Coast periodicals for its scrupulous regard for correctness. In fact it is sometimes amusing, and always instructive, to peruse Jerome Hart's criticisms and arguments in proving to some protesting person that the Argonaut was right and that said protestant was mistaken.

I believe, (note the absence of any arrogant assumption of infallibility) that I have found two errors in late Argonauts.

In the "Individualities" of November 17, you speak of Geo. R. Peck's having been appointed U. S. Senator by the Governor of Wisconsin, and refusing the appointment. I am a native of Kansas, where Peck first rose to fame, and have always been under the impression that the Senatorial appointment noted was tendered by Gov. Humphres of Kansas or one of his immediate predecessors.

We have no authoritative record of Mr. Peck's career, and gave the item on the authority of the Chicago Chronicle, which is usually correct. At the same time we find no mention of a Governor Humphres in any list of Kansas governors in our possession. However, since the April unpleasantness, our works of reference are mainly notable for their absence.

Our correspondent continues:

Again in your article Dec. 8, correcting a false impression of "Seaports, Docks, Wharves, Piers," you attribute a remark anent lending "verisimilitude to an otherwise bald and unpleasing narrative," to the Mikado in the opera of the same name. I am reasonably certain I heard Arthur Cunningham as "Pooh Bah" make that remark at Idora Park not long since, and unless my memory be at fault I heard the "Pooh Bah" of the "Bostonians" make the same remark several years ago.

Several years' reading of the Argonaut has convinced me that it is useless to try to pick flaws in any of the Argonaut's leading statements. It is only in matters of small import that the Argonaut has been mistaken, if indeed it has ever been mistaken, and the only reason for this note is that the writer feels keen enjoyment in reading the Argonaut and even more pleasure in noting the disastrous fall of other presumptuous critics. It is the same feeling that inspires the spirit of emulation in a small boy in the matter of taking a dare.

Most respectfully yours,

F. T. MONTGOMERY.

Here our correspondent is up against what writers call "style." It once used to be the "style" of the Argonaut to put names of plays and operas in italics: Names of characters in same "quoted," thus in Gilbert & Sullivan's opera The Mikado the role of "The Mikado" was filled by Barney Stormer. Therefore if we had meant—as our correspondent evidently believes—the actor filling the role of The (or the) Mikado it should have been in quotation marks thus: "The Mikado." If we had meant the opera itself it should have been The Mikado. These rules have been abrogated, and since last April the various typographic earthquakes of the Argonaut have caused all its "styles," new and old, to be put away with the old Moons. Now, we have no "style"—or if we have it varies. Therefore, on reading our own sentence, we are forced to admit that, as printed, its meaning is not clear. Even had the initial letter of "the" been a capital, its meaning would have been clearer. Now no man knows what it means—including the writer. But he thought he meant the opera and not the role.

This painful occurrence is reminiscent of an episode in the life of Schopenhauer. To the great man there came one day two adoring disciples from afar. They had differed over the meaning of a Schopenhauer sentence. They wrestled long in argument, and finally decided to journey together and lay it before the master. He listened attentively, reflected profoundly, and replied oracularly: "My children, when I wrote that sentence, two beings in the universe knew what it meant—God and myself. Now"—reverently pointing upward—"there is but one!"

The Discharged Battalions.

The following communication from an army officer is necessarily printed anonymously, as army officers are subject to court martial for expressing their views in print on the President's actions:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., DEC. 11, 1906.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—What a tempest in a teapot the blacks and their worshippers have kicked up over the action of the President in disbanding a mob of unruly blacks who disgraced their blue uniforms! The President was right. More power to his good right arm. The Argonaut is right—better for the peace and quiet of the country if they were all deported to Africa, where they belong. A stroke of a pen gave four million ignorant cotton hands the franchise—a political blunder. To put arms in their hands at all was a crime. The dignity of a Roman soldier was never lowered by such an act. The West resented the arming of the blacks, and collisions between the two races were of frequent occurrence. Their impudence was intolerable, and white officers would not associate with white corporals who took nigger commissions. From Cairo to New Orleans the army was nearly in revolt, and when the proposition was broached to the troops at Millikens Bend by Gen. Lorenzo Thomas, to arm the blacks, he was roundly hissed, and cries of No! No! reverberated through the swamps of the Mississippi Valley. All honor to the South; in their direst distress they never put a sabre nor an Enfield into the hands of their slaves. That was and still is a blot upon our escutcheon.

The Argonaut has hitherto expressed no opinion on the "discharge without honor" of the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. To our thinking the phase of the matter touched upon by our correspondent is not the question at issue. Whether the soldiers are white or black is not involved. The question is whether the President was right in "discharging without honor" these companies.

We agree with our correspondent in thinking that it would be better for this country if the blacks had never been brought here. Probably their deportation now is not feasible. But their presence here constitutes a problem so grave that it causes keen apprehension in the minds of patriotic and thinking citizens. With this great race problem confronting us it is inconceivable how lightly the President, his Cabinet, and many leaders of thought in the Eastern States desire to entangle us in new race problems.

But the question involved in this case is not a question of race. It is a question of military discipline, of military law, of justice. It is white soldiers as well as black ones, whose rights are at stake. As it is an open question, and soon to be decided, the Argonaut will content itself with putting to our army correspondent certain questions:

Were the commissioned officers of the Twenty-fifth ignorant of all the facts in this case? If so, why? Where were they? Was the officer of the day ignorant of the absence of "from nine to fifteen men," while they went off and "shot up" a town? Where did they get guns and ammunition? Are not the gun-racks kept locked? Who keeps the key? Were there no sentries? How did the absentees get in and out? Did this riot, the killing, the shots, the return to barracks past the sentries, the cleaning of the guns, their return to the racks—did all of these things pass unnoticed by the officer of the day, and all the commissioned officers of all the three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry? And if so, why have these investigations been confined to the enlisted men?

May any man in this country, soldier or civilian, be convicted of a crime without a trial?

If a man may be convicted of a crime without a trial, may he be made a felon by an executive order?

Do enlisted men come under that provision of the Constitution which says that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law?

If enlisted men may be convicted of crime without a trial, how about commissioned officers?

If the President can dismiss a battalion, can he dismiss a regiment? If a regiment, a division? If a division, a corps? If a corps, can he dismiss the entire army?

We express no opinion on the facts of the Brownsville case, because we have not seen the testimony. The Argonaut does not believe in condemning men as felons until testimony has been heard in their defense. It seems to us that to discharge two or three hundred men "without honor", to brand them as felons, and to debar them from re-enlistment or further employment in the service of the government, are grave acts which should be based on testimony. In this case it would seem that there was no testimony for the defense, for the reason given for discharging the men by executive order is that there was a "conspiracy of silence," and that innocent and guilty alike refused to testify. This presupposes that all of the innocent men knew who the guilty ones were, which seems to us unlikely. In civil life murderers do not go around freely boasting of their crimes throughout the community. It does not seem probable that in military life murderers would hoast of their crimes throughout a garrison. It is more likely that the guilty men would keep silence. How then could the innocent men know who the guilty ones were? Suspicion does not mean knowledge.

Here is another phase of the case: The injury done to the public peace, order, and law, which is of more importance than the injury done to a group of soldiers, whether white or black. A citizen of Brownsville was murdered, another wounded, and many fired upon. The murderer has not been punished. Making felons of a couple of hundred innocent men can not make amends for letting a murderer go scot free. Have the civil authorities of Brownsville been permitted by the war department to bring to justice the assassins who attacked their citizens? Or were these troops surreptitiously removed in order to avoid civil process?

Woman Suffrage in Colorado.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 8, 1906.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—In the issue of the Argonaut for November 24, is a clipping from a Colorado paper which is, to say the least, misleading. It says, "Leaders of both political parties in Colorado assert that no woman will again be nominated for a legislative office. They say that equal suffrage in Colorado is rapidly becoming a farce and the rank and file of citizens, women included, wish the fair sex eliminated from the political game." Every governor of Colorado, every Supreme Justice, and all the other leading politicians of the State have publicly declared that equal suffrage is a success. Equal suffrage was granted in Colorado thirteen years ago by an act of the legislature, ratified by a referendum vote. After ten years' experience of it as a statute it was incorporated into the State Constitution by an amendment adopted almost without opposition.

To return to the clipping, "Four women ran for the House of Representatives recently. Three of them were on the Democratic ticket and one was on the Socialist ticket. All were defeated by decisive majorities." These four women were defeated because they were on minority tickets. Miss Katherine L. Craig, the Republican nominee for State Superintendent of Public Instruction was elected along with the rest of the Republican nominees. When a woman's name happens to be on the winning ticket the people evidently have no objection to voting for her.

HELEN MOORE,

Secretary of the State Central Committee,
California Equal Suffrage Association.

The South Supports the Pacific Coast.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—In California's effort to deal intelligently with the Japanese, both adults and school-children, permit me to assure you, and your readers, that the white Americans resident in the Southern States will support the just and reasonable position you have taken. The federal authority is dreaming of its past success—in coercing sovereign States and forcing upon us a situation which has never benefited the negroes and only harmed us; The right of suffrage. The Sacramento Union is right. "The day of enforcing upon a people that which their judgment and their taste have rejected has long since passed. * * * We of the South are proud of California's courageous defense of her white civilization in this hour of her distress. I feel that I only express the general sentiment of the Southern people, when I assure you that we will support your claims to exercise that Constitutional Liberty guaranteed to us by the ancient Constitution of 1788—nor will we stand idly by and see your people governed by the "Big Stick," or a mere numerical majority. The President and his coterie of swashbucklers are ready enough to add insult to injury—we are equally ready to stand by you in your just demands for payment from the wretched German insurance companies? The Kaiser has his greedy eyes on a vast territory, populated by 500,000 Germans in South Brazil. Let the "Big Stick" indeed walk softly.

The South's with you—don't forget that!

Yours truly,

TELAMON CUYLER.

Boston, Mass., 6 Dec., 1906.

Opinion on the President's Attitude.

California Members of Congress.

SENATOR GEORGE C. PERKINS:—"In the California school trouble we are violated no treaty. That the people of California do not discriminate against the people of Japan in educational matters is shown by the residence at the University of California of several Japanese students. I can only account for the President's position on the theory that he has been misinformed."

SENATOR FRANK P. FLINT:—"Up to this date has refused to be quoted in publication on the President's Message."

REPRESENTATIVE JAMES CARSON NEEHAM:—"The President's utterances here refer to the attitude of California toward the Japanese do not clearly state the position of the people of California. The President has misconstrued it. With us it is not a question of hatred of the Japanese, or whether we shall control our own schools. I think the courts will uphold our position."

REPRESENTATIVE EVERIS ANSON HAYES:—"The California delegation will most certainly oppose to the last extreme the passage of a bill to naturalize the Japanese. We do not want any more of the race or color question in the United States than we have at present. I do not think at any treaty the federal government might enter into with Japan which would dictate how the schools should be conducted in our State could be constitutional."

REPRESENTATIVE DUNCAN MCKINLAY:—"The President has been misinformed. The Japanese coming to California are of the lowest classes, many of them criminals, and diseased. The boys are boys only in name; six ages range from twenty to fifty. At present we have no seats enough in our white schools to accommodate our own children. We do not want grown Japanese associating in these schools with our children of tender years."

REPRESENTATIVE KNOWLAND:—"The President is entitled to his own opinion in the matter, and a member of Congress is entitled to his. The President's remarks on the subject do not seem any too clear, and it is hard to get an idea of just how far he means to make his language go, but a threat seems to be there just the same. The veiled threat of coercion was unnecessary and uncalled for. If the message had been published before election some of us, I am afraid, would have been defeated for re-election."

REPRESENTATIVE JULIUS KAHN:—"We in California are law abiding but we want Japanese coolies kept out of our State. The sentiment of the entire State is behind the San Francisco School Board. We will never permit our children to be thrown into contact with adult Japanese students."

California State Officials.

Governor PARTEE:—"It would not do to have adult Japanese or adult Chinese or adult whites, for that matter, attend school with little children. The President and Eastern people do not appear to understand it. I do not see how the treaty with Japan has anything to do with it. It is entirely a State matter."

Secretary of State CURRY:—"I am opposed to any Asiatic being granted the right of naturalization, he be Japanese, Chinese, Korean, or any other Mongolian. The Japanese are particularly undesirable. They are dishonest in their dealings with white people. They would be a very dangerous element."

State Controller A. B. NYE:—"It is best to let the naturalization law stand as it is. The question of Japanese immigration is bound to be troublesome and it is a great mistake to complicate it by bringing in a side issue like naturalization and school attendance."

Surveyor General VICTOR H. WOODS:—"I am opposed to Japanese immigration; am opposed to naturalizing them, and am opposed to admitting them to schools with white children. I do not want to criticize President Roosevelt, but if he were a Californian he probably would see things differently."

Superior Judge E. C. HART:—"I am opposed to the President's attitude on Japanese citizenship and on the school question. The public schools are a State institution under State control, and the federal government has no right to interfere. If we have to naturalize the Japanese to maintain our peace relations with Japan, I think we had better go out of business."

Superior Judge PETER J. SHIELDS:—"I emphatically disagree with the President. The Japanese are an alien race. If unrestricted immigration and naturalization be permitted, California will in time be completely peopled with Japanese."

Prominent Pacific Coast Men.

DR. BENJAMIN IDE WHEELER, President of the University of California:—"In large part, at least for substance of doctrine, I agree with the President. Cordial relations with Japan, both commercial and otherwise, are of great importance to the Pacific Coast, and particularly to San Francisco. The school question is really in itself a small matter. The real question disturbing us is the rapid immigration of Japanese labor. The restriction of Japanese coolies will have to be restricted, but this is a delicate matter requiring delicate treatment. Japan is a first-rate power, and whatever is done will have to be done with her consent and her co-operation."

DR. DAVID STARR JORDAN, President of Stanford University (in an address at Palo Alto reported by the San Jose Mercury of December 11:—"It may be that the School Board of San Francisco is technically right. One thing that is fundamentally wrong is the exclusion of the Japanese. It is contrary to the fundamental principles of our country, which was designed by our fathers as a land for the oppressed of any nation. If we want to exclude the Japanese, the Japanese government will take action to prevent them from coming, but to pass an exclusion act against them because they are Japanese is unjust."

JAMES D. PHELAN, former Mayor of San Francisco:—"The State law requires separate schools for Mongolians. Grown Japanese are objectionable to parents who have young girls and boys in primary and grammar grades. Japanese naturalization is out of the question. It simply is a question in the long run of the preservation of the Republic."

GENERAL HARRISON GRAY OTIS, owner of the Los Angeles Times was a passenger returning December 17 from the Orient on the liner Nippon Maru. He said: "I do not agree with President Roosevelt in this matter. I do not see that that government has anything to do with the case. It is all local, and only San Francisco can decide what will be the restriction of the pupils in the schools of this city. Nor do I agree with President Roosevelt as to the naturalization of the Japanese. For forty years we have fought against the naturalization of Chinese, who are far superior to the Japanese in many respects, and why should we now turn about and advocate the citizenship of the Japanese?"

Governor MEAD, of Washington:—"Not for a minute do I believe in the naturalization of the Japanese as proposed by the President. Such a course would be most harmful to our people."

Former Governor MCGRAW:—"I do not endorse the President's recommendation for admitting the Japanese to citizenship."

FREDERICK A. BAUTSMAN, a leading attorney of Seattle:—"Each commonwealth in this country should decide for itself who shall be admitted to the common schools with our boys and girls. The federal government should leave that to the State."

A. C. HUGHES, of the Seattle Board of Education:—"Regulation of the common school is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the State authorities. If the Japanese, because of their ages, are given separate schools, they can not complain."

Professor FRANK B. COOPER, of the Seattle public schools:—"There is no ground for the segregation of the schools. It would be a bad thing to admit the Japanese to citizenship."

Superior Judge ALBERTSON, of Seattle:—"I am against naturalization of the Japanese. Admitting them would destroy the homogeneity of American citizenship."

From East of the Rockies.

Judge PETER S. GROSSCUP, of the United States Court of Appeals of Northern Illinois:—"The National Government has no right to make a treaty that will interfere with the regulation of schools by a State. California or any other State has the right guaranteed to it under the Constitution of the United States to exclude any one from its schools. Hence any treaty which conflicts with a State's rights to regulate its own schools is void."

Professor LOUIS T. HENGSTLER, Professor of Constitutional and International Law at the University of California:—"Every sovereign nation has the power, inherent in sovereignty and essential to self preservation, to forbid entirely the entrance of foreigners within its domain, or to admit them on such conditions as it sees fit to prescribe. The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly affirmed this rule in cases coming before it. The regulation of their educational system is a power never surrendered to the federal government by the several States."

Senator RAYMOND of Maryland:—"If the President can take possession of the public schools of California and compel the State to admit to them Japanese students, contrary to the laws of California, he could with equal propriety send us an amendment to the Santo Domingo treaty and demand the admission of the negro children of Santo Domingo into the white schools of South Carolina, or of any other State of the Union. There is no provision whatever in the treaty with Japan that confers the right that the President speaks of or gives to the government of Japan the privileges it claims in connection with the public school system of California or of any other State. If there was such a provision the treaty would be void and without any authority upon the part of the United States to make it."

Senator R. C. CORCORAN of New York:—"The sole question in the California matter is whether the Japanese under the treaty possess the right to attend the same public school as the white children. An examination of the treaty can hardly fail to show that it accords nothing of the kind."

Professor H. G. ROBERTS, of Harvard University, now at the University of California:—"The segregation of negro school children, being apparently contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment, is yet constitutional, because no clause in the Constitution interferes with the powers of the States to promote and protect the public health, peace, morals and good order within their respective borders. If the police power of a State can thus be urged in the case of a constitutional provision, there is no reason why it can not be urged in case of a treaty. The San Francisco regulation is quite constitutional because it is a reasonable exercise of the police power."

DR. HANNIS TAYLOR, former Minister to Spain, Special Counsel for the United States Government before the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, Professor of Constitutional and International Law at Columbia University:—"The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children is no infringement of the right of protection against unequal and partial legislation by States. Only by a constitutional amendment can the federal executive authority be clothed with the power to execute treaty guarantees, when the same conflict with certain elements of State jurisdiction over which the federal government can not exercise no control."

Some fifty miles off the southern coast of Newfoundland lies the last remnant of the colonial Empire of France in North America—three islands, small, rocky, and barren, that arc, nevertheless, important as the center of the French cod fisheries, and because of the sentiment associated with them as a bit of ground over which the tricolor may continue to fly. The colony is administered by a governor and has a deputy in the French Chamber.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

Congressman James S. Sherman of New York, will urge the passage of his universal two-cent mileage bill at this session of Congress.

Senator Cullom is 77 years old today. His health is not the best, as he had a fainting spell in Secretary Bonaparte's office recently, but he intends to equal his grandfather's record of 90 years.

Ex-Mayor Seth Low, of New York City, has just paid $27,397 in back taxes which he had only recently discovered should have been paid from three to five years ago. As he was only technically liable for the taxes, say the press reports, Mr. Low's action has received appreciative comment, and it is further noted that he is not now a candidate for any office.

Governor Winthrop of Porto Rico, is a thorough Spanish scholar, and not only understands what the natives say to him, but speaks the language fluently in responding. Governor Magoon, the present regent in Cuba, is not so fortunate in this respect, being obliged to use an interpreter, and the fact is said to be a distinct hindrance to his effectiveness and popularity.

The House of Representatives, without a dissenting vote, on December 13, passed a resolution declaring that the standard of orthography prescribed in generally accepted dictionaries of the English language should be used in all public documents emanating from government offices. With the publication of this action came the announcement that President Roosevelt would withdraw his simplified spelling order.

Should Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton University, get the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, he would receive scant support from the Bryan Democrats of the country, even though Bryan himself should take the stump in his behalf, declares the Portland Oregonian. The proposal to nominate Wilson will be taken as the sign of an effort to bring the party once more to "safe and sane" conditions—that is, to subject it again to plutocratic control. President Wilson is a great "literary feller," and supposed therefore to be respectably and even eminently conservative. About the "excesses of Democracy" he has learned a lot from history. He has the Gracchi, Catiline, Rienzi, Mirabeau, Barere and the rest of them at his fingers' ends. But the Democratic party will not want him.

Among the guests at the twenty-third annual dinner of the Gridiron Club in Washington, December 8, were four members of the President's Cabinet, nine Senators, and fourteen Representatives in Congress. The programme, as usual, was made up of sharp-pointed bits of satire, directed at prominent political persons or illuminating current topics. In a Cuban burlesque a member of the club impersonated Governor Magoon, of Cuba. Sitting on a red hot stove, he "held down the lid," while the club selected a cabinet for him, composed of "tame ducks," gentlemen who failed of election in November, and others. Mr. Moody was selected for the place of "trust buster or trust matador," the Cuban revolutionists insisting that Mr. Moody was not a "trust matador," but a "picador," the difference being that a matador kills while the picador only teases.

Commissioner Richards of the general land office, whose official conduct was in question even before Special Agent Myendorff gave his evidence the other day, is a Wyoming man, notes the Nebraska State Journal. He received his appointment through the influence of Senator Warren of Wyoming, who also came into question through Mr. Myendorff's testimony. Chief Clerk Pollock, whose name also figured in Mr. Myendorff's testimony, has been pressed by Senator Warren for the position to be made vacant by Commissioner Richards's resignation. Another interesting point is the fact that President D. O. Clark of the Union Pacific Coal Company, one of the alleged land grabbing concerns, is a brother of Senator Clark of Wyoming, who, Mr. Myendorff said, had tried to call him off from the land fraud investigation. Senator Warren is the leading member of the Senate Irrigation Committee, while Senator Clark is a member of the Public Lands Committee. Representative Mondell, Wyoming's single congressman, was formerly assistant commissioner of the land office and is now on the public lands as well as the irrigation committee of the house.

The London Motor Omnibus Company reports a gross revenue of $400,000 a year, and has paid a 10 per cent dividend.

A LONDON LITERARY VEXATION.

The War of Book Publishers and the "Times"—Secrets of the Trade.

Some of the illusions concerning what we have been pleased to regard as literature have been shattered during the past six weeks. When I say we, I refer to the reading class, a class, by the bye, which had seemed much larger and more important to me than now, and this may be set down as one of the illusions recently dispelled. The book publishers and the booksellers have been at war with the Times, authors and their friends and enemies have joined in the fray, and though the newspaper has fought practically single-handed, it has not been driven from the field. One need have little anxiety as to the outcome but for an allied interest that must suffer more than any of the combatants. Books have seemed to most of us something more than mere objects of barter—at least in the making and judging—but this battle has made many exposures of motives and measures, and some sordid, catch-penny aspects have appeared far too often.

It is estimated now, with seeming exactness, that there are 80,000 buyers of books and, say, 400,000 readers of books among our thirty-six millions of people—what might be termed a very small but select minority. Most of the readers of books are served by the circulating libraries, where, for a subscription usually of less than ten dollars a year, one may take out as many as three volumes a day. The publishers, in fact, regard the libraries as their best customers, though they are obliged to show more attention to the retail booksellers, who have an established trade and with their shop-windows and counters stir up the interest that induces readers for new books. For more than fifty years there has been a general trade agreement between publishers and booksellers, looking to the suppression of price-cutting competition, and it has been fairly successful. Booksellers who broke the agreement were in danger of being refused the usual trade discounts. Into this well-adjusted state of affairs the Times projected itself with disturbing innovations. Something more than a year ago it established a book club or library for the service or benefit of its subscribers. Recently it introduced a variation of its initial arrangements, offering to sell the books in its library at reduced prices to any subscribers who might desire to possess one or more volumes. This seems fair, on its face, but the retail booksellers discovered that it threatened their trade. Very few would pay six shillings for a novel when they could buy it of the Times book club for half that price or a little more. The publishers could not well allow the booksellers to suffer, for that meant decreased interest and consequent diminished sales. Efforts to induce the Times to change its plan were futile. To the proposal that it should at least refrain from offering for sale at second-hand or at a second-hand price any book until six months after its publication the Times gave a curt refusal. Then the war was on.

Two obvious means of attack presented themselves to the publishers, forced to fight for the protection of the booksellers. They could withdraw their advertising from the Times, and they could refuse to sell books to the Times book club. The first movement was put in operation and the Times responded with a request to its subscribers to boycott the offending publishers and their new books. To the threat that the Times would not be allowed to buy new books at less than retail prices, the paper answered nothing, though it seemed to assume that it could find a means of supply.

In the meantime the authors became deeply interested. They were between the upper and the nether millstones. Of course, their interests were with the publishers, and almost to a pen they held up the banners of the guild. The newspapers, ready to do what they could to humble their one great rival, printed columns daily about the war, including innumerable letters from novelists, poets, biographers, historians, and essayists. Hall Caine came forward as a peacemaker, and, when it was too late, the newspapers found that he had secured a vast amount of free advertising for a cheap revised edition of his story and play, "The Bondman." The Times had asserted that the inordinate profit of the publishers was about 800 per cent; that six-shilling novels could be produced and put on the market for two and sixpence or three shillings—that is, that an ordinary $1.50 book could be sold at a profit for 75 cents. With indignant outcry the publishers showed that few books returned a profit at any price. They declared that the cost of materials and labor in the publishing house was but a small part of the expense connected with getting out a book—there were authors' royalties, advertising, and an almost certain heavy loss in unsold remainders. Many publishers had been forced into bankruptcy, and the ancient belief that authors were robbed by them was a base and baseless fabrication. It was recalled that no less than $40,000 had been paid in advance recently for the manuscript of a notable biography, with contingent payments to follow, and when some one published a letter quoting Sir Evelyn Wood in a statement that he would not receive £600 for his book, Methuen & Co. answered with a declaration that the field marshal had received more than that amount from his book within ten days.

I doubt if the public in general was edified by these disclosures and recriminations. It seems to me that great names and great achievements were cheapened by the discussion. Rudyard Kipling, E. V. Lucas, and some others among the writers, were dignified if severe, but no good results have come from their efforts. On the contrary, the attacks on the publishers, and on the Times as well, have been distinctly injurious. There has been a raking over of half-forgotten incidents and complications that might, with better judgment, have been allowed to remain obscure. Some of the early and later history of the Times and its struggles with a fate of which it was once the master, has been rewritten with prejudice. The paper has gained nothing in respect in the quarrel.

For many years the Times was the one great newspaper of England, its circulation being probably equal to that of all the other dailies combined. It was able, dignified, apparently impartial, yet ever in touch with some of the government leaders. Its home and foreign news service was thorough and distinguished. When the penny papers began to crowd its field, offering many new and attractive features, it held its course serenely, and even to this day its price remains the same. It is the only three-penny daily paper in London. But its influence waned and its circulation is diminished. Four generations of the Walter family have been at its head, and though the present representative of the name is in every way a credit to the traditions, his power is small, as compared with that of the founder of the paper. The ownership is now in a corporate partnership, comprising, it is said, no less than two hundred persons. By a strange growth and entanglement of interests there are peculiar arrangements regarding the division of profits. Several departments or sections of the paper are set apart to certain individuals among the proprietors—a particular class of advertising, for example. It follows, necessarily, that in matters of business control there are opportunities for dissension, and it is not surprising that difficulties have been encountered. There is an action now pending in court which is expected to end in a general accounting and fixing of responsibility. The trial that followed the publication of the Parnell letters, the Parliamentary Commission that investigated its secret alliance with the mining magnates of the Transvaal, were heavy blows to its dignity and its reputation for straightforward methods, and its fortunes have never been at high tide since. Its more recent deviations from a direct and independent course are charged to the influence of an American advertiser and promoter.

It was through the enterprise of the American, a Mr. Hooper, that the Times took up the project of disposing of an edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica that was not exactly fresh. Thousands of sets were sold by alluring methods of advertising, and the paper and the shrewd promoter profited largely. A little later the book club was announced, and from that latest commercial attachment has sprung the issue which is now vexing the makers and venders of literature, real or pretended.

LONDON, December 3, 1906.

There was a time when dogs did the roasting—at least they kept the meat turning, so it would not burn. "Spit dogs" they were called, and we call their descendants "spitz" to this day. Spit dogs were trained to turn the spits on which roasted chickens, beef, ducks, and turkeys. The little fellows did their work well. They were never known to let a fowl burn or to snatch a mouthful or two from it. As late as 1816 spit dogs were employed.

The spotlessly pure marbles of the Island of Paros, Greece, are mined by an English company. Many of the celebrated statues left by the ancient world were sculptured from the marbles of the Parian mines. The green marbles of Tinos and the red of Mani are likewise controlled by foreign capital.

OLD FAVORITES.

Christmas in California.

Can this be Christmas—sweet as May,
With drowsy sun, and dreamy air,
And new grass pointing out the way
For flowers to follow, everywhere?

Has time grown sleepy at his post,
And let the exiled Summer back,
Or is it her regretful ghost,
Or witchcraft of the almanac?

While wandering breaths of mignonette
In at the open window come,
I send my thoughts afar, and let Them paint your Christmas Day at home.

Glitter of ice, and glint of frost,
And sparkles in the crusted snow;
And hark! the dancing sleigh-bells, tost
The faster as they fainter grow.

The creaking footsteps hurry past;
The quick breath dims the frosty air;
And down the crisp road slipping fast
Their laughing loads the cutters bear.

Penciled against the cold white sky,
Above the curling eaves of snow,
The thin blue smoke lifts lingeringly,
As loath to leave the mirth below.

For at the door a merry din
Is heard, with stamp of feathery feet,
And chattering girls come storming in,
To toast them at the roaring grate.

And then from muff and pocket peer,
And many a warm and scented nook,
Mysterious little bundles queer,
That, rustling, tempt the curious look.

Now broad upon the southern walls
The mellowed sun's great smile appears,
And tips the rough-ringed icicles
With sparks, that grow to glittering tears.

Then, as the darkening day goes by,
The wind gets gustier without,
And leaden streaks are on the sky,
And whirls of snow are all about.

Soon firelight shadows, merry crew,
Along the darkling walls will leap
And clap their hands, as if they knew
A thousand things too good to keep.

Sweet eyes with home's contentment filled,
As in the smouldering coals they peer,
Haply some wondering pictures build
Of how I keep my Christmas here.

Before me, on the wide, warm bay,
A million azure ripples run;
Round me the sprouting palm-shoots lay
Their shining lances to the sun.

With glossy leaves that poise or swing,
The callas their white cups unfold,
And faintest chimes of odor ring
From silver bells with tongues of gold.

A languor of deliciousness
Fills all the sea-enchanted clime;
And in blue heavens meet, and kiss,
The loitering clouds of summer-time.

This fragrance of the mountain balm
From spicy Lebanon might be;
Beneath such sunshine's amber calm
Slumbered the waves of Galilee.

O wondrous gift, in goodness given,
Each hour anew our eyes to greet,
And earth so fair—so close to Heaven,
'Twas trodden by the Master's feet.

And we—what bring we in return?
Only these broken lives, and lift
Them up to meet His pitying scorn,
As some poor child its foolish gift.

As some poor child on Christmas Day
Its broken toy in love might bring;
You could not break its heart and say
You cared not for the worthless thing?

Ah, word of trust, His child! That child
Who brought to earth the life divine,
Tells me the Father's pity mild
Scorns not even such a gift as mine.

I am His creature, and His air
I breathe, where'er my feet may stand;
The angels' song rings everywhere,
And all the earth is Holy Land.

—E. R. Sill.

The pension list of the Revolutionary war was closed November 11 by the death at Plymouth Union, Vt., of Mrs. Esther Sumner Damon, the only surviving widow of a soldier of the revolution. Mrs. Damon was born in 1813, and in September, 1835, she was married to Noah Damon, then 75 years old, her husband being 53 years older than she. She had been supported for some years by the chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The state Legislature of Vermont appropriated $200 for her keep in 1904, and $24 a month has been given her by the government.

THE CHRISTMAS PLAY.

Reminiscences of Old San Francisco.

There once lived in famous London City a genial man who, for forty Christmas-tides, made the big town merry. What magic had he? What but a warm humor and a nimble wit—for what but these have kept the world a-laughing since the world began to laugh? Every year—counting forty—he tricked out the little ones' old friends in the newest guises, for the Christmas play is always for the children. Yet

"Men are only boys grown tall; Hearts don't change much after all."

And they do say an Englishman never outgrows his love for the Christmas pantomime. You will find him, fat and middle-aged, in the very same seats in the stalls where his little legs dangled long years ago, watching the gambols of Clown and Pantaloon, Harlequin and Columbine—that perennial four of the English playhouse—with all the pleasure of early childhood, and only a long, delicate bridge of Christmas reminiscences to span the intervening years.

We have no Clown or Columbine, no Harlequin or Pantaloon.

They crossed the water once or twice, but only to give us a hasty "merry Christmas," and speed away again. The pantomime has borne transplanting well, and thrives in the hardy English soil, but it refuses to fasten its roots and grow in new America. We revel instead, at Christmas time, with the twin, the spectacle. And if you will find graybeards in the stalls in the English pantomime, how thickly may you not see them sown in our orchestras when the Christmas spectacle is on. Every one laughs with the children when the familiar little people of the story-books come trooping in—Red-Riding-Hood with her basket on her arm; or Cinderella, in brown stuff, in her corner by the ashes, or glittering with spangles by the side of the enchanting prince; or Bluebeard, scowling over the unhappy Fatima; or Robinson Crusoe in that marvelous island costume of white goat-skin. Indeed, the children always liked Robinson well enough, for he was the hero of adventure, whatever guise he wore; but the graybeards never took kindly to him till some daring Crusoe evolved that wonderful costume of white. It is not just the thing to prowl about a desert island with, but it is charming behind the footlights, and in a little handful of years it became traditional. When pretty Sue Robinson played it at Maguire's Opera House, a quarter of a century ago, she was handicapped with a mountain of hideous gray fur, which made her look like a Cosack in mid-winter, and the island man was not the popular fellow he later became. And, talking of Maguire's old theatre, was it not one of the Christmas spectacles which allowed the startling fact to penetrate some dim intellects that the graybeards did not go to the Christmas play only with a sentimental idea of evoking childhood's sunny memories? For a winter came when dear old Mother Goose was laid on the shelf and "The Black Crook," with its demons, and its fires, and its glittering Amazons, illuminated the bleak nights of the Christmas weather.

It was then that R.ta Sangalli came to town and the jeunesse doree bowed down before the magic of her pointed toe. Danseuses became the fashion, and they have never quite gone out. There was a solid magnificence about the Sangalli unusual with dancers, and an odd contortion which she flashed on them one night, and which can scarcely be called a step, set every one a-wondering, and the crowds flocked afresh to see how she did it. It was only when a rival came on the field that the knowing ones began talking of different schools, and establishing factions. For one night, when the tar etan-clad sylphs who posture about the stage in preparation had been grouping a half-hour, they parted to reveal a vision of ethereal loveliness, standing with pointed toe upon a swiftly whirling tin star. The whirling star is an old trick now, but it seemed of chiseled silver then, and Bonfanti the very lightest puff of thistledown that ever floated in a ballet. They called her "butterfly" and "fairy" then, but when she danced the Christmas-tide out at the old California, a few years later, the public said, too plainly, alas, that "she was a lean, black, scrawny little old Frenchwoman." But by that time Emily Rigl, dimpled, curved, and massive, was the new idol of the hour, albeit Betty, her plainer sister, was the more artistic danseuse. There was a clashing of schools even yet, but at the California they cut the Gordian knot for a Christmas or two by having exponents of both schools to tread their bewildering steps before our unknowing eyes, for was it not Rosa who was the very epitome of leanness, yet danced like a fairy? while the muscular, dark-eyed Palladino bounded across the stage in those tremendous tours de force which took one's breath away. One could hear her snuffy old father still clapping vigorously at the wings long after the applause of the house had died away, for he was an enthusiast upon the subject of "my baby's art." It sounds oddly enough to hear the skill which lies in a pair of twinkling heels spoken of with all fervor as a sublime art, and yet it must have been art pur et simple with which Bonfanti danced the wicked cancan as a pas seul, purged it of all grossness, and idealized it till there hung about it not a breath of Mabilite.

Does any one remember the dashing Hungarian danseuse who came when "Ahmed" was the Christmas spectacle at the Grand Opera House? Augusta Sohlike it was, and she bounded on the stage in pale blue with white fur, and carrying a tiny muff to suggest inclement weather.

Where do they go to, these ever-smiling dancers, when the season is over? They sink out of sight and are never heard of more till the Christmas time comes again; and even so, who of all these light fantastic trippers is ever heard of now at all? Do they live but for a winter's day?

It is one of the charms of the spectacle that it gives the widest latitude for the specialist. There is more in it than the enchanted grottoes, or the bowers of ferns, or the lakes of lilies where the leaves are all of silver, the blossoms all of gold, and the dew all of spangles. It was in the Christmas spectacle that we first knew the Majiltons, those loose-jointed grotesque dancers, who have had a hundred imitators since, but none quite like themselves. The comic Vokes family had given us a little taste of this wild, unclassified dancing some little time before, but the long-legged Majiltons took the wayward fancy of the town all in a twinkling; and trim, shapely Marie Majilton, all in red—a new Mephisto—charmed with her modest face, and startled with her daring gymnastics. Their followers and imitators came to be known generally as Majiltons, but there never were any who approached them except, perhaps, the Girards.

The elastic, gyrating Majiltons led naturally enough to the trapezists, whose home had always heretofore been in the canvas tent. The flying trapeze is always a singularly uncomfortable looking instrument of torture, and the hardest would watch with half-averted eyes a clear-headed, strong-nerved man periling life and limb for a multitude's diversion. But when that daring, boneless, young imp, "Lottie," came, she was so wide-eyed and fearless that one looked and forgot to remember that she was in danger. She was as quick as a flash, as limp as a jellyfish, as strong as a steel wire. She was a better artist, too, if one may so debase the term, than the tall, splendid young animal who afterward used to ogle the gilded youth in the orchestra, even from the dizzy heights of the trapeze. Leona Dare—a fine, characteristic name if you will—came fresh from a dazzling career among the sophomores of Yale, and the prestige of success helped her to more. The Christmas spectacle went well with them that year at the California. The orchestra was black at 10 o'clock, and the loungers in the corridor found their space considerably lessened at the same hour. It was one of those odd seasons which come now and then, when a dancer, a circus-rider, or a trapezist becomes the caprice of the hour, even with the womankind. They would gather in groups in the vestibule of her hotel to see her walk down to the dining-room with her long, swinging stride. She was not fine, but she was handsome to look at, what with the magnificence of her raiment, the glossy Pompadour roll of her hair, and the deep, dark lines beneath her eyes, a bold half inch wide, and laid on with unstinting hand.

It was not often the California gave itself so purely to spectacle at this season. True, there was a long glitter there one year of pink, and red, and silver, a meaningless trifle which they called "Cherry and Fair Star"; but, for the most part, they showed forth the talents of their people, and one beautiful Christmas we had "The Palace of Truth." How the town laughed over its quaint wit, and went to see it again and again; but Porter was the knight of the brush in those days, and "The Palace of Truth" itself was a glittering thing of beauty, and the costumes were something gorgeous to see, and Rose Evans was the enchanting princess who spoke the truth, even under the spell of a fairy's wand, and John McCullough was the Feramor to whom she said, ever and again, in her sweet, liquid English: "I love you Feramor—be satisfied." Fancy John McCullough in a Christmas play! But he made a gallant young Feramor in those days, and wore that famous dress of mauve and green with which he afterward made an innovation in "Othello" and dressed the Moorish general as a Venetian gallant.

Pretty Rose Evans! She had a voice of molten music, and must have worn the first of all the bangs. She is dead since; and so too is Owen Malow, that wonderful courtier in "The Palace of Truth," who so truly breathed the spirit of the play.

It must have been after this that the California took to burlesque at the holiday time. Was it not "Ixion" which came first, "Ixion," the heartiest and longest-lived of them all? For was it not a delicious thought to burlesque the Olympian gods themselves? Emelie Melville was Ixion; and, as she had not yet become a prima donna, she sang "Silver on Her Heels," and a pretty ballad or two to the delight of gods and dress-circle alike. And lovely Marie Gordon was Juno, and ill-fated Minnie Walton was the swift-winged Mercury, and such a group of pretty faces has never been seen upon the boards at one time since. It was another Christmas week that Aladdin went down into a cave of unexampled splendor. Merry, sparkling Maggie Moore was the lively Aladdin, and despite an unbecoming blue cotton costume and a queue, that was the year that she and Jimmy Williamson danced themselves into love and wedlock, and a big, big horn of plenty. But the old theatre became more massive in its style as the years rolled on, and took at last to Shakespearean spectacle, and left to the minor houses the oft-told tales, but ever welcome, of "Cinderella," or "The Babes in the Wood."

It was at the Grand Opera House that they gave us the pretty German story of "Snowflake," with its fairies and gnomes. It must have been on a snowflake of that time that little Annie Pixley drifted to fame; but not many others passed from out the portals of the Grand Opera House to climb to that pleasant height. And yet, of all the Christmas plays that we have had, there has been no more gorgeous spectacle than "Ahmed," which was a very surfeit of light and color, and scenic splendor. The children never ceased to tell of the glories of its transformation scene, as sheet after sheet of starry gauze unrolled itself, to disclose at last a wonderful revolving Moslem temple, and the happy pair in Paradise.

It is one of the comforts of the Christmas play that one knows it will always end well. The beautiful transformation scene must come at last. Who does not know that inconsequential and sudden ending of the story, when there is a creaking of the flats, a general bracing up in the orchestra, and an attentive wait everywhere for the prompter's bell? "Ding-a-ling," and the twin sides of a forest or a field part company, to reveal a long, swinging sheet of gauze, through which one sees but faintly the phantom form of coming glories. There is usually a pair of recumbent sylphs in tulle, on either side in the foreground, who retain rigidly their fixed positions throughout the unfolding of all the splendors. Another sheet of gauze; more nymphs. They may be in boats or floating on pond-lilies, for they have a gentle, undulating motion, dreamy and poetic to look at; but they must be frightfully sea-sick, poor girls! At this period there is a general disposition on the part of everything about the stage to take motion. Long leaves begin to put themselves forth from strange corners. The blossoms open, and strange fruit comes therefrom—a spangled fairy with a star wand, perhaps, or a little, curly-haired child, open-eyed and bewildered. The next sheet of gauze has a queer tremulousness. It is the prismatic light upon the water, for as the thin veil rolls up, the ever popular fountain is playing. There are more nymphs. There are tiers of them now, some of them gracefully reclining on swan-shaped boats, some lolling on long lily leaves, some perched on dizzying, whirling wheels; and as the waves lap, and the wheels fly, and the waters play, and the swan boats undulate and a trio of nymphs go sailing upward on a stiff, wooden cloud, the gauze veil goes up yet once more, and far, far up the heights, one sees the prince and princess—for there should be nothing less than royal rank in a well-regulated Christmas play—made happy after all the machinations of picturesque red demons and malignant spirits. They are bathed in living light, and seem to melt into the harmony of the long-drawn picture, when away goes the prompter's bell once more; down comes the cold curtain on all this warmth and beauty; and there is the end to the Christmas play.

It is proposed to substitute solitary confinement during six years for the death penalty in France. The death sentence has not been carried out for some time.

THE LOST SHIP MARIGOLD.

A Strange Tale of an Inhabited Island in the Pacific
Not Upon the Charts.

"On clearing the straits Drake accordingly held a north-west course, and in two days the fleet had advanced seventy leagues. Here it was overtaken by a violent and steady gale from the northeast, which drove them into 57° south latitude, and two hundred leagues to the west of Magellan's Straits. * * * On the 24th (September, 1578), the weather became more moderate, the wind shifted, and they partly retraced their course, for seven days standing to the northeast, during which land was seen, and near which a vain attempt was made to anchor. Their troubles did not end here. Once more the wind got back to its old quarter, and with great violence; and on the 30th the Marigold was separated from the Elizabeth and the Golden Hind, as Drake, on entering the South Sea, had named his ship, in compliment, it is said, to his patron, Sir Christopher Hatton. They made the land, but the Marigold was home to sea by the stress of the gale and was never heard of more. We do not even find a conjecture breathed of the fate of this ship."—Lives and Voyages of Drake, Cavendish, and Dampier.

Last year a gentleman of fortune, an Englishman, Sir Harry Buckstone, by name, visited San Francisco in his yacht. During his stay here, Dick Ferrier—everybody calls him Dick—was introduced to him, and through community of tastes and parity of age—each was about thirty-five or so—that sort of companionship common to men of the world with plenty of money and nothing to do grew up between them. Thus it came about that when Sir Harry got tired of the land and proposed a leisurely cruise on the Pacific, he asked Dick to accompany him, and Dick went.

I had almost forgotten the incident, until I met Dick the other day. He assured me that the voyage had proved to be something more than a loafing trip to the South Sea.

"I have sailed half round the world since we met last," he said. "Had a splendid time. But I'm not going to give you a full account of my travels; that is, not just now. Come up to my rooms tonight. I want to narrate one little bit of South Sea experience that, I think, will interest you in this unromantic age," he concluded, with a knowing twinkle.

Evening found Dick and me in easy chairs before a roaring hearth, in his cozy home.

"It was somewhere about the middle of last June that we steamed out of San Francisco harbor," said Dick. "The Firefly, as you know, is a quick runner—thinks nothing of fifteen knots under a full head. We steamed merrily south through the finest imaginable Pacific weather. We struck out in the direction of the Fijis and stayed there a couple of weeks in the highest of them, all of which was very new and interesting to me; but, Sir Harry had been there before, and only dropped in to get a favorite cane or something he had left.

"Now," said Sir Harry, after we had stayed a few days, 'what do you say if we strike for Valparaiso and visit Pitcairn Island on the way? I have a fancy to see these curious people.'

"Of course I was delighted and away we went. Pitcairn Island, as perhaps you know, is a lovely little dot, lying some fifteen hundred miles south of the line, and between two and three thousand from South America. You know that, as it is far out of the track of ships, it is seldom visited, and that the arrival of a ship there is an event of great rejoicing. Well, we got along swimmingly for about a week, when we experienced, for the first time, some uncommonly rough weather. Of course this was disagreeable; but we took the pitching about and the smashing of glass in the cabin, and even the demolition of the last but one of our cases of champagne, philosophically enough; but when it came to the breaking of a blade of our screw, we felt that it was piling on the agony a little too much, and indulged in some appropriate comments on our elemental luck. That didn't mend matters, however, one particle; and as, in addition to being blown out of our course, we didn't get a sight of the sun for a matter of five days, we could only tell by dead reckoning that we were a good deal south of where we ought to have been. Such things, however, don't last forever, and when it cleared up one night, and our captain could use his sextant, he gave our latitude as—let me see: I've got it down in my pocket-book. Yes; here it is—as 33° 24' S., 132° 15' W. I remember noting it down particularly, as Sir Harry and myself were curious to know where we were.

"Not so bad after all, gentlemen," said the captain as he looked over our shoulders; 'we are not quite five hundred miles south of Pitcairn Is. and, and if we have any luck we shall make her inside of three days. Meantime, we must lay to till morning. Some of the tackle wants fixing.'

"Lay to we did; and, as I was performing my ahutations next morning, I heard Sir Harry's voice shouting cheerily outside my state-room:

"Dick, I say, get out here. There's an island lying a few miles east of us which the captain says isn't on the chart. Just think of it; we're discoverers!"

"I dressed in double-quick time and got on deck, and sure enough there was the island, lying, I should say, some four or five miles off, and looking as pretty as a picture. Sir Harry and the captain stood side by side, each with a big telescope glued to his face, and gazing with rapt attention.

"There are people on it!" exclaimed the captain, as he shut up his glass with a snap.

"Very strange that it isn't on the chart, isn't it, captain?" remarked Sir Harry.

"Well, no," said the captain, reflectively. "I don't suppose a ship gets into this section once in twenty years, and only then when she's blown in like we've been. You see that island lies five hundred miles further off the line of travel than Pitcairn does, and she's on the direct route from nowhere to nowhere. So, it ain't as strange as it looks."

"As we got nearer the shore Sir Harry and I kept our telescopes to our eyes, to make out what sort of natives they were. Some scores of them had collected upon the beach and were watching our approach. Before we could make out much about the people, we could plainly see, about half a mile inland, a village of houses, some of them evidently wooden ones and painted, others made of mats and poles, such as we had seen among the Fijis.

"That looks uncommonly like civilization," said Sir Harry. "Can you catch what sort of dress they wear? Seems to me they have clothes on down to the feet anyway."

"As we got nearer I saw that Sir Harry was right, and the people were, at all events, rigged something like ordinary Christians, though I couldn't for the life of me at first make out what I did see. Well, when we got within a quarter of a mile of the shore, the landings grew shallow; so Sir Harry and I got into the captain's boat, and they pulled us to the beach. On our way we kept getting a better and better view of the islanders, and Sir Harry said to the captain:

"You must have made a mistake, Biggs. These people are no savages. Why, they are dressed in some sort of long clothes, though I can't tell yet what they are. This is no undiscovered island!"

"Phew!" said the captain; 'I'm blessed if I can understand it. I'd swear the place ain't on a chart, and I'd swear that my observations are all right too. But if I ever saw anything like this—well, I am blown!' and he whistled in a mystified way.

"By this time we had got to the beach, and jumped on shore, and if ever I was staggered in my life I was then. Well, the three of us, Sir Harry, the captain, and I, left the sailors in the boat and jumped ashore. About twenty paces in front of us, and about the same distance in advance of the crowd I told you we saw at first, stood four of the queerest, the quaintest, the most nondescript figures. One of the four had on a mantle reaching about to his knees, once evidently gaudy, but now faded from age, and here and there patched with some different material. The legs, from the knees down, were encased in hoots of untanned leather, such as are ordinarily worn by the stage brigand. A long white beard fell from a rather pleasant-looking brown face, while on the head was a species of leather slouch-hat with a broad brim. The next was a well-proportioned, black-headed young fellow, in a short mantle of faded silk, his lower extremities likewise sheathed in galligaskins of fine rawhide. This one held his hat in his hand, and it had a long feather in it. At his hip hung a sword in a curiously chased sheath. The other two were middle-aged men attired in old-fashioned leathern doublets and long rawhide boots, with antiquated cutlasses strapped to their waists. The expression on their faces was evidently meant to give an idea of importance, and each, in his own attitude, remained as if posing for a photograph. Anything more ludicrous and comical I never saw in my life. The effect on us, was irresistible. For one moment I was utterly dumfounded and nonplussed. The next, I came to a sense that Sir Harry was in fits behind his handkerchief, while the worthy captain stood like a statue, head thrown back, mouth wide open, and eyes staring out of his head. If anything was wanting to complete the picture and my utter demoralization, it was this. I gave vent to a guffaw before which an Apache war-whoop would seem tame, and which had the effect of exciting extreme commotion in the ranks behind the quarter, which had meanwhile been coming gradually closer, and many of whom then and there turned and fled precipitately, with a pack of howling children at their heels. This, however, broke up the matinee, and brought all hands, as it were, to a sense of the situation. It was now in order for both sides to say something, and if I was utterly demoralized before, I was now routed, horse, foot, and dragoons. May I be struck dumb and paralyzed on the spot, if that old fellow, with the long, gray beard and brigand hoots didn't amble up and say, with a Chesterfieldian bow:

"May't please your worships to go with us and taste of our cheer? You are right welcome to this island. We will entreat you well, for I hethink me ye do come from the land of England, of which our forefathers spake. We are right glad that ye have come, I warrant you. Suffer us to conduct you unto our homes."

"Yea, prithee, fair sirs, we entreat you," chimed in the other three.

"Sir Harry at once grasped the situation and politely accepted the hospitality. We then went along with our entertainers in the direction of the village, followed and surrounded, at a respectful distance, by the rest of the folks, who watched us narrowly and curiously. After a walk of about half a mile, during which we passed many cottages surrounded by gardens and plats of cultivated ground, we reached the village. This consisted of some forty or fifty cottages, of various sizes, some of them built of logs, some simply of poles with cocoanut matting flung over them, others of hoards with roofs and gables, which would compare favorably with similar structures of our own, one or two of them painted with a sort of ochre. All of the better class had doors and windows—that is, window-shaped openings, protected by lattice-work. Of course, we were puzzled to account for it all, and on the way up asked if it was actually true that they had never seen a ship before. The old man—Master Martin, he called himself—said that he remembered having once seen a ship sailing on the horizon very far to the east, and at another time one was driven past the island by a storm; but none had ever stopped there, and no stranger had ever been seen at the island, either in his time or within the traditions which he possessed.

"At last we stopped before one of the most pretentious of the cottages, on the threshold of which we were met by two females—one middle-aged, who was introduced to us as Dame Elizabeth Martin; the other a mere girl of 16 or so, as Amy Martin. The dame was like most elderly females, with a decided leaning to embonpoint, but the young lady was a veritable dusky beauty—bright, flashing eyes, rosy lips, jet black hair, and piquant features. What did they wear? Well, if there is one thing I'm more ignorant about than another, it is a woman's dress. Probably the old Greek tunic would come nearer to describing the feminine dress than anything else. The ladies courtesied, and in that quaint, old Elizabethan language, with which we are familiar in the pages of Ben Jonson and old Roger Ascham, asked us to be seated; the seats were high-backed chairs, adorned with an attempt at carving. There was already a table spread with a snowy cloth in the middle of the apartment, which was of the capacity of an ordinary family room. The floor was strewn with rushes. A large fire-place, lined with stone, occupied nearly the whole of one end. In fact, the whole thing smacked of some bygone period. It was as if we had suddenly dropped from the present century to the seventeenth, and, as it turned out, to all intents and purposes we had.

"An't please your worships to be seated, we will fall to," was the invitation to which we responded by bringing our chairs close up to the table, the fair Amy being flanked by Sir Harry on the one side and Master Marigold Thomson, the young fellow with the dandy doublet and hose, on the other, while another lady was similarly cavaliered by myself. On the other side of the festive board the worthy captain looked like a modern brass-buttoned sailor trussed up between two of the ancient huccaneers or swashbucklers of the Spanish Main. The dinner was plain, but well-cooked, the company being served indiscriminately upon wooden trenchers and brown crockery plates. There were knives and spoons, but no forks. Master Martin, our host, carved the roast kid by simply taking a good grip of the head with his left hand, while with his right he cut off chunks of the meat, which he put upon our platters as they were handed up to him. There were haked and hoiled yams on the table, with some other native succulent vegetables; what the old lady called a 'manchet' of wheaten bread with goat's milk butter, and fruit, such as mangoes, bananas, and pine-apples. After the roast kid a dish of wild ducks was brought in, with eggs and cheese. And while this was going on you must not suppose that we had nothing to drink.

"'Dickon,' called Master Martin in commanding tones to a bare-footed servant who hovered about, 'get thee to the buttery, and fetch a measure from yon cask we broached yestereven, when we saw their worships' ship over against us. Begone! hie thee!' then, apologetically to Sir Harry, 'I crave your pardon, fair knight, but these catiff knaves must be strictly entreated, else will they most woefully malinge. Is it ever so in thy country?'"

"To which Sir Harry replied gravely that it was, and so the banquet went merrily on. It was a sight for the gods to see our worthy captain hobnobbing and carrying on animated conversation with the buccaneers at the other side of the table; for all tongues were loosened under the influence of the wine, which was old and really fair. I could see, too, that Sir Harry was making his way in the good graces of damsel Amy, much to the perturbation of Master Marigold Thomson. I, of course, tried to do the agreeable, under difficulties, with my early English partner in the Greek tunic."

"Well," Dick continued, "the dinner passed off without a flaw. A perfect entente cordiale had been established, and we rose from the table in time to see the bare legs of black Dickon in hot pursuit of some of the villagers, who had transgressed the bounds of propriety so far as to gather unnoticed round the door while we were eating. After dinner we produced our cigar cases and astonished the natives by smoking."

"Sitting down in the shadow of a patriarchal palm, Master Martin told us the traditional history of the island; but wisely judging that such a history would seem more authentic if supported by some extraneous evidence, he went into the house, and returned in a few minutes with several articles, one of them a volume bound in black leather with silver clasps. This proved to be a black-letter edition of Edward VI's Bible, printed upon parchment—nothing else would have stood the wear and tear and thumbing of centuries. This, he told us, was the only book on the island, and from it he and all I saw around me learned to read—that is, all of the upper class; for even in this small and simple community the lines of caste were strictly drawn. Besides the Bible, Master Martin showed us a manuscript book, which proved to be a ship's log, much of which was blurred, and rendered illegible by sea water and extreme age, but from which I made these extracts from the last few entries, for your especial satisfaction," and Dick produced from his pocket book a page of manuscript of which the following is a transcript:

* * * The xxj of Awgust we entered the streights called Magellanes Streytes, the xxij of the same we arrived at an Ilans where we had greate store of fowles which could not flye, of the bygness of geese; we kyld in lesse than one day above three thousand of these fowles, and victualled our selves thrwly with them, as we thought. These streights were full of water and woode all the waye and very hye lande of both syds, in some places but a leauge in bredthe, in some * * * the vj September we entered the sowthe sea, where in all our beynege we never found but contrary wynds and extreme tempestes and boysterous wether * * * and Master Wynar, qd be, wher is your man Vlysses? by God's lyfe yf he were my man I would cut of his ears, yea, by God's wounds I wolde hange hym; but wherefore truly I do not know * * * Such an infinite number of seales as may seem incredible to any man that hath not bene there, not fearing the presence of men; for the most of our men were upon the Iland for the space of fifteen days to set up a Pinnesse, during which time the seales wold come and slepe by them, and rather resist our men, then giue place, unless mortall blowes forced them to yeld. * * * The last of September being a very foule night, and the seas sore growne, we lost the General's shippe and the Elizabeth running to the Eastward to get the shore whereof we had sight the vij of October, falling into a very dangerous bay full of rocks; and there we lost company of M. Drake the same night * * * the ambush brake out and set upon them, and before they could recover their bote and get her on flote they hurt all of our men very sore with their arrowes. * * * John Bruer, John Marten, Thomas Flud, great Nele, a dane, littell Nele a Fleming, John Gripe, John Mariner, Gregory Rayment escaped their wounds and were cured. * * * Here we do live unto this day in greate peace and plentye, and in amitie with ye natives.

Master Dixon, wch was the General's brother-in-law, ahavinge much skill in weying, doth teche ye native women how to make faire cloths unto themselves of certaine plantes and tres wch doe grow here most abundantly, so we are like have to no lack of raiment whiles we stay. Likewise Nele the Fleming is no mean cordwainere wch be-like I did not know till now. Likewise more of our men doe prove themselves cunning in divers ways. We have hewn unto our selves boords in some sort from the trees that be here wherof the wodde is fayre to splitte with the ships axes. Therefrom we have biggen howses and chaires and tables. Ye wch we had for our hogge, and of wch were a few graines, residue in the bagge, we sowed and now have goodly harvests and brede much to our help. Ye razens wch we had I bagge from the Portugals we likewise sowde their seedes wherfrom grewe grapes. Seeing that much time hath passed without syne of ship or rescue all save Thomas Flud and myself have taken unto themselves wives wherefrom they have children, by which we are much holpen. I do thinke we shall bringe all in ye feare of Godde.

JOHN THOMSON,
Captain of ye Marigold.

At ye Iland of Malifua, this 25th day of December (Xmas) Goddes son his daye, as I recon in the yere of pur lorde fifteen hundred eighty-three, V years have we bene here; God save Her Majestie. J. T.

"Now, what do you say to that?" shouted Dick, triumphantly, as I finished reading. "Master Martin showed us more things which had been saved from the ship—the figure-head, pieces of rope, the compass, some bows, a caliver—if you know what that is—some old cutlasses, and other articles, which were preserved with the utmost care and reverence. As to the dresses they then wore, and which had excited our sense of the ludicrous at our arrival, he explained that they were some of the original clothes of the crew of the Marigold, and had only been donned on the present occasion in deference to a sacred injunction, handed down from father to son and from generation to generation, that these garments should be worn to welcome the first arrivals, as proof of who their original wearers were. The dresses had accordingly been preserved from moth and mildew with the most reverent care, and, even after such a lapse of time, retained something of their pristine character. Marigold Thomson, for instance, the good-looking young fellow who was sweet on Master Martin's daughter, appeared by hereditary right, in the holiday bravery of his ancestor, John Thomson, the captain of the ill-fated vessel, whose name the youth bore."

"Toward evening we returned to the yacht, our hosts being loth to let us go, lest they should lose us forever. Sir Harry, however, comforted them with the assurance that all the yacht's boats would return in the morning and take as many as they could carry aboard."

"So things went from day to day, till at last we lived more on the island than we did on the yacht. Before we had been there a week I could tell that Sir Harry was snug in the meshes of the dimpled god. While I was potting wild duck upon the creeks, Sir Harry was making love to the fair Amy in the shady lanes or upon the beach. Of course, this didn't escape the notice of Master Marigold Thomson, who, I could see, eyed the pair with anything but feelings of affection. One evening as we were lying in our hammocks smoking—we swung our hammocks under a big tree near old Martin's cottage—Sir Harry began to talk."

"'Dick,' said he, 'did you ever see a girl like that? So simple, so artless, so innocent, such a beauty, so unlike those sophisticated, artificial, hot-house exotics one meets in a London drawing-room! By Jove! I've a good mind to do it.'"

"'All right, old fellow, go ahead,' I said, 'I know you'll do it anyhow, so I may just as well chime in now, and be done with it.'"

"'I think I can make it all right at home,' he went on. 'Of course they'll kick at first, but I'm the party principally interested, if it comes to that.'"

"'What does the girl say to it?' I said. 'Who knows but there might be some objections on that side?'"

"'Tomorrow I mean to ask her,' sighed Sir Harry. 'I don't think I'm mistaken in the result.'"

"But Sir Harry need not have worried as to the outcome, for on the following day she asked him. It seemed that there was a custom on the island that the first man who sought the hand of a maiden in marriage was usually given the preference; if she refused him, however, she was compelled to seek another lover and propose to him. Young Marigold, seeing the way the wind was blowing, had made a formal proposition for old Martin's daughter, but Amy declared for Sir Harry."

"Now no doubt you will suppose that a time of regular courtship began. So it did. It began. That evening, after dinner, I was comfortably strolling along the moonlit beach smoking a cigar, and complacently appreciating the luxurious warmth and ease of my surroundings. About a hundred yards to my right, I saw a couple of figures which I had no difficulty in recognizing as Sir Harry and Amy. They were strolling along as close as lovers, near where a fringe of myrtle ran down almost to the edge of the water. I was thinking over past reminiscences of the same sort, and dreamily taking in the situation in general, when whang! came a sound out of the laurel thicket. The next moment the air was startled with a masculine groan and a feminine shriek. I ran there and found Sir Harry on the sand and Miss Amy engaged in tugging away at the arrow that had lodged in his back. I saw at the first pull that the arrow had done its work well, and the barb was firmly imbedded in the flesh. So I just slipped his arms out of the sleeve of his coat and waistcoat—ripped off the back of his shirt and underclothing, went to work on the flesh round the barbs, and brought out the arrow. Twenty seconds after he had been hit, I had him plastered up—you know I always make it a point of carrying enough plaster in my pocket-book to fix up a regiment; and by this time Amy's shrieks had brought the old man and the old woman, and about a hundred of the villagers. They came running up with lights, and crying, with that melancholy cadence which is the distinctive mark of barbaric man, as if their hearts would break."

"Sir Harry was brought in and nursed with all the possible care that simple, kind people, whose heart is in their every action, could give. Nobody could account for the catastrophe. Strange as it may seem to you, the brand of Cain had never been set upon their brows within their memory, and had been blotted out even from their dim traditions."

"Morning rose with Amy still hovering round his bed, when news was brought in of another terrible calamity. Marigold Thomson had been found with his brains dashed out, at the foot of the highest coast bluff on the island, about a mile off."

"I won't keep you much longer. Nobody ever knew who fired that arrow. If they knew, they said nothing. Poor Marigold was brought in dead. He was covered with flowers—and most beautiful, resplendent, gorgeous flowers they were, too. We buried him with true grief, true tears, and the most heartfelt feeling. And so ended, after three hundred years, the last descendant of John Thomson, captain of the Marigold, who had passed through Magellan's straits with Sir Francis Drake, and brought his ship safe to land on an island in the South Seas. Oh, the travesty of fortune! Push that decanter this way, and light another cigar. Tomorrow I shall have the pleasure of introducing you to Sir Harry and his island bride."

The Christmas Carol.

The minstrels played their Christmas tune
Tonight beneath my cottage-eaves;
While, smitten by a lofty moon,
The encircling laurels, thick with leaves,
Gave back a rich and dazzling sheen,
That overpowered their natural green.

Through hill and valley every breeze
Had sunk to rest with folded wings;
Keen was the air, but could not freeze,
Nor cbeck the music of the strings;
So stout and hardy were the band
That scraped the chords with strenuous hand!

And who but listened?—till was paid
Respect to every inmate's claim;
The greeting given, the music played,
In honor of each household name,
Duly pronounced with lusty call,
And "Merry Christmas" wished to all!

How touching, when, at midnight, sweep
Snow-muffled winds, and all is dark,
To hear and sink again to sleep!
Or, at an earlier call, to mark,
By blazing fire, the still suspense
Of self-complacent innocence.

The mutual nod—the grave disguise
Of hearts with gladness brimming o'er;
And some unbidden tears that rise
For names once heard, and heard no more;
Tears brightened by the serenade
For infant in the cradle laid.

Hail, ancient Manners! sure defence,
Where they survive, of wholesome laws;
Remnants of love whose modest sense
Thus into narrow room withdraws;
Hail, Usages of pristine mould,
And ye that guard them, Mountains old!

—Wordsworth.

The beautiful Abbey of St. Germain and St. Mary at Selby, Yorkshire, was almost entirely destroyed by fire a few days ago. Portions of the building dated from 1096. Its architecture, owing to additions at various periods, was of many styles, but the nave and choir were among the most beautiful and perfect specimens of Norman architecture in England. The local fire brigade found that the fire had gained a strong hold on the organ—a new instrument recently installed at a cost of $6000. Their efforts had hardly any effect on the fire, which, having destroyed the organ, rose to the roof of the choir, and spread with remarkable rapidity among the seasoned oak timbers

A prisoner under sentence of death in the county jail at Newcastle, Pa., has been forced to grow a full beard against his will by reason of a ruling of the County Commissioners, who refuse to pay a barber for shaving him.

CALIFORNIA STATE ELECTION 1906.

Report of Official Canvass.

Secretary of State Curry has completed the canvass of the vote of California for State officers. His figures are as follows:

Governor—James N. Gillett, R., 125,887; Theodore A. Bell, D., 117,645; Austin Lewis, S., 16,036; James H. Blanchard, P., 7,355; William H. Langdon, I. L., 45,008; scattering 44. Gillett's majority over Bell, 8,242.

Lieutenant Governor—Warren R. Porter, R., 133,990; Thomas O. Toland, D., 108,493; Frank I. Wheat, S., 10,831; C. N. Whitmore, P., 7,395; James H. Blagge, I. L., 35,189; scattering 165.

Associate Justices Supreme Court (full term)—Fredk. W. Henshaw, R., 143,778; William G. Lorrigan, R., 147,390; Jackson Hatch, D., 86,236; Frank J. Murasky, D., 112,710; James Andrew, S., 17,515; Emil Liess, S., 17,515; Frank H. Farrar, I. L., 25,050; scattering 8.

Associate Justices Supreme Court (unexpired term)—M. G. Sloss, R., 143,049; J. Early Craig, D., 79,889; Herman E. Fletcher, S., 17,409; Henry E. Mills, I. L., 24,505; scattering 5.

Secretary of State—Charles F. Curry, R., 169,240; Arthur N. Nichols, D., 79,669; W. T. Holloway, S., 17,297; Alex Beck, P., 7,058; O. T. Swain, I. L., 24,068; scattering 5.

Controller—Edward P. Colgan, R., 190,407; John Markley, D., 79,470; O. H. Philbrick, S., 17,344; A. B. Taynton, P., 6,956; scattering 5.

Treasurer—William R. Williams, R., 154,652; S. S. Bayley, D., 80,547; John M. Reynolds, S., 17,375; Walter E. Vail, P., 6,929; F. E. Haskell, U. L., 12,619; scattering 5.

Attorney General—U. S. Webb, R., 151,305; W. O. Morton, D., 84,991; George W. Downing, S., 17,258; M. G. McCaslin, P., 6,747; Gessner Williams, I. L., 24,821.

Surveyor General—W. S. Kingsbury, R., 161,307; J. C. Lane, D., 82,551; L. D. Matthews, S., 17,321; J. H. Kendall, P., 6,819; Isaac N. Chapman, I. L., 24,365; scattering 4.

Clerk of the Supreme Court—Frank L. Caughey, R., 150,040; G. M. Haybi, D., 91,955; J. H. Wilde, S., 17,437; W. P. Bassett, P., 6,964; Edward Rainey, I. L., 24,515; scattering 4.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—Edward Hyatt, R., 174,724; Miss Anna Williams, D., 96,183; Anna F. Smith, S., 17,228; S. P. Meade, P., 6,839; scattering 4.

Superintendent of State Printing—W. W. Shannon, R., 163,197; E. I. Woodman, D., 80,699; George A. Garrett, S., 17,414; Wiley J. Phillips, P., 6,936; John Collins, I. L., 24,054; scattering 3. The late Edward P. Colgan received 190,407 votes, being the largest vote cast for any candidate on the State ticket.

CONGRESS.

Second district—McKinlay, 23,411; Beard, 20,262; Gaylord, 1,524.

Third district—Knowland, 21,510; Brunk, 7,716; McDewitt, 2,514; Montgomery, 482; Boynton, 3,614.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

First district—Scott, 19,662; White, 15,543; Hoyne, 2,200.

Second district—Brown, 32,398; Downey, 20,532; Cowdery, 3,505.

Third district—Collins, 33,982; Nutting, 23,577; Collier, 2,391.

Fourth district—McElvaine, 66,544; Kastle, 40,406; Blenkeron, 9,301.

COURT OF APPEALS.

First district—Presiding Justice—Cook, 46,457; Cooper, 49,030; Crowley 6,238; scattering 2.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

First district—Kerrigan, 49,908; Hall, 51,007; Dooling, 49,102; Harrison, 28,971; Wilson, 5,949; Stocking, 5,857; Houx, 13,890.

Second district—Presiding Justice—Allen, 70,494; Tuttle, 7,782; Assistant Justices—Taggart, 46,374; Shaw, 46,148; Smith, 24,650; Short, 23,974; Renstone, 7,672; Jones, 7,601.

Third district—Presiding Justice—Chipman, 46,879; Hughes, 44,880; Chambers, 3,805.

Assistant Justices—Hart, 56,360; Burnett, 49,762; McLaughlin, 42,224; Cowan, 33,774; Moliter, 3,755.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

First district—Irwin, 41,127; Peters, 25,052; Williams, 3,331; Landoa, 804.

Second district—Wilson, 21,216; Wilkins, 9,790; Woodby, 2,408; Biggs, 10,321.

Third district—Summerland, 83,036; Goings, 42,956; Youngman, 11,985; Needham, 5,689; Black, 17,100.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 5—Regular session—Relating to the appropriation of Cogswell College from taxation—Yes, 65,250; no, 43,327.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 11—Relating to salary of Supreme and Appellate Court Judges—Yes, 50,957; no, 49,905.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 12—Regular session—Relating to salary of State officers—Yes, 31,063; no, 71,435.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 13—Regular session—Relating to place where bonds may be sold—Yes, 69,305; no, 32,384.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 14—Regular session—Relating to forming new city charters—Yes, 49,327; no, 48,391.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 2—Regular session—Relating to term of office—Yes, 53,307; no, 43,200.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 14—Regular session—Relating to salary land duties of Lieutenant-Governor—Yes, 31,556; no, 64,944.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 20—Regular session—Relating to extending corporation charters—Yes, 37,098; no, 65,982.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 38—Regular session—Relating to loaning of public money—Yes, 62,767; no, 35,213.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 40—Regular session—Relating to salary of members of the Legislature—Yes, 37,300; no, 57,785.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 2—Extra session—Relating to purchasing and selling of land, condemning of streets, etc., by city of San Francisco—Yes, 35,469; no, 58,082.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 2—Extra session—Permitting the cities of San Francisco and San Jose to amend their charters—Yes, 31,867; no, 58,254.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 3—Extra session—Permitting borrowers to contract to pay taxes on mortgages—Yes, 54,894; no, 39,876.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 12—Extra session—Permitting the cities of San Francisco and San Jose to issue bonds for seventy-five years—Yes, 48,221; no, 43,629.

The Value of Bachelors.

A young man in Illinois was killed when a train struck his automobile, and his relatives having sued for damages were awarded the sum of one dollar. The verdict has just been affirmed by the appellate court. The decision, it appears (says the Indianapolis Star), was rendered on the ground that the man was a bachelor, with no one dependent on him, and the natural assumption, is therefore, that the dollar represented, in the judgment of the jury, the value of an unmarried man to the community.

The estimate at first thought seems unreasonably low, if it is to be made of general application, and, naturally, protests are being made against it. Women, curiously enough, are more earnest in their objections than men when it might be supposed that they would feel flattered over the inference to be drawn from the decision that a man is of practically no value until he gains a definite increase in money's worth by the mere fact of having a wife. Possibly, however, the feminine idea is that it is lowering to womanly dignity to take a dollar man for a husband, even though his valuation becomes thereby enhanced.

A leading Chicago "Daughter" thoughtfully asks, "If there were not any bachelors where would the husbands come from?" She also urges the indisputable fact that bachelors often make good husbands, and adds appreciatively: "I should put a premium on bachelors, instead of marking them down on the bargain counter."

Possibly a distinction should be made among bachelors. The young bachelor, say between 20 and 30, has matrimonial possibilities and therefore deserves to rate higher than his brother to whom the title "old bachelor" belongs. The average man, of course, considers himself young at 35 or even 40, and has been known to disport himself gayly at 50 and 60, under the apparent delusion that he was yet "one of the boys," and still fascinating; but the general verdict undoubtedly is that if a man is unmarried at 35 he is an old bachelor.

What a just rating is for the young bachelor is a matter open to discussion. The Illinois jury has fixed it at $1, but it is possible that the twelve good men were married and heads of families and therefore not without prejudice. In Indiana the estimate has been put as high as $5,000 in numerous instances of both young and old unmarried men. Perhaps hereafter the matter of marriage will be taken into consideration, and a more equitable conclusion reached, for certainly $5,000 for even a Hoosier old bachelor seems an extravagant outlay of good money.

The Emperor of Germany has given to the Berlin Golf Club land for links on the imperial palace grounds. For some years the American, English and Scotch colony in Berlin, numbering about 2000, among whom there are some Bostonians, Richard Olney's son-in-law being a prominent member of the club, have been allowed to use a public park about three miles from Berlin. They have leased a dwelling house in the vicinity, where an old German hausfrau supplies the most delicious home-made cooking for them, and here on bank holidays, Saturday afternoons and Sundays, these English-speaking residents enjoy themselves thoroughly. The park is a public one, and the Germans, not being given much to out-door sports, fail to appreciate the beauties of the game. Just as a drive is about to be made from one of the tees a whole German family, consisting of father and mother and anywhere from five to a dozen children, will get in line with the drive, and inasmuch as it is impossible to convince them that the little pellet will carry that distance and might kill, it necessitates long explanations, so that playing a nine-hole course takes anywhere from two to three hours. The German Emperor has stated that he believes that it would be a great thing for his people, and especially for the army officers, if they could get interested in a healthy outdoor game like golf, instead of spending their spare time promenading on Unter den Linden or on Friedrich strasse, and it is probably to popularize the game that he has presented the club with space on his own private land.

CURRENT VERSE.

The One Road.

A wood road, and a good road,
And a road by land and sea;
A high road, and a by-road,
And a road by plain and lea;
A fair road, and a bare road,
And a road by vale and hill;
A deep road, and a steep road,
And a foot road sweet and still;
A town road, and a down road,
And the king's road broad and free—
There's but one road in all the world,
The way that leads to thee!

—Marie Van Vorst.

December Twilight.

Far off in ashen skies
The smoldering sunset faintly glows
With pearly tints and crimson dyes
Like blushes of a fading rose;
From cedar trees the snowbirds cry,
Their feathers ruffled in the cold;
The shivering sheep flocks gather nigh
Or straggle, bleating, to their fold.

Chrysanthemums along the walks
Their gorgeous bygone glories shed
And hang from black, decaying stalks
Sprays yellow, purple, white and red.
Their pungent fragrance, as it dies,
Recalls the springtime songs of old,
Primroses under summer skies,
The autumn orchard's mellow gold.

And, like an etching clearly traced
In airy lines against the west,
The fragile twigs are interlaced,
Lifting a little shattered nest.
The glory of the gray-haired year
Is ruined with December's blight,
Like this frail nest that lingers here,
Forsaken in the winter night.

The Cornish Wind.

There is a wind in Cornwall that I know
From any other wind, because it smells
Of the warm honey breath of heather-bells
And of the sea's salt; and these meet and flow
With such sharp savour in such sharpness met
That the astonished sense in ecstasy
Tastes the ripe earth and the unvintaged sea.
Wind out of Cornwall, wind, if I forget;
Not in the tunnelled streets where scarce men breathe
The air they live by, but wherever seas
Blossom in foam, wherever merchant bees
Volubly traffic upon any heath;
If I forget, shame me! or if I find
A wind in England like my Cornish wind.

—Arthur Symonds.

The Mist.

I fall, I fold
The hill, the wold,
In closely clinging, cool embraces;
I bathe the lifted flower-faces,
I spread the lawn with fairy laces,
And show all Nature filmy-stoled.

I form, I float,
A wraith-like boat,
Among the mere-side's long, lush grasses;
In torn and fringed-fluttering masses,
I glide adown the birchen passes—
A gray, old Lear in tattered coat.

I wind, I wreathe
A lattice, breathe
Between its bars, presage the morning,
Stir Beauty with a fine, faint warning,
Leave pearls, her mignonette adorning
Then steal down vines to the beds beneath.

I creep, I crawl
By lichen wall.
In through a mournful iron grating,
To where the Dead lie still waiting;
As one that is blind, each graven slating
I trace for the name where my tears shall fall.

—Putnam's Monthly.

Love in a Garden.

At last the fragrance with the bloom was gone,
And naught was left of all my joy but this,
The bitter memory of a loveless kiss,
The gray foreboding of a sunless dawn.
Around me lay Love's Eden, quite forlorn,
With scattered petals and wild disarray
Of lilies trampled whilst the night was gay.
And vines of all their purple fruitage shorn.
Through distant tree-tops, like a silver thread,
Whitened the day. The rumored tread of One,
Who walking spaciouly is clothed in light,
Startled the silence into panic fright.
But when above the pines rose up the sun,
I saw a Stranger with a thorn-clad head.

—Coningsby William Dawson.

The military medical and hospital corps of Turkey uses a red crescent as its emblem instead of the red cross used by other countries.

FADS FREAKS
FANCIES FLASHES

HAVE THEIR BRIEF DAY
THEN FALL BY THE WAY
BUT

HUNTER
BALTIMORE
RYE

WAS FIRMLY FOUNDED ON THE ROCK OF REPUTATION AND PUBLIC FAVOR MORE THAN FIFTY YEARS AGO AND IS TO-DAY THE MOST POPULAR WHISKEY ON THE AMERICAN CONTINENT

CHARLES M. REYNOLDS CO.
Agents for California and Nevada
912-914 Folsom St., San Francisco, Cal.

What Press Clippings Mean To You

Press clipping information is information you can obtain in no other way. As a business aid, Press Clippings will place before you every scrap of news printed in the country pertaining to your business. They will show you every possible market, big and little, for your goods, openings that you would never hear about in the ordinary way, and they give you this information while it is fresh and valuable.

If you have a bobby or wish information upon any subject or topic, press clippings will give you any subject or topic, press clippings will give you all the current information printed on the subject.

The cost for any purpose is usually but a few cents a day.

The International Press Clipping Bureau, the largest press clipping bureau in the world, reads and clips 55,000 papers and other periodicals each month, and even if you are now a subscriber to some other clipping bureau, it will pay you to investigate our superior service.

Write for our book about Press Clippings and our Daily Business Reports, and ask about The International Information Bureau, which supplies complete manuscripts or materials for addresses, essays, lectures and debates, and complete and reliable information upon any subject at a reasonable cost. Address

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Bnyce Bldg., Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A.

Hotel del Coronado

A gem set in semi-tropical surroundings
Dryest marine climate known
No winter, but perpetual spring or early summer
Outdoor sports 365 days in the year
Golf, Polo, Tennis
Fishing, Boating, and Bathing
Choicest cuisine of any hotel in the West
American plan only
All modern conveniences
All outside rooms
Send for illustrated booklet

MORGAN ROSS, Mgr., Coronado Beach Cal.
H. F. NORCROSS, General Agent
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Sir Henry Eugene Robinson, who was a lieutenant in the Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa during the Boer war, enlisted in the United States navy at the Pittsburg recruiting station a few days ago, accepting the position of mess attendant, and will serve the officers.

Dr. William H. Brooks, director of Smith Observatory and professor of astronomy at Hobart College, has been awarded a medal by the Astronomical Society of Mexico for his discoveries of twenty-five comets, said to be a larger number than any other living astronomer has found.

President Roosevelt has been awarded the Nobel peace prize by the Norwegian Storting for his efforts in ending the Russo-Japanese war. The money represented by the prize, 138,336 crowns, or $37,127.65, it was announced at the White House, would found a fund the income from which shall be used to settle labor disputes.

Mme. Emile Zola has requested that the two illegitimate children of her husband bear his name and not that of their mother. Mme. Zola is childless, and it was with her free consent that her husband lived with the mother of his children both in Paris and London. The daughter, Denise, is 17 years old; the son, Jacques, is still a school boy.

It is announced the Prince August Wilhelm, the fourth son of the Kaiser, will visit the United States in the near future. The prince is a good-looking lad of 19, and has just completed his studies at Bonn University, where the Kaiser was also a student. A lover of the open-air life, it is said he has an ambition to live on a ranch on the Western plains.

Summing up the subject, George Bernard Shaw, the brilliant and erratic playwright, describes himself in this way: "I am a bachelor, an Irishman, a vegetarian, an atheist, a teetotaler, a fanatic, a humorist, a fluent liar, a social democrat, a lecturer and debater, a lover of music, a fierce opponent of the present status of women, and an insister on the seriousness of art."

The Grand Duke Vladimir of Russia found much pleasure in his visit to France although danger threatened him even in Paris. A well-dressed and polite Russian "gentleman" went to the grand duke's hotel and, to prove his patriotism, left a splendid bouquet for the Czar's uncle. After the loyalist's departure the grand duke's cautious servant found an infernal machine hidden among the stems of the lovely flowers.

The only officer of the active list of the army who received a brevet for "conspicuous gallantry" in action is Brigadier General Stephen P. Jocelyn, the new commandant of the department of Columbia. That brevet carried with it the rank of major and was conferred upon him in February, 1890, while he was a captain in the Twenty-first infantry and was for his services against Indians at the Clearwater, Idaho, in 1877. In addition to being an old Indian campaigner, General Jocelyn is a veteran of the civil war.

Among the graduates of Vassar who were prominent in athletics there is none better known than Miss Corliss Babson, who has the world's record as a high jumper. Miss Babson graduated with the class of 1905, and made her wonderful jumping record in the class games of 1904, when she cleared the bar at four feet two and one-half inches, a full inch above the best previous record by a woman. The prize for the best class poem was won two years in succession by Miss Babson. She has recently been appointed assistant to the president of Vassar.

Life in Washington is not attractive to Mrs. Elihu Root, and it is remarked that her dislike for the place is no more pronounced than her husband's delight in the atmosphere of the capital. The announcement that Mr. Root had accepted the portfolio of State came as a great surprise to her while she was visiting some up-State relatives in New York. She read the dispatch from her husband announcing his decision and then she turned to her friends and said: "I do believe that if they offered that husband of mine a place as policeman in Washington he would take it, he likes to live there so well."

Mrs. Featherstone Osler, of Toronto, Canada, was 100 years old December 14. She is the mother of Dr. William Osler, who is credited with the statement that the end of human usefulness comes at the age of 60, and that those who reach that age should no longer burden the world. Mrs. Osler, even at 100, is anything but past usefulness or a burden, according to her relatives. Of these there are four sons and one daughter living, and twenty-six grandchildren and one great grandchild. At the birthday feast the center-piece was a huge cake with designs in frosting emblematic of the four British rulers under whom Mrs. Osler has lived. These are King George III, William IV, Queen Victoria, and Edward VII.

King Edward can speak German and French as fluently as English, and has a fair knowledge of one or two other languages, but as a linguist he is eclipsed by the Emperor of Austria. It is told of the latter that at one of the great military reviews he addressed four different regiments --German, Hungarian, Bohemian, and Wallachian--each in its own tongue, and Hungarians will never forget how, fifteen years ago, the youthful Archduke Francis Joseph, when installing a certain governor, electrified his audience by addressing it in purest Magyar, a tongue no other archduke had ever taken the trouble to learn. They sprang from their seats, waved their swords in a frenzy of enthusiasm, and almost lifted the roof with tremendous shouts.

Hotel St. Francis

a credit to
San Francisco

PERFECT SERVICE
EVERY COMFORT

THEY WHO GO TO SEE
GO
TO STAY

The famous
Grill Room
is unsurpassed

Take your friends to lunch there

Del Monte Offers

During the reconstruction of San Francisco, Hotel Del Monte offers a welcome shelter to those desiring a homelike place for rest and recreation. The park-like grounds, the golf links, the flowers, the many walks and drives were never more attractive than at the present. The entire Hotel has recently been renovated and improved, with steam heat, electric lights, hot and cold water, telephones in every room. Why not make this attractive resort near San Francisco your permanent home? Special terms for families. Address Geo. F. Snell, Manager, Del Monte, California

A Permanent Home

THE OCULARIUM

Perfect Fitting
Eye Glasses

At Moderate Prices
Lenses Replaced, 50c

Henry Kahn & Co
OPTICIANS

1309 VAN NESS AVENUE
Between Bush and Sutter

LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE

THE ORIGINAL
WORCESTERSHIRE
FOR STEAKS, CHOPS, COLD MEATS,

FISH, SOUPS,
SALADS, GRAVIES, etc.

THE PEERLESS SEASONING.

LITERARY NOTES.

Prescott's Complete Works.

To San Franciscans who lost their set of Prescott in the April fire is commended a new library edition of the complete works of this great American historian. The new edition is in twelve volumes, and represents months of expert labor, and careful preparation. The work has been entirely reset in large, clear type. The illustrations, which were selected after painstaking labor and research, include rare portraits, maps, and paintings; there are also twelve artistic photogravures. The edition is in different bindings for different purchasers and prices; cloth, $12; gilt top, $15; half leather, $24; half calf, $30; De Luxe, half morocco, $36, and may be obtained only in sets.

No American library, private or public, is complete that has not a full set of Prescott. Since the nearly blind scholar produced "Ferdinand and Isabella" in 1838, his reputation as a master of narration and incident has never waned. There is no more picturesque period in history than that selected by Prescott for his "Conquest of Mexico" and "Conquest of Peru." His must needs be a dull pen that can not make interesting the story of the brave and unscrupulous Spanish conquerors, and illumined by Prescott's wonderfully vivid style, the chronicle of conquest is of remarkable interest. The lover of the historical novel, to whom Prescott is too often simply a name, remembered from school days, would do well to read the historian's work, if only for entertainment. There is nothing in fiction quite so fascinating. The lives of "Philip the Second" and "Charles the Fifth"; a volume of miscellanies; and the authorized "Life of Prescott," in one volume, by George Ticknor, complete the edition. Each volume contains an exhaustive index, as well as synoptical contents.

Published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.

Books at Cost

CLOSING OUT ENTIRE LINE OF NEW BOOKS AT A REDUCTION OF

33 1/2 per cent on regular books
20 " " " " " " " " " " " "

A SAVING OF 50c On Every $1.50 Book
35c On Every $1.00 Book
25c On Every 75c Book

JAMES D. BLAKE

AT THE SIGN OF THE LAMP

643 Turk Street . Near Van Ness Ave.
Open Evenings after 7 o'clock

Any Solid Silverware

that passed through the fire, of which there is a fragment left,

Perfectly Restored

To any person having this work to be done I can show wonderful results at my shop, having restored some of the choicest silver in the city.

Specialty of trophies and presentation cups. Suitable designs submitted on application.

Gold and Silver Plating

JOHN O. BELLIS
Manufacturing Silversmith

1624 California Street Near Van Ness Ave.

MARTELL'S
★ ★ ★ AND ★ ★ ★ BOTTLED BY

MARTELL & Co.
IN COGNAC

There are no finer Liqueur
Brandies than these.

Brand: J. & F. MARTELL
OF EVERY LABEL, CORK,
CAPSULE AND CASE.

Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast,
WILLIAM WOLFF & Co. SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Bird's Physical Life.

"The Bird: Its Form and Structure," by C. William Beebe, Curator of Birds in the New York Zoological Park, is a work of the greatest value to ornithologists. In this authoritative volume, birds are considered as a class, not as individuals or families, and their class characteristics are reviewed from the standpoint of form and structure—what the author calls "an untechnical study of the bird in the abstract."

The book is intended for those who have made a special study of bird-lore, but it is full of interest for the amateur. In his treatment of the various phases of the bird's physical life, Mr. Beebe discusses first of all the more important of the bird-forms of past ages. It is curious that for nearly a million years birds have scarcely changed at all, and science has proved that birds and reptiles have a common origin. After considering the ancestry of birds, the author gives chapters to the feathers; the frame-work; the skull; organs of nutrition; the food; the breath; muscles and nerves; the senses; beaks and bills; heads and necks; the body; wings; feet and legs; tails; the eggs; and the bird in the egg. There are today some 13,000 or 14,000 different species of birds, but if some means are not taken to restrain man's use of the gun and trap, future generations will have knowledge of bird life only through books of this description.

There are 496 pages in the volume, and over 370 illustrations, chiefly photographs from life by the author. A list of works bearing on the subject is appended.

"The Bird," is the first volume of the American Nature Series, to which the most distinguished American naturalists will contribute.

Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $3.50 net.

An Opera Handbook.

"The Standard Operas" is a new and revised edition of that excellent hand-book by George P. Upton, which for so many years has been the trusted friend of editors and writers. The first copyright date is 1885, and we learn that this edition is the nineteenth printing. There is nothing new to be said of Mr. Upton's work, except that it has been carefully revised and brought to date. He includes new operas in his new edition, but without expressing any opinion as to whether they will hold the stage or not.

Published by A. C. McClurg & Co.; $1.50.

Meredith's Works.

The concluding four volumes in the handsome pocket edition of the works of George Meredith, are "The Amazing Marriage," "Lord Ormiston and His Aminta," "Short Stories," and "Poems." The edition is complete in sixteen volumes, although each book is sold separately. The set is well bound, and clearly printed on good paper. Lovers of Meredith's masterly works will welcome his peerless novels in this convenient form.

Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York; limp leather, $1.25 net; cloth, $1.00.

During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, a series of attempts were made in England to establish monopolies by royal letters-patent. There is an historical review of these enterprises in "The English Patents of Monopolies," by William Hyde Price. The work is the result of immense research and investigation. It is the first volume in a series, "Harvard Economic Studies." Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $1.50 net.

To Increase Capital Stock.

The growing needs of the Mercantile Trust Company's business have caused the board of directors to call a meeting of the stockholders for Wednesday, February 6, 1907, to vote upon the proposition of increasing the capital stock from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. The additional shares will be sold to the stockholders at $200 a share, the proceeds to be credited equally to the capital and surplus accounts.

BANKING.

Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank
OF SAN FRANCISCO

Union Trust Building, No. 4 Montgomery Street

ISAIAH W. HELLMAN, President

I. W. HELLMAN, JR., Vice-President

F. L. LIPMAN, Vice-President

FRANK B. KING, Cashier

GEORGE GRANT, Asst. Cashier

W. McGAVIN, Asst. Cashier

E. L. JACOBS, Asst. Cashier

Capital Paid Up	- - -	$6,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits	-	4,000,000.00
Total,	- -	10,000,000,000

DIRECTORS

Isaiah W. Hellman

Robert Watt

John F. Bigelow

C. DeGuigne

Dudley Evans

E. H. Harriman

William Haas

I. W. Hellman, Jr.

Wm. F. Herrin

Herbert E. Law

James L. Flood

Clarence H. Mackay

Leon Sloss

F. W. Van Sicklen

F. L. Lipman

Accounts of Banks, Corporations, Firms and Individuals invited
Correspondents throughout the world

French American Bank

Union Trust Building (Third Floor)

Ready to accommodate its customers and do a general banking business. We will collect on insurance policies for those wishing our services.

THE FRENCH SAVINGS BANK
occupies offices in the same building.

Officers—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, Vice-President.

Directors—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Berg-erot, E. J. DeSahla, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, J. J. Mack, Geo. Belaney, Leon Kaufman.

Our Branch Bank is Now Open
at No. 810 Van Ness Avenue, near Eddy St.

Mutual Savings Bank

710 Market St., Opposite Third
SAN FRANCISCO

Guaranteed Capital.....$ 1,000,000
Paid-up Capital.....300,000
Surplus.....320,000
Assets.....10,000,000

Interest paid on deposits.
Loans on approved securities.
Officers—President, James D. Phelan; First Vice-President, S. G. Murphy; Second Vice-President, John A. Hooper; Secretary and Cashier, Geo. A. Story; Asst. Secretary and Asst. Cashier, C. B. Hohson; Attorney, Frank J. Sullivan.
Directors—James D. Phelan, John A. Hooper, Frank J. Sullivan, Jas. M. McDonald, S. G. Murphy, James Moffitt, Rolt. McElroy, Charles Holbrook, Rudolph Spreckels.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$ 2,552,719.61
Paid-up Capital.....1,000,000.00
Deposits, June 30, 1906.....38,476,520.22

F. Tillmann, Jr., President; Daniel Meyer, First Vice-President; Emil Rohde, Second Vice-President; A. H. R. Schmidt, Cashier; Wm. Herrmann, Asst. Cashier; Geo. Tourney, Secretary; A. H. Muller, Asst. Secretary; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

Board of Directors:
F. Tillmann, Jr., Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, N. Ohlandt, J. W. Van Bergen, E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

STEAMER DAY YIELDS TO MODERN METHODS

Now that Steamer Day is abolished, it is no longer necessary to keep large sums of money on hand, tempting theft or burglary. The safer and more convenient method is to open a bank account and mail checks when accounts are due.

California Safe Deposit
and Trust Company

Pays Interest on Checking Accounts

and extends every courtesy to its depositors—large or small. You are invited to open an account at the Home Office or one of our branches.

HOME OFFICE

California and Montgomery Streets

West End Branch 1531 Divisadero
Uptown Branch 1850 Geary, near Fillmore
Mission Branch 927 Valencia

Helping the Homeless

The Continental Building and Loan Association

Has helped build up several interior towns and cities of California but for the next few years its funds will be used to help restore the burned homes of San Francisco

Dr. Washington Dodge, President
Gavin McNab, Attorney.
Wm. Corbin, Sec'y and Gen'l Mgr.

Office: Corner Market and Church Streets

Safe Deposit Vaults in a Safe Deposit Building

Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

These Safe Deposit Vaults have withstood the Greatest Test to which Safe Deposit Vaults have ever been subjected, and are in the same condition as on April 17, 1906—entirely unaffected by earthquake or fire—

The Strongest and Best Appointed Safe Deposit Vaults in the West

Special Attention to Overnight Storage of Ledgers

INSPECTION CORDIALLY INVITED

464 California Street

San Francisco, California

LITERARY NOTES.

The Foreign Relations of the United States.

The pleasing style with which the author is able to discuss abstruse questions, frequent illustrative anecdotes, and occasional personal reminiscences, make of John W. Foster's "The Practice of Diplomacy" a very readable and entertaining narrative. The book is designed as a companion volume and complement of "A Century of American Diplomacy," by the same author. Mr. Foster describes the method and duties of the diplomatic service, and records the achievements and mistakes of American diplomats abroad. As Mr. Foster points out, when the United States declared its independence and sought intercourse with foreign nations the standard of diplomacy was very low. Even in times of peace the service did not hesitate to make use of bribery, espionage, and deliberate conceit. That no self-respecting government today would countenance such practice in its foreign intercourse, is due in no small measure to the straightforward policy of the United States and its representatives. The author discusses the subject under the following chapter-headings: "Utility of the Diplomatic Service;" "Rank of Diplomatic Representatives;" "The Appointment of Diplomats;" "The Reception of Envoys;" "Duties of a Diplomat to his Own Government and to the Foreign Government;" "Court Dress, Decorations, and Presents;" "Immunities of Diplomats;" "The Termination of Missions;" "Other Diplomatic Officials;" "The Consular Service;" "Negotiation and Framing of Treaties;" "Ratification of Treaties;" "Interpretation of Treaties;" "Termination of Treaties;" "Compacts Other Than Treaties;" "Arbitration and Its Procedure;" "International Claims."

Mr. Foster is an authority on the subject he discusses in "The Practice of Diplomacy," having been United States Minister in Mexico, Russia, and Spain, and special plenipotentiary to several other nations.

Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

A Collection of Favorite Poems.

"Golden Poems," edited by Francis Fisher Browne, which has held its own among the collections of poems by English and American authors, for twenty-five years, has been entirely reprinted in an enlarged edition. The work has been brought down to date, and while few remarkable poets have appeared in the last quarter century, there have been a great number of individual poems of rare merit from unknown and little-known authors. Edwin Markham, Charles Warren Stoddard and Ina Coolbrith, are represented in the anthology, although Miss Coolbrith's "When the Grass Shall Cover Me" is indexed as anonymous.

On the whole, the editor has selected wisely and with good judgment, preferring short poems, and including, perhaps, more popular favorites than can be found elsewhere in a book of equal compass. Of course, no reader will find all his poetical favorites in the collection; opinions, as Mr. Browne observes, are almost as varied as the tastes of readers, and no poetry-lover will ever find his ideal anthology until he makes his own. The poems are classified conveniently and effectually according to subjects.

Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

The American Flag.

"The Stars and Stripes and Other American Flags," by Peleg D. Harrison, contains eight large plates of flags in colors. It discusses the origin and development of our national standard, beginning with the colonial and provincial flags, and coming down to the present banner. American army flags, colors, standards, and guidons, special flags, flag display regulations, salutes, flag legislation and the Confederate flags are all discussed. The book occupies an entirely new field, and fills it well.

Published by Little, Brown & Co.; $3.00 net.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Mark Twain's recent visit to Washington to do what he could to further the interests of the proposed new copyright law was a social and literary event that furnished the bright young men of the newspapers with much good "copy."

One of the numerous magazines which "features" the contributions of Wallace Irwin, says that he is the first poet who ever made an absolute living by writing verse. However, Scott, Byron, and Moore found the profession comparatively lucrative for a time.

Although 86 years old, Donald G. Mitchell, or "Ik Marvel," as he is best known, is hale and hearty and continues to enjoy life at Edgewood, on the outskirts of New Haven, which has been his home for nearly fifty years.

Among the men of high rank in literary expression who have celebrated their seventieth birthday anniversaries this year Giosue Carducci, the Italian poet, man of letters, professor, and senator, is not least. His countrymen have recently honored him as their most distinguished living author, and there is abundant recognition of his influence on Italian literature. His "Hymn to Satan," published in 1865, earned him the animosity of the Vatican, and he is still under the ban of the church. He received the Nobel prize this year.

A reporter of the London Chronicle recently called upon and interviewed Mrs. Mary Ann Cooper, now ninety-five years old, who was the original of "Little Dorrit." Mrs. Cooper lives in Islington, and is not neglected, as she was prevailed upon to open an entertainment and bazaar for charitable work a few days ago, and her portrait was sold at its counters.

ROBERTSON'S

NEW LOCATION

1539

Van Ness Ave., near Pine

"Next to the White House"

Mr. Robertson calls attention to the above address, which is very centrally located.

Dividend Notice

The Continental Building and Loan Association, corner of Market and Church sts., San Francisco, Cal., has declared for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1906, a dividend of 5 per cent per annum on ordinary deposits and 6 per cent per annum on term deposits—interest on deposits payable on and after Jan. 2, 1907. Interest on ordinary deposits not called for will be added to the principal and thereafter bear interest at the same rate.

WASHINGTON DODGE, President.

WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

GOVERNMENT, MUNICIPAL RAILROAD AND CORPORATION BONDS

E. H. Rollins & Sons

BANKERS

804 Kohl Building, San Francisco

Boston

Chicago

Denver

The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society

INCORPORATED APRIL 12, 1859

RE-INCORPORATED AUGUST 30, 1864

Office, Corner Market, McAllister and Jones Streets

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

DEPOSITS,

$53,621,017.86

The objects for which this Association is formed are, that by its operations the depositor thereof may be able to find a

Secure and Profitable Investment for Small Savings

And Borrowers may have an opportunity of obtaining from it the use of a moderate capital, on giving good and sufficient security for the use of the same

OFFICERS

President JAMES R. KELLY
Secretary and Treasurer R. M. TOBIN
Attorneys TOBIN & TOBIN

Any person can become a depositor of this Society on subscribing to the By-Laws

Deposits can be made from $1 up to $3,000. Loans made on Security of Real Estate within the City and County

Bank open Daily from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M. Sundays and Holidays excepted
Saturdays from 9 A. M. to 12 M.

LITERARY NOTES.

Familiar American Songs.

The history of the old familiar songs that have won a permanent place in the hearts of the people is told in "Famous American Songs," by Gustav Kobbe. Mr. Kobbe has collected every fugitive anecdote and scrap of interesting information about our most widely known melodies for his attractive little volume.

A singular characteristic of American popular songs is that most of them were written for the stage. "Home, Sweet Home" was first heard at the Covent Garden Theatre, London; "Old Folks at Home" was written for the Christy minstrels; "Dixie" was originally a "walk-around" for Dan Bryant's minstrel troupe. "Home, Sweet Home" was composed in Paris, first sung in London, and its homesick American author, John Howard Payne, a "homeless bard of home," died in Tunis. "The world has literally sung my song until every heart is familiar with its melody, yet I have been a wanderer since my boyhood," wrote Payne. Mr. Kobbe gives an interesting sketch of Stephen Collins Foster, whose simple yet tender and refined melodies will survive as the folk-songs of this country. Foster's "My Old Kentucky Home," "Massa's in de Cold Ground," "Old Folks at Home," "Old Black Joe," and other tuneful songs, will live as long as the nation itself. The curious story of Daniel Emmett's "Dixie" is given entertainingly. "Ben Bolt" was written fifty years before it received new life on the appearance of Du Maurier's "Tribby," but its composer, Thomas Dunn English, was then living. Like many another author, Dr. English resented the popularity of his early poem as compared with the reception accorded his mature writings. The author rounds out his useful volume by discussing our patriotic airs, and explodes many false ideas in his papers on "The Star Spangled Banner," "Yankee Doodle," "Hail Columbia," and "America."

The book is very handsome in its black-letter dress, and contains numerous illustrations, mostly from photographs.

Published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York; $1.50.

The Story of Charleston.

A history that is of interest and value to students of the annals of South Carolina is "Charleston, the Place and the People," by Mrs. St. Julien Ravenel. The book tells the story of old Charleston, from its beginnings to the fall of the Confederacy. The author has not attempted to write the continuous history of the city. She has chosen from the story of its two hundred and fifty years such events as seem to her to have had most to do in shaping the fortunes of the men who made the town, or best to illustrate the character of their children who have lived in it. Mrs. Ravenel has selected many romantic and picturesque episodes to illustrate life in the various periods of the city's interesting and, at times, exciting history. The Indian wars, the conquest of the pirates, the battle of Fort Moultrie, Washington and La Fayette, the execution of Colonel Hayne, social characteristics, and the Confederate Charleston are, among the topics discussed. There are numerous illustrations of famous buildings in the volume.

Published by The Macmillan Company, New York; $2.50 net.

Certain Delightful English Towns.

The title of the book, "Certain Delightful English Towns," its sub-title, "With Glimpses of the Pleasant Country Between," its author, William Dean Howells, its pictures, and its binding, give the prospective reader of this attractive travel-book a favorable first impression that the letter press fully sustains. To have so charming a guide as America's foremost man of letters is a privilege to be cherished, and when Mr. Howells is in so jovial a mood the opportunity is one not to be missed. The author did not visit too many cathedrals or museums, he seems not to have made his trip a literary pilgrimage, historical spots are not described with too great a parade of learning, and he does not attempt to tell us all there is to be seen. "There is so much to see in every English city, town, village, country neighborhood, road, and lane that I can always leave unseen far more than I saw." In fact, the book is a chronicle of a vacation tour, and Mr. Howells had a good time. And if it be not too flippant a criticism, George Ade, with the eminent author's distinguished style, might have written some of the sketches. Mr. Howells notes, as would have Mr. Ade, that the hotel office-ladies now wear "Mamie loops"; that the bronze lions on top of a monument looked dyspeptic for want of exercise; that there are always fresh eggs to be had, as if every hen knew that England expected her to do her duty. Mr. Howells writes of Exeter, Bath, Wells, Bristol, Folkestone, Canterbury, Oxford, Chester, and other interesting towns.

Published by Harper & Brothers, New York; $3 net.

Study of Balzac.

Ferdinand Brunetiere, late editor of the Revue des Deux Mondes, whose death several weeks ago deprived France of her greatest literary critic and essayist of the period, is the author of an exhaustive biographical and critical study of Honore de Balzac. Mr. Brunetiere does not record the title-tattle of the great novelist's love-affairs and financial difficulties, except when it assists in a better understanding of Balzac's work. While the critic places Balzac at the head of the realistic school of fiction, and believes that "The Human Comedy" is destined to last "as long as the French language, or perhaps longer," he points out freely the deficiencies and faults in his stories. Mr. Brunetiere is, however, impatient at the criticism that Balzac's novels are immoral. They are not intended, he says, "for little girls whose bread is cut in slices small" but they are simply truthful representations of the life of his time and are, properly speaking, neither "moral" nor "immoral."

The scope of the book is indicated in the following chapter-headings: The Modern Novel Before Balzac; Years of Apprenticeship; The Human Comedy; The Historical Significance of Balzac's Novels; The Esthetic Value of Balzac's Novels; The Social Bearing of the Novels; The Morality of the Novels; The Influence of Balzac; Balzac's Place in Literature.

Published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia; $1.50 net.

Paul Elder Publications.

Although the publishing house of Paul Elder & Company suffered severely in the April catastrophe their list of holiday books is attractive. "Ye Garveyne Boko" is a collection of quotations selected by Jennie Day Haines from the writings of garden-lovers of every race and age. ($1.50 net.) "The Princess of Manoa," by Mrs. Frank R. Day, is a handsome, illustrated volume of stories of old Hawaii. ($1.50 net.) "Mosaic Essays," compiled by Paul Elder, contains selections from many gentle philosophers. ($1.50 net.) "Philosophy of Ingersoll," edited by Vere Goldthwaite, is a compilation of Ingersoll's best and kindest thoughts. ($1.50 net.) "The Twins and the Whys," by Susan F. Thompson, is a fairy tale for young and old. (75 cents net.) "Spots," compiled by Clarice Town Courvoisier, is a collection of recipes for cleaning all sorts of articles. (75 cents net.) "Fear Not" contains quotations of courage, compiled by Delia J. Desel. (75 cents net.) "Sunday Symphonies" is made up of helpful quotations; compiled by Jennie Day Haines. (75 cents net.) "Wonders of the Deep" and "Book of Nature" by Johnny Jones, are two naive treatises, profusely illustrated. (25 cents net each.) Paul Elder & Co., New York and San Francisco.

"How" Books.

Those who "want to know" need not remain ignorant for lack of books that offer to instruct on every conceivable subject. Among the recent additions to "how" literature are the following: "How to Appreciate Music," by Gustav Kohbe, is for those who neither sing nor play, but who wish to understand the operas and concerts they attend. (Moffat, Yard & Co., New York. $1.50 net.) "How to Speak in Public," by Grenville Kleiser, is a suggestive self-instructor for budding orators. (The F. & Wagnalls Co., New York. $1.25 net.) "How to Make a Fruit Garden," by S. W. Fletcher, is a manual for the amateur farmer, who is so often an unwilling Burbank inasmuch as he never knows what strange plants will follow his sowing. (Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. $2.00 net.) "The Etiquette of New York City," by Mrs. Frank Learned, tells us how to behave ourselves in an up-to-date manner when we are "invited out." (The Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York. $1.25 net.) "Betterment," by E. Wake Cook, discusses questions as far removed as capital and labor, and what to eat. (The Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York. $1.20 net.)

New Publications.

Whittier's "Snow-Bound" has never lost its popularity with lovers of poems of nature, since its first appearance. A beautiful holiday edition of the Quaker poet's classic poem is illustrated with twenty full-page drawings by Howard Pyle, John J. Enneking and Edmund H. Garrett, and decorations by Adrian J. Lorio. A handsome binding adds to the attractiveness of the volume. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; $2.50 net.

W. B. Yeats has brought together in a new edition "all of my poetry I have any liking for." The first volume contains his "Lyrical Poems," which are marked by the strange beauty of the early Celtic bards. A second volume, containing Mr. Yeats's dramas in verse, is in preparation. The Macmillan Co., New York; $1.75 net.

John Janvier Black, M. D., author of "Eating to Live," says "the majority of human beings are much like sheep, as to eating and drinking." If they were, if one diet could be followed safely by every one, perhaps Dr. Black's advice on what to eat would be priceless. But so long as "one man's poison is another's meat," we must, sheeplike, trust largely to instinct and experience. The J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

A valuable reference book is "Panama: the Isthmus and Canal," by C. H. Forbes-Lindsay. It contains the history of the settlement of the Isthmus, the projects for canalizing, the development to the present scheme, and the establishment of the Panama Republic. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia; $1.00 net.

"Every Man a King," by Orison Swett Marden, editor of "Success," is made up of essays, on the power to be gained by mind-mastery, that will be helpful to the timid and the discouraged. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York, $1.00 net.

Pears'

Don't simply "get a cake of soap." Get good soap. Ask for Pears' and you have pure soap. Then bathing will mean more than mere cleanliness; it will be luxury at trifling cost.

Sales increasing since 1789.

PARTICULAR PEOPLE

USE GOOD

Stationery

EMBOSSED
LETTERHEADS FROM STEEL DIES

is one of our Specialties

WRITE FOR SAMPLES

Isaac Upham Co.

Stationers

Printers Bookbinders

17th and Folsom Sts.
and Pine and Front Sts.

SAN FRANCISCO

PRESIDIO TERRACE

the only residence park in San Francisco will soon be the center of the fine residence district—they're building now. It would take more space than this to give the REASONS WHY—send for the new illustrated folder.

BALDWIN & HOWELL

1692 FILLMORE STREET, NEAR POST

THE SUPREME COURT

Having by unanimous decision declared the
BURNT RECORDS ACT constitutional,

The Lawyers Title Company

Is prepared to restore your title and notify you of any adverse or encroaching suits that may be brought by others. Owners should register their properties with the Company at once.

DIRECTORS

FRANK P. DEERING
A. F. MORRISON
R. T. HARDING
CHARLES W. SLACK

J. C. MCKINSTRY
CHARLES P. ELLS
C. B. SESSIONS
J. W. LILIENTHAL

PETER F. DUNNE
CARTER P. POMEROY
E. S. HELLER
WILLIAM THOMAS

OFFICE, 1916 SUTTER STREET

TELEPHONE WEST 6373

PRINTING CARES of Business People taken care of by

SPAULDING-GRAUL COMPANY
Formerly GEO. SPAULDING & CO.

being a concern where the wants of those desiring Printing, Lithographing, Bookbinding, Designing, Engraving, Etc., are given prompt attention. Give us a trial.

914 Howard Street at Fifth
Phone Temp. 2351 San Francisco

STAGE GOSSIP.

Dramatic Notes.

Minnie Tittell Brune, formerly leading woman with Frederick Warde, and one of three sisters well known to Pacific Coast theatre-goers, is now in Australia, and meeting with excellent success in emotional roles.

"The Light Eternal," written by Martin V. Merle, a student at Santa Clara College, has won favorable notice in the East. The play was produced successfully at the Majestic Theatre in San Francisco and in other Coast cities, and was secured by the Shuberts, the New York managers, for a road company. Its continued success brought about its withdrawal for presentation in New York.

Clyde Fitch's new play for Blanch Walsh is entitled "The Straight Road," and it will be brought out at the Astor Theatre in New York during the holidays.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell has abandoned her idea of an American tour next spring.

Henry Miller is to be the manager of Daly's Theatre in New York next season, when it passes under the charge of the Shuberts.

Charles Klein's new play, "The Daughters of Men," is a popular success, though it may never equal "The Lion and the Mouse" in the regard of the public.

Mrs. Annie Adams, mother of Maude Adams, was engaged to be married to Senator Arthur Brown, who was killed in Washington by Mrs. Bradley.

M. Pierre Berton, the French author of "Zaza," has recently completed a new drama, entitled "Balthazar," which M. Antoine has accepted for the Odeon Theatre.

Clara Lipman is playing in London, where her comedy, "Julie Bonbon," was produced recently at the Waldorf Theatre.

Mme. Rejane's new theatre in Paris will have many novel arrangements, but especial attention is given by the press to plans for the founding of a school for young actresses which the actress-manager has decided upon. Costumes will be supplied to the pupils, a small salary will be given them from the beginning, and every encouragement will be shown to promising aspirants. Unknown authors too, are to receive consideration, if Mme. Rejane's ideas materialize.

The Sells-Floto circus is doing a large business in the City of Mexico. H. H. Tammen, one of the principal owners of the show, began his career with a small curio shop in Denver, and is now the owner of the Denver Post, and the possessor of great wealth.

Musical Notes.

Camille D'Arville, after an absence of three years from the stage, is appearing in the East in Stange and Edwards's musical play, "The Belle of London Town."

Bonci, the new tenor, established himself firmly in the good graces of New York opera lovers on his second appearance, when he was seen in "Rigoletto," and entirely at his ease. His singing of "La donna e mobile" was with exquisite effect.

Mme. Elza Szamosy, Miss Rena Vivienne, and Miss Florence Easton all sang the leading role in "Madame Butterfly" several times during its run of forty-one performances at the Garden Theatre in New York.

The autumn season of Italian opera at Covent Garden, London, presented "Madame Butterfly" ten times, "Carmen," nine; "La Boheme," seven; "Faust," six; "Aida," five; "Rigoletto" and "La Tosca," four; "Traviata" and "Fedora," three; "Adriana Lecouvreur," two.

Lina Cavalieri made her debut at the Metropolitan Opera House in Giordano's "Fedora," and was praised for her beauty and agreeable voice, but the opera, which follows the story of the play in which Bernhardt was so successful, is harshly criticised. It is said to have no musical number that calls for consideration, with the exception of the intermezzo in the second act and the introduction to the third act.

Charles Santley, the famous English tenor, will celebrate the fiftieth year of his career as a singer with a jubilee entertainment next May.

The engineer in the basement of the San Bernardino opera house resented the remarks of an Italian member of the Lambardi Opera Company and threw him out of the building. He did not understand Italian, and misunderstood the singer's object. It took all the diplomacy of two managers to suppress the disturbance threatened by sympathizing members of the company.

Carlo Righetti, better known under the pseudonym of Cletto Arrighi, an Italian dramatist, died recently in Milan. Though the author of many plays, twenty-eight of which have been produced, and two of which—"El Milanes in Mar," and "El Barchett de Boffalora"—were wonderfully successful, Righetti was very poor at the end, and might actually have starved if Signor Crispi had not given him a small government position.

A brilliant audience attended the first performance in Paris, November 10, of "Ariadne," the new opera which Massenet in his old age has written to a libretto by Catulle Mendes. President and Mme. Fallieres honored the occasion by their presence. In the third act Massenet has written the most dramatic musical outburst to be found in all his works—a love duet of sudden passion which carried the audience away.

When it is said that of the sixty-seven operas produced by Donizetti "Lucia" shows the most vitality, it certainly is a sad commentary on the musical structure of the other sixty-six, remarks an Eastern musical critic. Had Donizetti written one-fourth as many perhaps there might have been something of permanent musical work in his product. Let it be remembered that Wagner's fame rests on eleven operas and Beethoven and Schumann were content with one each.

The Orpheum.

The big vaudeville event of the year will be inaugurated at the Orpheum this Sunday afternoon when the Orpheum Road Show will make its annual appearance. It is bigger, brighter and better than ever. "Menetekel," an European illusion act, will be presented by Mr. and Mrs. Berel-Kenerah, Hungarian magicians. Ned Wayburn, renowned as producer of dancing propositions, sends out his "Rain Dears," headed by Neva Aymar. There are nine girls in the production and special scenery, costumes and music. Ed F. Reynard, ventriloquist, has a stage setting that is a gem in its way. Walter C. Kelly will present the funniest monologue known in vaudeville. Work and Ower, European acrobatic comedians, will present a tumbling act. Claude and Fannie Usher, new to this city, have a slang classic, "A Tough Love," one of the real gems of all the dramatic offerings. Wilson's monkey, "Jessie," promises a distinct surprise to the amusement-loving public. Orpheum Motion Pictures and John Hyams and Leila McIntyre, presenting "Two Hundred Wives," will complete the programme.

Melodrama for New Yorkers.

In the amusement advertising columns of the New York World for December 9 appeared the following announcement: "Mittenthal Brothers Amusement Co. offer 'A Millionaire's Revenge,' a play true to life, founded on the Madison Square Roof Garden tragedy of Harry K. Thaw, the young Pittsburg millionaire, and the celebrated architect. Stanford White. Synopsis of play: The Gay Studio. The girl model makes her appearance from a huge pie. A bacchanalian revel. Thaw's vow of vengeance. Kidnapping of a young girl in a real automobile. Exterior of Madison Square Garden. The Roof Garden. The Shooting—'The Wages of Sin is Death'. England. A Mother's Love. The Prison. The Line of Defense. Prison Corridor. Murderers' Row. 'A Mother's Faith.'"

The Opera Season.

Our music lovers, theatre-goers and patrons of opera are much interested in the engagement of the celebrated Lambardi Grand Opera Company, of Milan, Italy, under the direction of Impresario Marie Lambardi, which will begin an engagement at the Central Theatre, under the management of Messrs. Howell and Dodge, on Christmas night, December 25, with a superb production of Verdi's ever popular and spectacular work, "Aida," to be repeated Friday and Saturday nights and at the Sunday matinee. In the cast will be heard Esther Adaberto, a young dramatic soprano of brilliant timbre and artistic instincts.

On Wednesday night and at the Saturday matinee Donizetti's favorite opera "Lucia di Lammermoor," with its famous sextette and mad scene, will be offered. In this, Adelina Tromben, a light soprano, who comes here with an established reputation, made successfully at the old Tivoli, will be the unfortunate heroine. Gounod's greatest success, "Faust," will be sung on Thursday and Friday nights, with a new lyric soprano, Velia Giorgi, as Marguerite. Bianca Nunez, soprano; Matilda Campofiore, contralto; and Maria Millon, mezzo, will also be heard.

Among the tenors cast are Attilio Salveschi, Fillippe D'Ottavi, and Martinez Patti; the baritones will include Angelo Antola, Roberto Trisceni, and Adolpho Pacini; the basses are Olinto Lombardi, Ugo Cannetti, and Luigi Bergami. The large chorus and orchestra are under the direction of Chevalier Fulgencio Guerrieri, one of Italy's most noted leaders. The scenery, costumes and properties were all made in Milan for the present tour of Mexico and America.

During the second week "Rigoletto" will be heard on Monday and Thursday evenings and at the Saturday matinee; "Il Trovatore," on Wednesday, Saturday, and Sunday nights, and repetitions of "Faust," with special casts on Tuesday and Friday evenings, and at the Sunday matinee. A special New Year's matinee of a lighter opera will be given.

The sale of reserved seats is going on at the theatre box-office, and Kohler and Chase's. Prices have been placed within the reach of all; $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 75 cents, and 50 cents.

Black Bess, an Australian mare which had appeared over 3,000 times in the play of "Dick Turpin," died recently in London. Before she went on the stage she was a steeplechaser.

The Waldorf Hair Store

1528-1530 Bush St., near Van Ness

MISS D. HONIG, Prop.

The place to buy your Christmas and
New Year's
Presents

Imported French Novelties
Hair Goods, Perfumeries, etc.

BRANCH STORE, 3461 SACRAMENTO ST.

P. Centemeri & Co.

KID GLOVES

New Location

1551 Van Ness Ave.

Between Pine and California

San Francisco

AMUSEMENTS.

ORPHEUM

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee Dec. 23
Matinee Every Day Except Monday

Orpheum Road Show:

"MENETEKEL," "RAIN DEARS" and Neva Aymar; Ed F. Reynard; Walter C. Kelly; Work and Ower; Claude and Fannie Usher; Wilson's Monkey, "JESSIE;" Orpheum Motion Pictures and John Hyams and Leila McIntyre.

PRICES—10c, 25c, 50c. Down town Box Office at Donlon's Drug Store, Fillmore and Sutter Sts. Phone, West, 6,000.

CHUTES AND ZOO—Open daily from 10 a. m. till midnight. Admission 10c; Children 5c.

Central Theatre

Market and 8th Sts. Phone, Market 777

Howell & Dodge, Proprietors

Commencing Tuesday Eve (Christmas Night), Dec. 25

LAMBARDI Grand Italian Opera Company

REPERTOIRE—FIRST WEEK

Tuesday, Frid. and Sat. nights, Sund. mat. "AIDA" Wednesday night and Saturday matinee "LUCIA" Thursday and Sunday nights "FAUST"

SECOND WEEK

Mond. and Thurs. nights, Sat. mat. "RIGOLETTO" Wednesday, Sat. and Sund. nights "IL TROVATORE" Tuesday and Friday nights, Sund. mat. "FAUST"

Extra Matinee—New Year's Day.

PRICES—Season Subscription tickets, twelve $2. seats for $21., twelve $1.50 seats for $16., twelve $1. seats for $10. Single seats Prices—$2., $1.50, $1., 75c and 50c. Boxes, $21., per seat $3.50. Now on Sale.

RACING!

RACING!
NEW CALIFORNIA
JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND TRACK

Six or more Races each Week Day

RAIN OR SHINE

Races start at 1:40 P. M. sharp

For Special Trains stopping at the Track take the S. P. Ferry, foot of Market Street, leaves at 12, thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 p. m.

No smoking in last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.

Returning, trains leave the track after fifth and last races.

PERCY W. TREAT, Sec.

THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

BRACELETS

THERE IS NO LARGER NOR
FINER STOCK OF THIS

The Most Popular
Form of Jewelry

THAN THAT OFFERED BY

Bohm-Bristol Co.

SOUTH-WEST CORNER OF

Van Ness Ave. and Sacramento St.

A. Zellerbach & Sons
PAPER DEALERS

Now Located at

Volkman Bldg., 416 Jackson St., San Francisco

Branch: 514 Eleventh St., Oakland

FULL SUPPLY OF ALL KINDS OF PAPER

W. V. N. BAY

B. L. STONE

Stone & Bay Co.

1344 VAN NESS AVE.

Between Sutter and Bush

RUGS ORIENTAL ALL SIZES
DOMESTIC

Draperies, Lace Curtains, Portieres
Couch Covers

A VISIT WILL BE APPRECIATED

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

The engagement is announced of Miss Emily Marvin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Marvin, to Mr. Roy Somers. Their marriage will be celebrated early in the summer.

The engagement is announced of Miss Wanda Florence Hadenfeldt of Oakland, to Mr. Henry C. Melone, of Oak Knoll, Napa County. The wedding will take place in the spring.

The marriage of Miss Pearl Landers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Landers, to Mr. Vincent Whitney took place on Friday of last week at the home of the bride on Octavia street. The ceremony was performed at 9 o'clock by the Rev. Frederick Clampett of Trinity Church. There were no attendants of either bride or groom, and only the members of the two families were present. Mr. and Mrs. Whitney have gone on a short wedding journey and on their return will make their home in San Francisco.

The wedding of Miss Elizabeth Schenck, daughter of the late Colonel A. D. Schenck, U. S. A., to Captain Charles C. Smith, Twentieth Infantry, U. S. A., took place on Wednesday of last week at the home of the bride's brother-in-law and sister, Captain William C. Davis, U. S. A., and Mrs. Davis at the Presidio of San Francisco. The ceremony was performed at 8:30 o'clock by the Rev. Dr. Wood. Miss Edith Brown was the maid of honor, and Lieutenant John S. McCleery, U. S. A., was the best man. After their wedding journey Captain Smith and his bride will live at the Presidio of Monterey.

Announcements have been sent out by Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Platt of the marriage of their sister, Miss Lucy Burrow-Platt, to Mr. Frank V. Ferrers-Baker, on December 4, at their home 2000 Vallejo street.

Mr. Frederick William Zeile and Mrs. Ida May Humphrey were married on Saturday, December 15. Mr. and Mrs. Zeile expect soon to leave for a European trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sadoc Tobin will entertain at a dinner on New Year's eve, at the Burlingame Club.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Pope entertained at a dinner dance at their home at Burlingame on Thursday evening of last week. About one hundred guests were present.

Mrs. J. Downey Harvey entertained at a dinner recently at her home on Wehster street, in honor of Miss Jeannette von Schroeder. The other guests were Miss Anita Harvey, Miss Genevieve Harvey, Miss Jennie Crocker, Miss Katrina Page-Brown, Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Marie Brewer, Miss Constance de Young, Mr. Harry Stetson, Mr. Oscar Cooper, Mr. Stuart Lowery, Mr. Baldwin Wood, Mr. Allan Kittle, Mr. John Parrott and Mr. Harry Scott.

Miss Frances Howard was the hostess at the second Gaiety Club dance, which took place at the Palace Hotel on Tuesday of last week.

The first meeting of the Monday Evening Skating Club, organized by Mrs. Ynez Shorb White, took place on Monday evening last. The patronesses are Mrs. William M. Gwin, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Miss Carrie Gwin, Mrs. Wakefield Baker, Mrs. George H. Mendell, Jr., and Mrs. William B. Collier.

Mrs. Henry Clarence Breeden was the hostess at a bridge party on Friday afternoon of last week. Those present were Mrs. E. Walton Hedges, Mrs. L. L. Baker, Mrs. E. W. McKinstry, Mrs. Frank Anderson, Mrs. George Shreve, Mrs. de Young, Mrs. Ryland Wallace, Mrs. Harry Mendell, Mrs. George C. Boardman, Mrs. M. P. Jones, Mrs. Horace Davis, Mrs. Edward Dimond, Mrs. Alexander Garceau, Mrs. William Hitchcock, Mrs. Chauncey Humphrey, Mrs. Chauncey Rose Winslow, Mrs. Maurice Casey, Mrs. Gale, Mrs. E. B. Pond, Mrs. H. L. Dodge, Mrs. Lucy Otis, Mrs. Clark, Mrs. William Sherwood, Mrs. A. S. Baldwin, Mrs. C. O. G. Miller, Mrs. Edward Pond, Mrs. Warren Clark, Mrs. William Gwin, Mrs. Ira Pierce, and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller.

Mrs. Charles Farquharson entertained at a luncheon recently in honor of Mrs. Charles G. Lyman. Those present were Mrs. Leonard Chenery, Mrs. Daniel Drysdale, Mrs. Partridge, Mrs. Henry Clarence Breeden, Mrs. Edward Pond, Mrs. Ralph Warner Hart, and Miss Castle.

Miss Emily Marvin entertained at a luncheon on Friday of last week in honor of Miss Florida Hunt. Those present were Miss Hunt, Miss Ruth Casey, Mrs. Covington Pringle, Miss Helen Thomas, Miss Maud Payne, Miss Natalie Hunt, Miss Marion Marvin, and Miss Marie Brewer.

Miss Marie Withrow gave an informal musical at her home, Hill Crest, on Le Conte avenue, North Berkeley, on Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Olga Braslan of San Jose, Miss Estelle Mundell of San Francisco and Miss Lucie Taylor of Berkeley took part in the programme.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a resume of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians:

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Irwin and Miss Helene Irwin arrived last week from the East, where they have been staying since their return from Europe.

Madame la Comtesse Lelande, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Abby Parrott, at the latter's home in San Mateo since the summer, will leave early in January for her home in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Johnson left this week for the East, where they will spend the holiday season.

Mrs. Paolo de Vecchi and Miss Marguerite de Vecchi, who have been spending a few weeks in San Francisco, will leave in a few days for Baltimore, where they will join Dr. de Vecchi and his sons and will sail in January for Italy.

Miss Adeline Miles and Miss Josephine Polhemus were in Bombay, India, when last heard from.

Count and Countess Attilio Fabhri left a fortnight since for their new home in Pittsburgh.

Mr. William H. Crocker left on Saturday last for New York, where he will spend the holidays with Mrs. Crocker and their family, who have recently returned from Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield Baker have returned from a week's sojourn at the Hotel Potter in Santa Barbara.

Miss Maizie Langhorne and Miss Julia Langhorne have recently been the guests of Miss Louise Boyd at the home of the latter in San Rafael.

Mr. and Mrs. James V. Coleman have left this city for New York, where they expect to spend the winter at the St. Regis.

Mrs. A. J. Bryant has leased her apartment on Green street to Mr. and Mrs. Francis Heney, and will spend the winter at an uptown hotel. Miss Bryant is visiting friends in the city of Mexico.

Mrs. Charles G. Lyman arrived recently from Paris and is now in Berkeley, but will leave early in the new year for Europe again.

Mrs. C. O. Alexander, accompanied by Miss Marie Berger, left this week for the East, where they will spend the holidays, sailing from New York early in the new year for Naples. They will travel in Europe for several months, returning to San Francisco next summer.

Mr. Walter Dillingham, who has been spending several months here and in the East, sailed on Friday of last week for his home in Honolulu.

Mrs. Emma Butler has returned from Santa Barbara where she has been spending some months, and is at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Henry Clarence Breeden, on Broadway.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Deering have returned to town after a month's stay in Monterey, and have an apartment on Spruce street, for the winter.

Mr. D. Edward Collins, Mr. William Rutherford, and Mr. Wm. Millan, of Oakland, have been spending a few days at Del Monte.

Mrs. A. P. Niblack left last week for Santa Barbara.

Miss Ella Morgan has returned from an Eastern trip, and is at Del Monte with Mrs. Low and Miss Flora Low.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent P. Whitney (nee Landers), are spending a few weeks at Del Monte.

Mrs. J. Colquhoun and her son Mr. Clifton Colquhoun, of Tunbridge Wells, England, are now at Del Monte. Mr.

Colquhoun has extensive interests in Arizona copper mines.

The Children's Hospital.

The holiday season is again upon us and the needs of our children's hospital are as always on the minds of the Board of Managers. Our generous friends of the past are now so scattered that we know not how to reach them, and take this means to remind them of the little ones under our care. Donation days will be held on December 20, 21, and 22, at W. & J. Sloane & Co., corner Sutter and Van Ness avenue, where donations will be gratefully received.

Committee: Mrs. J. W. Walter, Chairman; Mrs. Willard B. Harrington, Mrs. Wendell Easton, Mrs. Henry E. Bothin, Mrs. C. E. Holmes, Mrs. M. F. McGuen, Mrs. M. H. de Young, Mrs. Walter B. Cope, Mrs. Silas Palmer, and Mrs. Jeanette E. Merritt.

We manufacture glasses on oculists' prescriptions.

We put brains into our work, honesty into our materials, and keep faith with our customers.

HIRSCH & KAISER,
1757 Fillmore Street

Opticians

HOTEL RAFAEL
SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

50 minutes from San Francisco. Complete Change of Climate
TIBURON OR SAUSALITO FERRY
All modern Conveniences

R. V. HALTON

Proprietor

Nordhoff
Grill

1545 Pine Street
Below Van Ness Ave.

Finest and Largest Dining Room in the City

Merchants' Lunch 11 A. M.
to 2 P. M. Daily

Ladies' Afternoon Teas
and Dinner Parties a Specialty

Germania National Bank
OF SAN FRANCISCO

Capital Paid Up . . $300,000

519 MARKET STREET, BET. FIRST AND SECOND
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

OFFICERS: W. A. Frederick, President; F. Kronenberg, Vice-President;
R. F. Crist, Vice-President; F. Kronenberg Jr., Cashier

Cable Address: Germania

DIRECTORS

W. A. Frederick
F. Kronenberg
R. F. Crist
Henry Brunner
F. C. Siebe

E. Leuenberger
F. A. Kuhls
John G. Rapp
Adolph Meyer
Joseph Schweitzer

O. A. Hale
W. M. Willett
Fred Woerner
Philipp Zimmermann
H. Fred Suhr, Jr.

Gamossi Glove Co.
101 Post Street
Destroyed by Fire
April 18, 1906

PRESENT LOCATION

OF THE

The Glove House
Cor. Market and
O'Farrell - Destroyed
by Fire, April 18, '06

Geo. A. Moss
Glove and Umbrella Co.

1520 Van Ness Avenue
Between Pine and California

The Umbrella House
12 Grant Ave., near
Market - Destroyed by Fire, April 18, 1906

OUR GLOVE ORDERS

Insure Recipient Good Merchandise

MOSS
1210 Market, above
Taylor - Destroyed by Fire, April 18, 1906

ROYAL Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A wholesome cream of tartar baking powder. Makes the finest, lightest, best flavored biscuit, hot-breads, cake and pastry.

Alum and alum-phosphate powders are injurious. Do not use them. Examine the label.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK

A Fine Line of
Holiday Perfumes and Toilet Articles

AT

Boericke & Runyon Co.

1554 Van Ness Ave.

PHARMACISTS

Near California Street

EDUCATIONAL

MISS HAMLIN'S
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Formerly at 1849 Jackson St., is now at 2230 Pacific Ave.
near Webster St. Mid-term begins October 15. Accredited.
Address
Miss S. D. Hamlin
2230 Pacific Avenue San Francisco

St. Matthew's Military School
Burlingame, California
Easter Term begins January 10, 1907
For illustrated catalogue address
REV. WILLIAM A. BREWER, Rector

IRVING INSTITUTE
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Accredited by the universities. Special advantages in music art, and elocution. Twenty-eighth year.
Miss PINKHAM and Miss MacLENNAN, Principals.
2126 California Street, San Francisco.
Easter Term opens Monday, January 7, 1907, 9 a. m.

Twin Oaks Camp School.
Outdoor life on a Ranch for boys under fifteen.
Each boy has a tent-house and saddle horse.
Best of references.
Address
Miss MARGARET MARSH-PARKER,
SAN MARCO, San Diego Co., California.

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL
Palo Alto, Cal. Home and Day School for Girls.
Intermediate and Primary Departments. Certificate admits to Stanford, Vassar and Wellesley. Number limited. Reopens August 20th.

MR. HUGO MANSFELDT
Announces his removal to 2090 Fell St., corner of Shrader. Telephone West 1736.

PORTLAND OREGON
St. Helen's Hall
A girl's school of the highest class. Corps of teachers, location, building, equipment—the best.
Send for catalogue.
School opens September 17, 1906.

Headquarters for Renting
Pianos. Little pianos for small rooms. Medium size pianos for average rooms.
Big pianos for big rooms.

YOU WILL SAVE MONEY
BY RENTING THEM FROM
Scott-Curtaz
560 Hayes Street

J. S. DINKELSPIEL
Importer of
Diamonds, Precious Stones
1021 Van Ness Ave.
San Francisco, Cal.
Fine Set Pieces a Specialty

The Little Palace Hotel
corner of
Post and Leavenworth Sts.
IS OPEN
The same excellence in cuisine and service that obtained in the Old Palace is duplicated in the new "Little Palace."
JOHN C. KIRKPATRICK
Manager

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy.

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Rear-Admiral Joseph Trille, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Trille will not return to the city this winter, but will remain at their cottage at Pacific Grove.

Lieutenant Commander Casey B. Morgan, U. S. N., has been detached from duty as inspector of equipment at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, and ordered to the navy yard, Mare Island, for duty in connection with fitting out the Milwaukee, and for duty as executive officer of that vessel when commissioned.

Lieutenant Commander A. S. Halstead, U. S. N., is ordered to additional duty as inspector of equipment at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco.

Major Charles G. Woodward, Artillery
Corps, U. S. A., Fort Rosecrans, San Diego, has been granted one month's leave of absence, which took effect on December 15.

Major Benjamin Pursell, U. S. A., recently promoted from captain, has been assigned to the Eighteenth Infantry,
U. S. A. Upon the expiration of his present leave of absence, Major Pursell is ordered to report at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, for observation and treatment.

Captain Wendell L. Simpson, quartermaster, U. S. A., is ordered to report in person to Lieutenant Colonel George S.
Young, Twenty-first Infantry, U. S. A., president of the examining board, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, for examination for promotion.

Captain Haldimand P. Young, quartermaster, U. S. A., is ordered to proceed from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to Fall River, Massachusetts, on official business pertaining to the manufacture of service hats. On the completion of this duty he will return to his proper station.

Captain Albert E. Truby, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., has returned to his station at the Presidio from duty in Cuba.

Captain Matthew C. Smith, Fourteenth
Cavalry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, is granted leave of absence for one month,
which took effect on December 12.

Lieutenant Earl P. Jessop, U. S. N., is detached from duty at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, and ordered to the navy yard, Mare Island, for duty in connection with fitting out the Milwaukee, and for duty on board that vessel, when placed in commission.

Lieutenant E. H. Campbell, U. S. N., is detached from duty at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, and ordered to the navy yard, Mare Island, for duty in connection with fitting out the Milwaukee and for duty on board that vessel when placed in commission.

Lieutenant Thomas D. Osborne, Artillery
Corps, U. S. A., has been granted leave of absence from December 21, to January 6.

Lieutenant E. E. Scranton, U. S. N., is ordered to the navy yard, Mare Island, for duty in connection with the crew of the Milwaukee and for duty on board that vessel when commissioned.

Lieutenant Oscar A. Russell, Twentieth
Infantry, U. S. A., Presidio of Monterey, is granted twenty-one days' leave of absence. He will return to his station in time for the examination in Military Hygiene on January 7.

Lieutenant Horace N. Munro, First
Cavalry, U. S. A., is relieved from treatment at the Army and Navy General Hospital, Hot Springs, Arkansas, and will proceed to join his proper station.

The leave of absence granted Lieutenant
Benjamin H. Pope, Eighth Infantry, U.
S. A., has been ordered extended six months.

Lieutenant Edmund L. Bull, Twenty-second Infantry, U. S. A., has had Indio, California, designated as his station after completion of the quadrangle on which he is engaged, while on duty in connection with the Progressive Military Map of the United States, in place of Ramona, California, as was formerly designated.

Ensign M. K. Metcalf, U. S. N., is detached from the Cincinnati and ordered to the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, for treatment.

Surgeon C. Biddle, U. S. N., is detached from the Charleston as fleet surgeon of the Pacific Squadron, and ordered to the Naval Training Station, San Francisco.

Past Assistant Surgeon W. B. Smith,
U. S. N., is detached from the Naval Training Station, San Francisco, and ordered to the Raleigh, sailing from San Francisco on January 5.

The leave of absence granted Contract Surgeon Leonard S. Hughes, U. S. A., has been extended two months.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Yeazell (formerly Miss Cornelia Campbell), are rejoicing in the advent of a daughter in their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pond are rejoicing in the recent advent of a daughter in their home.

Newman and Levinson.
VAN NESS AND SUTTER INCORPORATED

TO THE DILATORY SHOPPER

To the woman who has put off making her holiday purchases until the last moment:

To the man who has delayed selecting Yuletide gifts and remembrances until the very eve of Christmas:

TAKE NOTICE

No store in San Francisco can serve you as satisfactorily today as it could a week or a fortnight ago. Early shoppers have naturally secured first choice.

CONSEQUENTLY

Assortments are less varied. Stocks are more or less broken.

BUT A FEW SHOPPING HOURS REMAIN

And in that time you must make a necessarily hurried choice.

LET US HELP YOU

NEWMAN & LEVINSON can and will solve the "hasty purchase" difficulty for you.

BUY A
Merchandise Order

OR A GLOVE ORDER

Available AT ANY TIME
TO ANY AMOUNT IN ANY DEPARTMENT of the NEWMAN & LEVINSON store.

L. KREISS & SONS

CABINET MAKERS
UPHOLSTERERS
DECORATORS

Dealers in Fine Mahogany, Early English Oak Furniture; reproductions of rare examples of Antique Fabrics of all the important periods of English, French and Italian Arts in Tapestries, Brocaded Silks, Damasks, Embroideries, Etc.

Our stock is complete and contains many Odd Pieces suitable for Gifts.

1219-23 POST ST.
Above Van Ness Ave. San Francisco, Cal.

Dr. Deimel
(LINEN-MESH)
Underwear

A COMPLETE STOCK OF

Men's, Women's and Children's Underwear

at our Retail Store, 1107 Van Ness Ave., near Geary

CUSTOMERS' MEASUREMENTS PRESERVED
UNAPPROACHABLE HANDKERCHIEF VALUES
FREE BOOKLET

The Deimel Linen-Mesh Underwear Co.
San Francisco, Cal.

VANITY FAIR.

The prospect that Miss Angelica Gerry, the daughter of Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry, will open the handsome four-story brown stone house at 815 Fifth avenue, which her father has just given her, as an establishment all her own—a girl-bachelor residence—where she will entertain on her own account and arrange its furnishings after her own artistic bent, is being discussed by the members of her set.

The thought of young Miss Gerry in her bachelor establishment brings to the mind a number of women, very prominent in the society or in artistic circles, who have not waited for the ringing of wedding bells before owning and managing elaborate homes for themselves—not mere girl-bachelor apartments, but establishments in town and country, on a scale to require skill and attention in the management, says the New York Evening Journal.

One thinks of Miss May Van Alen, daughter of James A. Van Alen, and her Newport place, and Miss Helen Gould, with her large Irvington estate and her great Fifth avenue house; Norma Munro, with her handsome apartments; and of women artistically prominent there are little Maude Adams, with a town house, a country place on Long Island and a big farm in New Hampshire, all under her direction, and jolly May Irwin, who does her own marketing and bosses the plumber and the paperhanger and all that come her way, and again Elsie De Wolfe, and Elizabeth Marbury, the expert on plays and literature, in their quaint and beautiful Irving place home.

Miss Angelica Gerry is young, a famous whip and beautiful, but in spite of rumors that cropped up every month or two, naming the man who was to marry her, she has not married.

Miss Elsie De Wolfe and Elizabeth Marbury have an establishment that touches artistic perfection with its collections of miniatures and paintings, its exquisite draperies and delicately wrought furniture.

Likewise Miss Norma Munro eschews that fashionable society into which she was born, never goes to dances or receptions, but likes to entertain in her sumptuous apartments at 34 Central Park South companies picked with a view toward pleasing her moods and her literary inclinations.

"Think of what a society life means in actual toil, with nothing to gain worth while," Miss Munro has said. "When the season is on in New York what time has a society woman to think or do something for anybody but herself? There is a hurry from the time she arises in the morning until she retires the next morning. It is a rush for luncheon. Then a rush to a tea or two. Then a rush to dinner. Then a rush to the opera. Then a rush to some ball or dance or supper, and she finally goes to sleep somewhere in the early hours of the morning, still thinking of her plans for the next day. I prefer to have my own home, conducted independently of this thing called society."

A very simply furnished, very quiet little house has Miss Maude Adams at 22 East Forty-first street. Her effort is to make it noiseless, and the servants move silently and speak in whispers. Every article of furniture is one that has historical interest, and bits from the Orient and from Europe stand in rooms whose walls are almost all of a dark green. In the square center hall a Sedan chair serves as a telephone booth.

The London press is fearfully wrought up over the choice of a British Ambassador at Washington to succeed Sir Mortimer Durand, remarks the New York World. The affair seems to bristle with more difficulties than confront royal matchmakers who search Europe for a bride worthy of a prince of the blood.

The London Telegraph mourns because "the British Embassy at Washington has unquestionably lost the political and the social primacy which belonged to it in Lord Pauncefoot's day." The Outlook echoes its opinion. "What we required," it says, "when the retiring envoy was appointed and what we need now is a man as little like a professional diplomat as we can imagine and resembling as nearly as possible the type of representative America sends to us. James Russell Lowell, Mr. Choate, and Mr. Whitelaw Reid, to name no others, have been the most effective Ambassadors in the world because there has been no atmosphere of formalism or convention about them."

Nobody thinks of James Russell Lowell putting on flannels and playing tennis at Buckingham Palace or Windsor. Mr. Choate made charming speeches on all occasions, but we never heard of Mr. Choate leaping his horse over farmers' fences for his own pleasure or anybody else's companionship. It is a question whether Mr. Whitelaw Reid is an especially brilliant performer with the revolver or the singlestick.

But these are the athletic accomplishments which alone are supposed in London to have endeared the French and German Ambassadors at Washington and to have swayed the course of international relations from their old orbits.

M. Jusseraud makes judicious use of the tennis racket at the White House courts and the Anglo-American friendship suffers a slight refrigeration. He has the honor of having the title of one of his learned works mistranslated in a Presidential address and there is an imperceptible fall of cordiality toward England. Count Speck von Sternburg's horse balks at a gate which Mr. Roosevelt's clears easily, and a member of the House of Commons rises from his seat at Westminster to demand of the Foreign Secretary whether it is true that in case of war between Great Britain and Germany the German mercantile marine is assured the hospitality of the American flag.

The situation is growing desperate for Great Britain. The Hon. James M. Bryce, Secretary for Ireland, is mentioned for the Washington post. He has written a scholarly work on "The American Commonwealth," and climbed Mount Ararat, but who would think of slapping him on the back and calling him "Jim"? Lord Curzon married into an American family, but after years of Oriental pomp and grandeur he lacks the expansive style of after-dinner oratory. Lord Grey is needed in Canada. Lord Charles Beresford has just got to the top of the British navy. There is Lord Desborough, "Willie" Grenfell, "the strong man of Taplow"; why not try him? He is catalogued as a pronounced bimetalist and a tariff reformer, a writer, patron of all sorts of athletics, principally rowing, and a cricketer, cyclist, hunter of big game and fisherman. He has shot in India, Africa, and the Rockies, rowed across the English Channel, and swum the Niagara River, and as a host is voted the "best fellow in all England."

Some one has proposed John Burns, the labor member of the Cabinet, and a fair pedestrian. He might pass for a mild Populist in the United States. Keir Hardie is mentioned. He wears strange hats, has shoveled coal and is not favorable to injunctions against labor unions. Surely there is no shortage of good diplomatic material where such men abound. Why not leave the matter to Mr. Roosevelt, and let him designate his personal choice?

"The state banquets at St. George's Hall, at Windsor, offer one of the finest spectacles of modern days," says Lady Violet Greville. "The ample proportions of the handsome hall, the display of priceless gold plate, the show of flashing jewels, the gold-laced uniforms, the stars of orders, the drinking of toasts, the presence of ambassadors and crowned heads remind me of the mediæval ceremonies, so full of color, variety, grandeur and picturesqueness. They form what is really a spectacle, a sight of beauty and magnificence which in these prosaic days of ordinary dress and absence of etiquette is painfully absent from life."

The clawhammer, or evening coat, has many oddities of cut. These oddities were once essentials, says the Philadelphia

Bulletin. There was, in fact, a time when every idiosyncrasy of the clawhammer served some useful purpose.

The cutaway front of the coat, for instance, was originally cut away so that the wearer when on horseback would not be incommoded.

The two buttons at the back were for fastening up the tails out of harm's way, each tail having in the past a buttonhole at its end.

The sleeves, with their false cuffs, are relics of the days when sleeves were always turned back and therefore were always made with cuffs that unbuttoned.

The collar, with its wide notches, is a survival of the old collar that was notched in order that its wearer could turn it up conveniently in cold or stormy weather.

The dress coat, in a word, is a patchwork of relics, relics once essential, but now of no use on earth.

One often hears the wish that something corresponding to the French salons might be revived in society. As a matter of fact such a revival is scarcely imaginable, for the salon was the special product of the French temperament under peculiar circumstances. Even in France the gift of conversation passed away with the beginning of modern times. "No one," said

Madame de Stael, "who had not heard it before the Great Revolution could know what conversation really was." Some of the qualities that went to the making of these salons can be analyzed, and the subject may be found treated in an article by Mrs. Hylton Dale, in the Nineteenth Century. The guests in the first place were chiefly, in some cases exclusively, masculine. The hostess was the stimulant and medium for their wit, governing the conversation with a firm, but tactful rule. Literary merit all must have, or they were not admitted. This was the distinguishing feature of the salon.

The result of the last election in Alpine County for the Superior Court Judgeship resulted in a tie, both candidates receiving thirty-five votes. The Board of Supervisors thereupon called a special election, but were notified by the Attorney-General that only the Governor had power to take such action. It now seems that the Governor has no such authority except for elections where State officials and Congressmen are concerned, as no provision has been made for such a contingency as a tie in county office elections. The situation is unprecedented and the Governor is awaiting further advice from the Attorney-General.

W. & J. SLOANE & CO.

S

FURNITURE

Our Furniture display suggests innumerable useful and tasteful Christmas gifts, for instance: Rocking Chairs, Easy Chairs, Toilet Tables, Hall Clocks, Tea Tables, Music Cabinets, Cellarettes, Shaving Stands, Tabourettes, Magazine Stands, Piano Benches, Footstools, Book Racks, Bookcases, Costumers Work Tables, Ladies' Desks, Morris Chairs, etc. For reliable quality and exclusive styles, our prices are very reasonable.

S

Van Ness and Sutter

SIEVERS FLORAL CO.

1660 California Street, near Van Ness Ave.

Choicest Collection of Plants, Flowers and Holiday Baskets

PHONES: Franklin 1015
Franklin 1014

THE EMPORIUM

— SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. —

Headquarters for Toys and Holiday Goods

Useful articles are something which are appreciated by every one. Among some very acceptable gifts which are sometimes overlooked, we suggest books, they are always reminiscences of the giver. For the holidays we offer some exceptional values, quite interesting, and much wanted by all booklovers:

A Gift Book—Gray Mist

A story of Brittany by the author of the "Martyrdom of an Empress," extremely fascinating to the finish. $1.50

A Japanese Blossom

by Onoto Watana, with full page illustrations in colors, so interesting you can not lay it aside til finished, $2.00

The Christy Book.

The American Girl as seen and portrayed by Christy. In its class it is by far the most beautiful book ever published, and is the handsomest and most popular gift book of the season. Price $2.50

Send all your mail orders to THE EMPORIUM, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A fat gentleman, in walking along the street the other day bumped into a huckster and knocked a half-dozen turnips out of the man's hand. "Bad luck to him," said the huckster, scowling at the receding figure, "bad luck to him! And they want to say they've made balloons dirigible!"

The late John Stetson, famous in his day as a theatrical manager, was having a yacht built, and a friend, meeting him on the street, asked him what he was going to name the boat. "I haven't decided yet," replied John, "but it will be some name commencing with S, probably either 'Psyche' or 'Cinch'."

In a little village in New Jersey the schoolmistress saw one of the little boys crying. She called him to her and inquired the reason. "Some of the big boys made me kiss a little girl out in the school-yard," was the reply. "Why, that is outrageous. Why did you not come right to me?" "I-I didn't know that you would let me kiss you," he said.

A young bride, after serving to her husband a Thanksgiving dinner that was so-so, said, as the mince pie was brought on: "I intended, dear, to have some sponge cake, too, but it has been a total failure." "How was that?" the husband asked in a disappointed tone, for he was fond of sponge cake. "The druggist," she explained, "sent me the wrong kind of sponges."

John Bright was once asked how it was that Pitt made one of his finest speeches after drinking two bottles of port. John Bright was as usual equal to the occasion. He pointed out that verbatim reporting was unknown in those days and suggested that the other members of the house, on whose opinion Pitt's reputation largely depended, had probably drunk three bottles.

Walking about his estate Mr. Dives halted a laborer who was digging a drain, and solemnly inquired if he were ready to die. The man admitted that he hadn't thought of passing away, just yet. "But every time I breathe, a man dies," solemnly remarked the millionaire in tones of terrible warning. "Geel!" cried the unmoved laborer, "why don't you chew a few cloves?"

A yellow-haired descendant of the Vikings walked into the office of a prominent attorney the other day and said: "Ay want you to make some papers out. Ay buy a farm in Powell Valley, and ay tank ay want a mortgage." "Why do you want a mortgage," exclaimed the lawyer, "if you bought the farm? Don't you want a deed?" "No, ay tank not. Sax years ago ay buy a farm and getta deed and noder tellar come along with a mortgage and tak da farm. Ay tank ay tak a mortgage."

M. Deverne was waiting at a station in Ireland for his train. Two Irishmen entered and engaged in the following conversation: "Sure, Pat, it's down to Kilmory I've been, on me way back now to Kil-Patrick." "Arrah, musha, Mike, it's me-self that just after coming from being down to Kil-Kenney, stopped a bit before I go down to Kil-Moore." "I say, Pat, let us take the day and go down to Kil-Maule." "Ye gods," exclaimed the Frenchman, "what assassins. Would that I were back in France."

A man in Altoona, the owner of a very fine forty-horse-power Limousine motor car failed, and while his affairs were being settled up the car disappeared. As soon as everything had been adjusted, though, the car reappeared in the Altoona man's garage again. This angered one of the creditors and the first time he saw the bankrupt he took him bitterly to task. "A nice bankrupt," he said. "How does it happen, if you're a bankrupt, that you still have that automobile?" "Well, you see," said the other smiling, "I went through the bankruptcy court but the automobile went round."

"Give you the only room left in the house tonight," said Room Clerk Allen, as he dipped a pen and started to hand it to the new arrival (narrates the San Francisco Chronicle) "Where is it?" said the man from Modesto, "What floor's it on?" "Any floor you like: top, middle, or office." "Don't kid me, young fellow. I want to sleep on the top floor." "All right. Front! Boy, put a cot in the cage at midnight and tell Bennie to let the elevator remain at the top floor till morning."

A doctor saw Julia Marlowe as Juliet one night in Pittsburg, and was tremendously impressed. Only, in the powerful death scene there was a technical error. "Miss Marlowe," the doctor said at a reception the next day, "I admired your Juliet profoundly. The impersonation was a work of art. But—pardon me—don't you know that a corpse doesn't stiffen for at least six hours after death?" Miss Marlowe answered in the drawl that she reserves for such speeches: "Now, doctor, do you think I'm going to keep my audiences waiting six hours for me to stiffen?"

A New York lawyer was cross-questioning a negro witness in one of the justice courts, and was getting along fairly well until he asked the witness what his occupation was. "I'se a carpenter, sah." "What kind of a carpenter?" "They calls me a jackleg carpenter, sah." "What is a jackleg carpenter?" "He is a carpenter who is not a first-class carpenter, sah." "Well, explain fully what you understand a jackleg carpenter to be," insisted the lawyer. "Boss, I declare I dunno how to 'splain any mo' 'cept to say hit am jes' the same diffunce 'twixt you and er first-class lawyer."

The temperance reformer was justly proud of having converted the biggest drunkard in the little Scotch town, and induced him—he was the local gravedigger—to get up on the platform and testify. This is how he did it: "My friends," he said, "I never thoct to stand upon this platform with the provost on one side of me, and the toon clerk on th' ither side of me. I never thoct to tell ye that for a whole month I havena' touched a drap of anything. I've saved enough to buy me a brow oak coffin wi' brass handles and brass nails—and if I'm a teetotaler for anither month I shall be wantin' it!"

The English Winston Churchill spoke in London recently to a party of journalists, saying it was astonishing how keenly sensitive to newspaper criticism the ordinary person was, and quoted what he said was a letter received by an editor in the United States, as follows: "Dear Sir,—I regret to inform you that on my way home from the saloon this evening I fell into a political altercation with Colonel Jonas P. Walker, of this town, in the course of which a slight misunderstanding arose, and I am very sorry to think that in the end I shot him. I should add also that, carried away by the excitement of the moment, I also scalped him. But I earnestly hope that no exaggerated account of this painful episode will appear in the columns of your paper."

Specially adapted to Asthmatics; always relieves, generally cures. Brooks' Homoeopathic Cough Syrup; 25c, at druggists.

A. Hirschman
Jeweler and Silversmith. Now at 1641 Van Ness Avenue, bet. California and Sacramento Streets.

Not all the wit of all editors is to be found in their own columns: "Is it necessary to enclose stamps?" queried a budding bard. "More necessary than to enclose poetry," answered a voice from the editorial chair.

Korn The Hatter
Now at 926 Van Ness Avenue Near Ellis Street

Dr. J. J. Henderson
Specialist for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat. 1434 Post St., near Octavia.

William A. Magee Thomas Magee Frederic E. Magee

Thomas Magee & Sons

Real Estate Agents
5 Montgomery Street
San Francisco

SOME OF THE GLORY OF THE GOLDEN WEST is due to the cleansing qualities of 20 Mule Team Borax and Borax Soap Compounds

Borax is the world's greatest cleanser and most harmless anti-septic. It is the housewife's most potent aid in the

KITCHEN, LAUNDRY, AND TOILET

Cleanses thoroughly without injuring the most delicate fabrics and leaves the hands soft and white

Send for free sample and beautifully illustrated booklet, to

PACIFIC COAST BORAX COMPANY
ALBANY BLOCK, OAKLAND, CAL.

Golden State Limited

between

CALIFORNIA—CHICAGO
DAILY

LEAVE SAN FRANCISCO - - - - - 5:00 P. M.
ARRIVE CHICAGO - - - - - 10:15 P. M.

ELECTRIC LIGHTED
OBSERVATION PARLOR CAR
BEST OF DINING SERVICE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

Ready for business at 1165 O'FARRELL ST., bet. Franklin and Gough
Pianos Tuned, Repaired, Moved and Stored SOHMER-CECILIAN PLAYER-PIANOS

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"Is Maude taking a day off to celebrate her birthday?" "No; she's taking a year off."—Boston Transcript.

"How many children have you?" "Two living and one writing jokes for a daily paper."—Cleveland Leader.

"You surely don't meet them socially." "Oh, no; only to have a good time, you know."—Los Angeles News.

Redd—I see they have a new dance, called the automobile dance. Greene—Is it a breakdown?—Yonkers Statesman.

"That handsome Jack Savage kissed me last night." "I thought he would. He told me he felt awfully sorry for you."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Did you say your new doctor's name was Steed?" "Yes; Doctor Steed." "My! I'd be afraid to engage him; sounds as if he were a great charger."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"What are you taking for your cold?" "Nothing." "Nothing?" "But my dear fellow—" "Nothing, I say, not even advice. Fine day, isn't it?"—Cleveland Leader.

Upson—Do you get that "run-down feeling" every spring? Downs—Every spring! Why, I've been bit by an auto once a week for the last two months!—Detroit Free Press.

He (excitedly)—I tell you the handsome dress that millionaire's wife is wearing was paid for by blood money. She (calmly)—Ah! That accounts for the gore in the skirt. —Baltimore American.

"I understand that he is a confirmed Bibliophile," said the Boston maid. "Well, he may have been," replied her Chicago cousin, "but be's on the water wagon now."—Columbus Dispatch.

First Millionaire—Hard lines these days. Second Millionaire—Yes; our relatives are waiting for us to die to get our money, and the rest of the world doesn't want to wait that long.—New York Sun.

Mr. Jawback (savagely)—I wish you were somewhere I'd never be able to see you again. Mrs. Jawback (sweetly)—Well, at any rate, it's nice of you to wish me in heaven.—Cleveland Leader.

Jack—Some of the greatest bachelors of the age tell us that marriage is a flat failure. Eva (evasively)—Well—er—all married couples don't have to live in flats. Some can live in cottages.—Illustrated Bits.

She—Did you ever see the Homer twins? He—Yes. She—Don't you think the boy is the picture of his father? He—Yes—and I also think the girl is the phonograph of her mother.—Chicago News.

Nervous Porter (in a single breath, to hotel doorkeeper).—I s'pose yer don't 'appen ter know nobody wot ain't stoppin' 'ere wot ain't sent for no one not to move no luggage nor nothink, do yer?—Sketch.

"Your cheek is so nice and smooth—it doesn't scratch a bit," the fair maid whispered, nestling closer. "Er—yes, of course," he said, a look of cold suspicion dawning in his eyes.—American Spectator.

Hubby—My pet, you will pardon me, but aren't these griddle cakes a little burnt? W'ife (almost in tears)—O, Tom! And I tried to make them so pretty for you with that pyrograph set you gave me.—Boston Transcript.

"What, fishing on the Sabbath?" exclaimed the clergyman, reprovingly. "Don't you know that little boys who fish on the Sabbath go to the bad place?" "Huh, I guess dat's right," replied the bad boy, disgustedly. "I couldn't a struck no worse place dan dis."—Philadelphia Press.

"There is no sport in a cumbersome machine," he bantered. "Give me the blooded horse. Why, with a horse I can take the fence every time." The motorist laughed. "Take the fence, eh? Why, that is nothing. With an automobile you can take the fence, the gate, the tree, the pump, and the barn all in two or three seconds."—Chicago Daily News.

"I sent you the plans for the porte cochere and grand entrance," began the architect who was building Nuritch's palatial mansion. "Yes," interrupted Nuritch, "and what do you mean by puttin' 'Salve' over the door? Don't you try to run in no patent medicine ads on me!"—Philadelphia Press.

"Maria," said Mr. Quigley, entering his bome in some excitement, "I want you to promise me not to look at the papers for the next three months!" "What for?" wonderingly asked Mrs. Quigley. "I have just been nominated for a public office," he faltered, "and I don't want you to find out what kind of a man I really am."—Chicago Tribune.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

Additions to America.

We love thy ponds and "cricks,"
We love thy politics,
Thy Standard Oil,
Thy southern lynching belts,
Thy Germans and thy Celts;
Thy Teddy Roosevelts,
Oh, native soil!

—Cleveland Leader.

The Fall Books.

The fall books—the fall books—
Genius in a blaze!
Ten thousand pilgrims crowding
The lit-er-a-ry ways.

Comedy and tragedy—
Trouble by the yard;
The fall books—the fall books
Hope they won't fall hard!

—F. L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

Just for Rest.

Men of science, you that dare
Beard the microbe in his lair,
Tracking through the jungly thickness
Africa's germ of Sleeping Sickness,
Hear, oh hear, my parting plea,
Send a microbe home to me!

—The Crackling of Thorns.

MOTHERS BE SURE AND USE "MRS. WINSLOW'S Soothing Syrup" for your children while teething.

The Reverend Charles L. Miel, who has just returned from Goldfield and Tonopah reports that an epidemic of pneumonia prevails in both towns and that many deaths have occurred. He declares that the facts are not reported by the papers there.

Any remedy that will relieve a teething baby or a feverish child is invaluable. Steedman's Soothing Powders have done this for fifty years.

Hewitt—"Now, as a general rule, women—" Jewett—"My dear boy, there is no general rule for women."—Town and Country.

NEXT SUNDAY GO TO BYRON HOT SPRINGS.—You can leave Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, returning Sunday afternoon or Monday morning. Two days at the Springs, and the entire expense of the trip is $7.50. This includes the railway fare, transportation from railway station to hotel and return, a delightful ride of two and a half miles, accommodations at the beautiful Byron Hot Springs Hotel, and use of the wonderful mineral baths, all for $7.50. Try it.

Goodyear Rubber Company

Have Returned to Their Old Home, Where They Were Located Before the Fire, 573-579 Market St., near Second
Tel. Temporary 1788

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors
Supply-houses, Business Men
and Corporations.

Allen's Press Clipping Bureau
Kohl Building

THE LATEST STYLES IN

Choice Woolens

H. S. Bridge & Co.

Merchant Tailors

1176 O'Farrell Street

OUR STANDARDS

Sperry's Best Family.
Drifted Snow.
Golden Gate Extra.

Sperry Flour Company

MAIN OFFICE: 133 SPEAR ST.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Co.

OF HARTFORD
ESTABLISHED 1850

Cash Capital $1,000,000.00
Cash Assets 5,340,136.94
Surplus to Policy-Holders 2,414,921.16

Benjamin J. Smith
Manager Pacific Department:
525 THIRTEENTH ST., OAKLAND
San Francisco Office:
2310 CALIFORNIA STREET

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

Have Plenty of Every Kind of

PAPER

Phone Temporary 1273

473 TO 475 SIXTH STREET
San Francisco

For YOUR

BREAKFAST

GERMEA

At All Grocers

The Johnson-Locke Mercantile Co.

AGENTS

714 Broadway, Oakland

Mt. Tamalpais Railway

Via Sausalito Ferry—Foot of Market St.

Lv. San Francisco	Sun.	Leave Tamalpais	Sun.
W'kday	8:25 A	W'kday	10:40 A
9:50 A	9:50 A	1:05 P	1:05 P
1:45 P	11:00 A	2:30 P	2:30 P
1:45 P	1:45 P	4:30 P	4:30 P
Saturday	4:35 P	5:45 P	5:45 P
3:15 P		9:30 P

Legal Holidays, Sunday Time

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Thos. Cook & Son

Now Located

1168 Broadway, Oakland
And North Nave, Ferry Building
San Francisco

Steamship Lines

AMERICAN LINE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—SOUTHAMPTON
Philadelphia.....Dec. 29 | New York.....Jan. 12
St. Paul.....Jan. 5 | St. Louis.....Jan. 19

Philadelphia—Queenstown—Liverpool
Haverford.....Dec. 29 | Merion.....Jan. 19
Noordland.....Jan. 5 | Haverford.....Feb. 2

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT LINE

NEW YORK—LONDON DIRECT

Minnehaha.....Dec. 29 | Minnetonka.....Jan. 12
Mesaba.....Jan. 5 | Minneapolis.....Jan. 26

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE

NEW YORK—ROTTERDAM, VIA BOULOGNE
Sailings Wednesdays as per sailing list.

Potsdam.....Jan. 2, 6 a m | Statendam Feb. 20, 10 a m
Ryndam.....Jan. 23, noon | Ryndam, Feb. 27, 5 a m
Potsdam, Feb. 6, 10 a m | Noordam, Mar. 6, 10 a m

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP—PARIS

Zeeland.....Dec. 26 | Vaderland.....Jan. 9
Kronland.....Jan. 2 | Finland.....Jan. 16

WHITE STAR LINE

NEW YORK—QUEENSTOWN—LIVERPOOL.

Majestic.....Dec. 26 | Majestic.....Jan. 23
Oceanic.....Jan. 2 | Teutonic.....Feb. 6
Teutonic.....Jan. 9 | Baltic.....Feb. 13

Boston—Queenstown—Liverpool.

Cymric.....Jan. 19, Feb. 23, Mar. 30

To the Mediterranean and Egypt, via Azores

FROM NEW YORK

Cedric.....Jan. 5, 9:30 a m, Feb. 16 | 21,000 Tons
Celtic.....Jan. 19, 9:30 a m, March 2 | 21,000 Tons
Celtic.....Mar. 30, noon, May 9, June 20

FROM BOSTON

Canopic.....Jan. 12, 8:30 a m, Feb. 23
Republic.....Feb. 2, 1 p m, March 16

G. U. KOEPEL, Pass. Agt. Pacific Coast.

Room 207 Monadnock Bldg., San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

ORIENTAL S. S. Co. have opened their general offices at 217-221 Brannan Street
SAN FRANCISCO

S. S. Nippon Maru (Calls at Manila) Dec. 28, 1906
S. S. Hong Kong Maru (Calls at Manila) Jan. 24, 1907
S. S. America Maru - - - - - Feb. 13, 1907

Steamers will leave wharf, corner First and Brannan streets 1 p. m., for Yokohama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kobe (Higo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, corner First and Brannan Sts. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

For Christmas Cheer

La Questa

A LUSCIOUS OLD RED WINE

L. M. WALTER Corner California and Devisadero Sts.

and
McCAW BROS. - - - - - 401 Devisadero

Producer:

E. H. Rixford
Kohl Building, San Francisco

REMOVAL NOTICE

JOHN G. ILS & CO.

Beg to announce their removal to their permanent store

827-829 MISSION STREET

Between Fourth and Fifth Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

OUR SPECIALTIES:

HIGH GRADE FRENCH RANGES AND BROILERS

BAKERY AND KITCHEN SUPPLIES

The Argonaut.

Vol. LIX. No. 1555.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 29, 1906.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHERS' NOTICE.—The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $4.00 per year; six months, $2.10; three months, $1.10; payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscription to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $5.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 1711 San Pablo Avenue, Oakland. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers.

Address all communications intended for the Editorial Department thus: "Jerome A. Hart, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal." To insure consideration, manuscript submitted for publication, must be typewritten.

Address all communications intended for the Business Department thus: "The Argonaut Publishing Company, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, Cal."

Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., 5 Breems Buildings, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, 31 Union Square. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at 1015 Pennsylvania Avenue.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & O'Rear, and by the Denison News Company on its boats and trains.

Published at San Francisco, California. Temporary Office, 25 Brown Avenue, San Jose, California.

THIRTIETH YEAR

ENTERED AT THE SAN FRANCISCO POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

JEROME A. HART - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL: France and the Vatican—The Ananias Club—Publishers, Prunes, Raisins, Tariffs, and Linotypes—The Roosevelt-Storer Correspondence—Graduating Japanese in San Francisco—Government by Cabinet Amendment.....	337-359
JAPAN'S SOCIAL EVIL: The Yoshiwara, or Pleasure City of Tokyo.....	340
OPINIONS ON THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.....	340
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....	341
OLD FAVORITES: "The Death of the Old Year," "Ring Out the Old," by Alfred Tennyson.....	341
POLITICO-PERSONAL.....	341
"THE COLLAR AND ELBOW": A Wrestling Match in the Mines on New Year's Day.....	342
THE RING OF A COUNTESS: "St. Martin" Writes of the Paris Climax of a Britanny Sensation.....	343
CURRENT VERSE: "The Vampire City," by Reginald Wright Kauffman; "On an Old Russian Candle-Stick," by Margaret Ashmun.....	343
A CELTIC-GREEK POET: The Life and Letters of Lafcadio Hearn.....	344
INDIVIDUALITIES.....	345
LITERARY NOTES: New Publications—Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.....	346-347
STAGE GOSSIP: Dramatic Notes—Musical Notes.....	347
VANITY FAIR: A German Plan to Discourage Extravagance—Artistic Decorations at Rostand's Country Seat—How the Kaiser Learned of a Royal Birth—Ethics of Profanity.....	348
STORYTTES: The Caddy Knew—Why He Could Not Sleep—Von Buelow's March—A Chicago Lawyer—He Was the Butler—"Taps"—A Reporter Absolved—Fuel and Pure Water—A Choate Reply.....	349
PERSONAL: Notes and Gossip—Movements and Whereabouts—Army and Navy.....	350-351
THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.....	352
THE TUNEFUL LIAR.....	352

France and the Vatican.

Several readers have requested us to state briefly the questions at issue between France and the Vatican. Although the situation is very complicated, and much clouded by disputes as to the exact issues, this is a fair statement in brief according to our understanding.

Napoleon in 1801, as First Consul of France, made a contract with the Vatican called the Concordat. Prior to that time, after the fall of the Monarchy, the French Revolutionary Government had practically overthrown all public religious observances. By the Concordat it was provided that France should officially recognize the Roman Catholic Church; that the Government of France should select all Roman Catholic bishops in France; that these selections should be subject to the approval of the Vatican. And here is one of the disputed points—whether the Vatican had a veto or whether lack of approval meant a veto. The Concordat also provided that the governmentally selected bishops should appoint the lesser clergy, and that the State should pay the salary of the archbishops, bishops, and lesser clergy. Thus the Roman Catholic Church in France became practically a part of the State. Its prelates and ministers were appointed by the State and were paid by the State. The State also paid out the people's money to the Protestant and Jewish congregations, but naturally, a much smaller amount than the scores of millions paid out to the Roman Catholic clergy.

For more than a hundred years the Vatican has chafed under the Concordat, and there have been perpetual complaints from the Pope over the unfairness of that document. The Republican government therefore determined to begin the separation of Church and State by ostensibly acceding to the complaints of the Vatican. There were many Roman Catholic schools throughout France which were conducted by religious orders, were not supported by the State, and not under Vatican or diocesan rule. As they were outside of the Concordat, they did not come under the protection of that document. In 1901 the Waldeck-Rousseau government passed the "Associations bill," directing all these religious corporations to file lists of their members, pupils, financial conditions, etc., whereupon licenses would be issued to them, legalizing their existence. As these religious corporations had no standing under the Concordat, and were only indirectly under Vatican control, there was no legal impediment to this action. The French government allowed it to be understood that the cause for its action was the inculcation of ideas hostile to Republican government in these religious schools.

The religious corporations very generally refused to comply with the law. Out of 17,000 monastic or religious organizations nearly 8,000 were dissolved because they defied the law. Many of them established their schools in the United States and other countries.

An incident which seems to Americans a trifle greatly envenomed the dispute between the French government and the Vatican. President Loubet while in Rome visited the King of Italy and did not visit the Pope. The reason is plain. The Vatican holds that the Italian government is a usurping one, and that the Roman States belong to the Pope as their temporal sovereign. If President Loubet had visited the Vatican the Pope would have insisted on being treated as reigning as sovereign of the Roman States; this would have implied that President Loubet believed the King of Italy to be a usurper. France and Italy are friendly. Hence President Loubet wisely did not call at the Vatican.

The final step in the separation of Church and State began about a year ago, when the Chamber of Deputies by a two-thirds majority formally adopted the bill separating the Church from the State. This bill provides that the State does not recognize, salary, or subsidize any particular form of worship; that where church property was originally purchased with money raised by individuals or congregations, religious associations should be formed, in which such property should vest. In the United States title to such property is vested in the bishops. Concerning church property purchased originally by or originally belonging to the State, the bill provides that each such piece of property shall vest in the State, and that the State shall loan it to a religious association made up of its congregation for the purpose of holding religious services; that instead of paying regular salaries from the State to the clergymen, pensions shall be paid by the State to the older clergymen only.

All of the foregoing seems to Americans simple and just. We in this country believe that Church and State should be separate. That belief is strong also in Great Britain and Ireland, as the disestablishment of the Irish Church and of the Anglican Church have been burning questions for many years. It is probable that within twenty years there will be no established church in the British Empire. Even Spain has recently shown signs of cutting loose from the Vatican in the matter of the regulations concerning marriage; this is the first step toward disestablishment. Why then there should be such excitement among Roman Catholics throughout the world over this domestic concern of France, it is difficult to understand. If the French government is confirming the title of certain Roman Catholic congregations in France to the property which originally belonged to them, and if it is causing to revert to itself property which originally belonged to it, where is the harm? The Roman Catholic Church in France, as a corporation holding property, is one thing. The Vatican in Italy, as a corporation holding property, is another. Spiritually, the Church in France and Italy may be the same thing. As a property owner, tax-payer, and citizen, it can not be. This view must appeal to every Roman Catholic in the United States, where the Church has thrived wonderfully with a complete disassociation from the State. Do American Roman Catholics, for example, believe that Pope Pius X owns the Cathedral of Notre Dame on the island in the Seine, where it has been the property of the French government since Louis VII laid the first stone in 1163? And if so, does Pope Pius X own St. Patrick's Cathedral on 49th street and Fifth avenue, New York City? And if so, does he own St. Mary's Cathedral in San Francisco?

The Ananias Club.

Under the heading "The Presidential Liars' Gallery" the New York World has compiled a roster of gentlemen who have been unfortunate enough to disagree with Mr. Roosevelt. Other papers call it "The Roosevelt Ananias Club." Mr. Bellamy Storer, who has just been elected a member by unanimous vote of the club, says plaintively: "The past has shown that few men can differ with either the wishes or the memory of the President without at once becoming a scoundrel and a liar."

The World begins its roster of the Ananias Club with Mr. Bellamy Storer's name, followed by the President's letter of December 2, 1906, in which he said of Mr. Storer's statement: "The assertion that I took an opposite position is not only an untruth, but an absolute untruth."

In the Presidential campaign of 1904, Judge Alton B. Parker charged that corporations were induced to contribute to the Republican campaign fund by National Chairman George B. Cortelyou because he had official knowledge of their affairs. On November 4, 1904, the President issued a signed statement in which he said: "Mr. Parker's accusations against Mr. Cortelyou and me are monstrous. The assertion * * * is a falsehood. The statements are unqualifiedly and atrociously false." Judge Parker has since pointed to the fact that Mr. Cortelyou received $148,000 from the Equitable, Mutual Life, and New York Life Insurance Companies as proof that what he said was true.

In the controversy over the Railroad Rate bill, last May, ex-Senator Chandler said that he had received verbal instructions from the President to open negotiations with certain Democratic Senators for the support of that bill. To this President Roosevelt replied through Senator Lodge: "The statement of Mr. Chandler was a deliberate and unqualified falsehood."

Henry M. Whitney of Boston, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts in 1905, quoted what purported to be statements made in a conversation with the President on the subject of reciprocity. Mr. Roosevelt, in a speech to a Massachusetts delegation, said of Mr. Whitney: "Not only did he misquote the words I used, but he absolutely * * * and deliberately misrepresented what had occurred."

When removing Herbert W. Bowen, Minister to Venezuela, President Roosevelt wrote to Secretary Taft on June 6, 1905, saying: "Mr. Bowen's statement is shown to be absolutely untrue."

G. O. Shields, president of the League of American Sportsmen, said that the President favored a bill to prohibit the use of automatic shot-guns in the Territories. To this the President replied, February 19, 1906: "You used language which was in no sense accurate. Not one single sentence you quoted as I said it. Some of the sentences are sheer inventions; others are inventions in part."

When Chief Engineer John F. Wallace of the Panama Canal resigned, Secretary Taft, speaking of some of Mr. Wallace's statements, quoted the President thus: "These statements are utterly untrue."

The industrious World, which has dug up these facts, thinks the Ananias Club is only in its infancy. Mr. Storer, therefore, instead of finding himself alone in his misery, will discover that he has joined a large and growing club.

The Albany Argus has also been resurrecting the facts, but it classifies them differently. It says that, as classified by the President, Judge Parker was an "atrocious" liar; Mr. Whitney a "deliberate" liar; Mr. Chandler a "deliberate and unqualified" liar; Mr. Bowen a "disingenuous" liar; Mr. Wallace an "utter" liar; Mr. Shields an "inventive" liar, and Mr. Storer a "peculiarly perfidious liar."

Publishers, Prunes, Raisins, Tariffs, and Linotypes.

Some weeks ago we were surprised to see in the San Francisco Chronicle an article stating that the Mergenthaler Linotype Company of New York, through its Paris office, was offering its latest models of linotype machines to French publishers at tremendous discounts—from thirty to sixty per cent below the prices charged to American publishers in the United States. The Chronicle article urged American publishers to purchase these American-made machines through French publishers, and then reimport them to the United States; as returned American manufactures are not subject to duty, the American publishers would thus save a large amount of money. This disclosure surprised us beyond measure. The Argonaut is a protection paper, but its protective enthusiasm is not to be compared with the Dingley delirium which devastates the Chronicle. The Argonaut believes in that protection which protects the American producer. The Chronicle believes in that protection which skins the American consumer alive.

Our esteemed contemporary goes so far that hitherto it has defended even the curious tariff evolution known as "dumping." This, be it understood, means that when a tariff-protected trust in the United States has sold all of its protected product that it can at twenty dollars a ton at home, it sells the rest of it at fifteen dollars a ton abroad. This is an awful hard thing to explain—why the American consumer should pay five dollars a ton more than foreigners for an American-made product in order to "protect" a millionaire trust. But so it is. The Chronicle has frequently attempted to explain satisfactorily this anomalous and unsatisfactory working of the tariff. Yet one rises from its reading with merely a confused sense of words, words, words.

But it is only embalmed beef, steel rails, desiccated hams, and concentrated sausages that cause the Chronicle to rise in wrath in defense of the tariff. The Chronicle, as such, does not consume desiccated hams, or use steel rails, but it does use linotype machines. When it comes to these costly pieces of machinery, the Chronicle seriously objects to paying sixty per cent more for an American made linotype than the French publisher does for an American-made linotype. Hence it printed the article sent out by the Publishers' League some weeks ago. It printed the article conspicuously, but not in its editorial columns. It wanted its readers to see the article, but it gagged slightly at the idea of printing it in the editorial columns where the same old sophistries in defense of "dumping" had so often appeared.

Unlike the Chronicle, the Argonaut has no embarrassing traditions about the tariff. We believe in the tariff, but not too much of it. We think we have enough tariff-protected trusts and millionaires to last for a few years. In the interim the Argonaut would like to be allowed to buy American machinery and other products at least as cheaply as English, French, and German consumers. Therefore, we incline an attentive ear to the plaint which comes from the Publishers' League. This body, which consists of more than 5000 newspaper owners in the United States, writes to us thus:

"The basic patents of the Mergenthaler Company will expire in September, 1907. In order to perpetuate the present monopoly it is trying to force foreign manufacturers of linotypes (also working under the same original patents) into a territorial agreement which will give the Mergenthaler Company the sole right to sell machines on the whole of the American continent.

"Do you want this monopoly to continue? Are you willing to continue paying from $2000 to $3000 for machines or high rentals for them?"

We interrupt our friends long enough to remark in a still small voice, "No." We will add that we are quite willing to buy the machines cheaper. The Publishers' League thunders on:

"The present Congress will be asked to pass a bill removing the tariff of forty-five per cent on linotype machines. A similar measure was introduced in the last session through the efforts of the Publishers' League. Although a large proportion of Congress was in favor of the bill, it was not considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, to which it had been referred. We expect during this session to secure recognition of the rights of newspaper publishers."

We sincerely hope that the optimistic Publishers' League may secure such recognition. But Speaker Cannon often denies recognition to a Representative, to a great city, or to a whole State. When the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means can sandbag any just bill, when the Speaker under the rules can bludgeon into insensibility any member presenting such a just bill, we can not felicitate the publishers on the imminence of coming success. The letter goes on:

"If you are in favor of such a measure, kindly sign and forward to your member of Congress the enclosed petition, adding to it such reasons as you may desire. A personal letter also to your member would help."

We would be delighted to sign and send the petition to our member, who happens to be Mr. Julius Kahn. But we fear Mr. Kahn will not fall over his feet in hastening to pass such a bill. Something or somebody has hypnotized Mr. Kahn and the rest of the California Congressional delegation, where the tariff is concerned. When San Francisco was destroyed by the catastrophe of last April, a unanimous demand arose for the removal of the tariff on building materials for a specified term, in order to enable the stricken city to get upon her feet. This unanimous demand, at a special session of the Legislature, was crystallized into a formal request from the State of California. It was also incorporated into the platforms of both the political parties during the gubernatorial campaign just concluded. Our delegation in Congress is a solid Republican one. Did they get any such suspension of the tariff on building materials? Not on your life. They got nothing from the Speaker, the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and other Republican leaders, except hot air. They got jollied. They got their legs pulled. And they came home with nothing but the request from the Republican party and the Republican leaders to go away back and sit down.

As the gubernatorial campaign was just beginning, this was extremely embarrassing for all of us Republican editors. True, at that time we of San Francisco were not thinking of buying next year's linotypes with the tariff removed. We were thinking of buying linotypes and other machinery at once with the tariff, high freight rates, and every other exaction on top. But it was extremely embarrassing for us to touch upon this weakness of the California delegation when we reflected that our candidate for Governor, Mr. Gillett, had quite recently been a member of that delegation. Therefore, we corked up. During the campaign we emitted no sound concerning this slight defection of our Congressmen. We talked about Labor Unions; we invoked justice on the grafters; we bitterly denounced Mr. Gompers; we raved about the tyranny of Organized Labor; but we never said a word about the tariff. It was only after the campaign was over that we sat up and took notice. Then we began to remember that there was a tariff, and that our delegation had failed to have it temporarily suspended for the benefit of stricken San Francisco. So we began to ask urgent questions. Again our Congressmen cheerfully informed us, that they "would look into the matter," and again they began weaving their rope of sand. Fortunately for them, just at this moment the President ordered out the army and navy, and declared war on California, and the California Congressional delegation hastened to try and stand by their State and stand by the President at the same time. They are still trying.

To return to the publishers of California. The Publishers' League, including some five thousand newspaper owners, want to have the tariff removed on linotype machines. They want to buy them cheaper. So do we. But here is a sticker. We here in California lost several hundred millions by the recent catastrophe. We want the tariff suspended on building materials for a year or two. We want to buy such materials cheaper. If we all agree to urge Congress to take off the tariff on linotype machines, so that the Publishers' League may buy them cheaper, will the five thousand publishers agree to urge Congress to take off the tariff on building materials so that we may buy them cheaper? We very much fear that the publishers will refuse.

There are a whole lot of side issues to this matter—disgusting, narrow, petty details, into which we dislike to enter. The Publishers' League will doubtless reply to us that if Congress should take off the tariff on building materials, it might also remove the tariff from raisins, prunes, oranges, and other products on which California has a cinch. This would cause a dreadful roar to rise from the rural districts of our Golden State. If the Publishers' League should ask us what we would say to that, like our esteemed contemporary, the Chronicle, we would be forced to side-step. We want the tariff removed on building materials, linotypes, and a few other things. But we do not want it removed on raisins, prunes, and a few other things.

However, it will be an interesting spectacle to see what Congress is going to do about this linotype matter. Protection for the Fresno raisin-dryer and the Santa Clara prune-grower, who have thousands of competitors at home and abroad, is one thing. Protection for the only corporation manufacturing a single piece of machinery, like the Mergenthaler Company, is another. The raisin-growers, the prune-pickers, the fruit-farmers, most of them, are poor. But the gentlemen composing the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, like Mr. D. O. Mills, Mr. Ogden Mills, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, Mr. Phillip Dodge, and others, are many of them multi-millionaires. Perhaps they require forty-five per cent protection. But we really think they ought to shave it a trifle.

The Roosevelt-Storer Correspondence.

Last week in commenting on the correspondence between Mr. Roosevelt and Mrs. Storer, we remarked that our impulsive and generous President seemed to have been betrayed by designing friends. These remarks were based on the comparatively meagre telegraphic summary of the Associated Press, which naturally gave much more space to the President's letters than to those of the Storers. Since then, there has come to hand a much fuller report, giving the letters of both sides verbatim. From these it is evident that the President has been amazingly indiscreet. It is not too much to say that his epistolary indiscretions would seriously impair his chances for re-nomination were he again a candidate for the Presidency. These revelations have also greatly damaged the Presidential aspirations of those of his immediate followers who are known to have the backing of the Administration. Among these may be included Judge Taft, Secretary Root, and Mr. Cortelyou. The cause of this damaging of booms is the intriguing of this and the previous Administration with the Roman Catholic vote. Once before has this step been fatal to a Presidential candidate in American politics. It was fatal to Blaine. It would greatly damage Roosevelt if he ran again, and perhaps defeat him. If there are those who differ from us they need only note his alarm over the threatened publication of his letter denouncing "Protestant fanaticism." It will be fatal to Judge Taft if he should be a candidate; he is past all saving, for he is deeply enmeshed in various intrigues with the Vatican, including his active work at Rome in the matter of the Philippine friar lands. Root and Cortelyou have been "mentioned" as candidates; if they ever had any chance, they have none now.

The admirers of President Roosevelt—and that means practically all of the American people—have been under the impression that he is a frank and forthright man, and that there has been nothing subterranean in his politics—no "skulduggery," to use the political slang phrase. But from the revelations in his letters to the Storers, it is evident that Mr. Roosevelt is not above "doing politics"—and sectarian politics at that—when it will work to his advantage. The letters which appear in Mr. Storer's pamphlet—written by Mr. Roosevelt, Mrs. Storer, and himself—show that both the McKinley and Roosevelt administrations endeavored in various ways to win the Roman Catholic vote. Of course, they had the right to do so. But, owing to the existence of a strong distaste for such methods among the Republican voters of this country, they considered it expedient to keep their operations secret. This may or may not have been wise. But now that the facts have been brought to the light, the unwisdom is patent. The affair bears an unpleasant aspect, as nearly everything clandestine does when the light is thrown upon it.

Many of the letters in Mr. Storer's pamphlet are designed to show that Mr. Roosevelt, when Governor of New York, urged Mr. Storer to use his influence with the Vatican to make Archbishop Ireland a cardinal; also, that the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Storer were converts to Roman Catholicism could be used to advantage in this solicitation. In the furtherance of this line of policy, Mr. Roosevelt, when Governor, used his influence to have President McKinley exert himself for the elevation of Archbishop Ireland. Mr. Roosevelt forwarded his correspondence with Mr. Storer to President McKinley, who thereupon commissioned Bishop O'Gorman to say to Leo XIII that Archbishop Ireland's appointment would be considered "a personal favor to President McKinley, as well as an honor to the country." Mr. Storer gives as his authority for this statement "a letter written to me [Mr. S.] by Bishop O'Gorman from Paris on June 19, 1899." At this time (says Mr. Storer), the Roman Catholic population in the Philippines, with their many pressing religious questions, and particularly the matter of the friars' lands, made President McKinley and his Cabinet think that the relations between the Vatican and the American Government should be much closer. It was at this time that Governor Roosevelt wrote to Mrs. Storer, strongly expressing the wish that Archbishop Ireland be given the red hat, although declining to "interfere directly in the election of a cardinal." He authorized Mrs. Storer to show this letter to "any one you see fit," but not to have it published. He wrote other letters repeating his keen desire to have the Pope promote Archbishop Ireland. The Storers say they used these letters without hesitation, because Mr. Roosevelt did not withdraw the permission he had given so to use them. At this period Mrs. Storer "received many other letters from Judge Taft concerning the situation of church affairs in the Philippines. Mrs. Storer and I were regarded by the Government as available for use in [Roman Catholic] Church matters, and we were so used."

This takes us down nearly to the Presidential campaign of 1900. Then it gradually leaked out that there were letters in existence written by Governor Roosevelt (then candidate for the Vice-Presidency), urging the Pope to make Archbishop Ireland a cardinal. The Republican campaign managers learned that there were certain passages in them about "Protestant fanaticism," which if published they feared would ruin the Republican chances.

It must be admitted that the revelations would not have helped the Republican ticket. The anti-Catholic voters in the Republican ranks are up in the hundreds of thousands, and their suspicions of any dealings with the Vatican would have at once aroused their hostility. Correspondingly, the Roman Catholic voters in the Republican ranks were new recruits, and the dread that Mr. Roosevelt displayed about admitting his interest in Archbishop Ireland's promotion would have awakened doubts and hostility among them. Ireland was their idol—"Why," they would have demanded, "why is Roosevelt ashamed to support Archbishop Ireland? Ireland is not ashamed to support Roosevelt." And the question would have been difficult for Mr. Roosevelt to answer. It has not been answered yet. This omission would not tend to placate the Roman Catholic voters now. And they have the further fact to anger them that after all this row and scandal the Vatican never will make Archbishop Ireland a cardinal.

But the letters were not published. If the Storers kept such firebrand documents locked up during the two Presidential campaigns of 1900 and 1904, Mr. Roosevelt certainly can not tax them with treachery at that time.

But he became restless about them again, shortly after he was seated in the Presidential chair. January 16, 1902, he wrote:

"DEAR BELLAMY:—Will you ask Maria again if there is any letter of mine to her, or a copy of any letter, which, so far as she is aware, is in the hands of any one else? It is stated with the utmost insistence that Rampolla has one. * * * It is obviously not wise that any letter of mine should be in the hands of any one to whom it was not addressed at this time."

Cardinal Rampolla was asked by Mrs. Storer to return the [copies of the?] letters, and did so. She notified the President, who wrote February 17, 1902:

"MY DEAR MARIA:—* * * You need not bring the letters. All I want you to do is to keep them yourself. Evidently some people at Rome have been talking. A most resolute effort has been made to mix up facts, and try to show that as President I have been endeavoring to interfere with ecclesiastical matters."

At last, in 1903, Mr. Storer, while in Rome, sought an audience with the Pope and delivered the President's message concerning Archbishop Ireland. He was not the only envoy, for the President had sent a similar request to the Pope by Monseigneur O'Connell, who had delivered his message on December 24, 1903, and sent to the President the Pope's answer, which spoke encouragingly of Archbishop Ireland's chances. Mr. Storer became somewhat uneasy when he learned that Monseigneur O'Connell's errand to the Pope had got into the newspapers and "had called out from the President's Secretary a statement flatly denying that the President had authorized it." Some three weeks after Mr. Storer's audience with the Pope he also heard from Mr. Roosevelt. A sharp letter came, telling him to "take no part * * * in such matters as this, and hereafter repeat to no man what I have said to you concerning the subject of the article." Mr. Storer was filled with astonishment at this letter, for, he writes, "I had spoken at the President's express request." He further says: "My letter reporting the interview was wholly ignored by the President, and he assumed the air of one who had just learned from the newspapers for the first time and with pained surprise anything about the affair."

After this the relations between the President and the Storers continued ostensibly cordial until the end of 1905. Mrs. Storer—at Vienna—heard that Mr. Roosevelt had abandoned Archbishop Ireland and had taken up Archbishop Farley of New York, as his candidate. She could not believe the story, and wrote to the President about it. She also wrote to Secretary Taft to the same effect. Of the result of Mrs. Storer's "confidential letters," Mr. Storer says:

"It appears that the letter of Mrs. Storer to Judge Taft was shown not only to the President, but to Mr. Root, who had then become Secretary of State. Mr. Root, I may point out, was probably ignorant of what had been previously done by me and others in [Roman Catholic] Church matters during the Secretaryship of Mr. Hay."

We may interject here that not only was Mr. Root probably ignorant of what had been done in Roman Catholic matters during the Secretaryship of Mr. Hay, but so most certainly was the nation at large. We would all of us be interested to know what it was. Who are "others"? And what did they do?

In reply to Mrs. Storer's "confidential letters," there came from the President two letters, one to Mr. Storer, the other to Mrs. Storer. The letter to the lady was so severe that most of the newspapers call it "savage." Mr. Storer was intensely indignant over this letter to his wife; he did not answer it and requested her not to answer her letter either. As a result the President wrote demanding an answer. Thereupon Mr. Storer mailed his resignation—intended for the President, but addressed to the Secretary of State, as required by diplomatic regulations. But before it could have reached the President by mail, Mr. Storer received his summary dismissal by cable.

This act produced such profound indignation in the bosom of Mr. Storer that it brought about the publication of a pamphlet containing these incendiary letters. In reply to the President's answer Mr. Storer said: "There is no need of violent and insulting adjectives. The past has shown that few men can differ with either the wishes or the memory of the President without at once becoming a scoundrel and a liar."

The press generally comments on the publication of the letters as being most unfortunate. In the opinion of the leading Eastern journals all the parties concerned have suffered by the publication. The Springfield Republican thinks Mr. Roosevelt was in error in writing as he did to Mrs. Storer. It says: "If Mr. Roosevelt had reached a point where he had to secure the restraint of the wife of another man, even a public official, in the public interest, it was his business to bring his correspondence with her to an end and address himself solely to the husband." The same journal says of the interpolation in the President's reply of a letter from Mr. Cortelyou (stating that President McKinley never sent a message to the Pope in the spring of 1899 through Bishop O'Gorman), that it is purely negative testimony. Mr. Cortelyou was an assistant private secretary to McKinley, and it is absurd to say that he could have known everything about the secret workings of his chief's mind. Mr. Storer alleges that he has a letter from Bishop O'Gorman stating the exact opposite to Mr. Cortelyou's letter. Mr. Storer also asserts that President Roosevelt sent a message in 1903 through Monseigneur O'Connell to the Pope in favor of Archbishop Ireland, and quotes the text of the Pope's reply. This statement has not been denied by Monseigneur O'Connell, and presumably, therefore, Mr. Storer's allegation is true.

The most direct impeachment of President Roosevelt by Mr. Storer is when the latter claims that the President at Oyster Bay in 1903 again expressed his wish concerning the Pope, Archbishop Ireland, and Mr. Storer. This the President flatly denies, and says that it is "not only an untruth but an absurd untruth." Mr. Storer then prints an extract from a letter to Mrs. Storer from Archbishop Ireland, narrating an interview he himself had with Mr. Roosevelt at Oyster Bay. Archbishop Ireland wrote:

"The President said to me, 'Mr. Storer has told you what I said to him about you, Archbishop?'"
"I replied, 'I do not remember—'"
"'About his going to Rome?'"
"I said, 'No.'"

"'Well,' he said, 'I told him I would not write a letter to the Pope asking for honors to you, but I said that he could go to Rome and say, viva voce, to the Pope how much I wish you to be cardinal, and how grateful I personally would be to him for giving you that honor.'"

To this allegation of Mr. Storer, President Roosevelt has not replied.

The most alarming statement in Mr. Storer's pamphlet is that in which he says that the publication of many of Mr. Roosevelt's letters to himself and wife about public men and measures would be "too staggering" to contemplate. This sounds as if he did not intend publishing them. But if the other faction continue to hurl rags, sacks, bottles, old tin cans, and brickbats over the fence into the Storer's back-yard, no one can tell what may happen. Diplomats are supposed to keep a padlock on their tongues, but it is not so with diplomat's wives. And if Mrs. Storer gets good and mad she might publish the rest of the letters.

Graduating Japanese in San Francisco.

On December 20, 1906, the San Francisco Board of Education published its usual list of the graduates for 1906 from the high schools. There are five high schools in San Francisco, and the list is long. It enumerates pupils whose names betray their origin—French, German, Irish, Spanish or Mexican, Russian, Polish, Hungarian, Slavonian, Dutch, and American. Among them we note the names of three Japanese students, ARANOSKI NOMOTO, KATSUYE HIROTA, AND TOSHIHARU KATAGIHARA. To this list we call the attention of President Roosevelt, his Cabinet, and those other persons in the East who have been denouncing San Francisco for "excluding Japanese" from her public schools. The action of the Board of Education on December 19, in issuing this their list of graduates, could not have been formulated in a day. The certificates of graduation of these students are based on percentages of scholarship extending over many months. Our school trustees are not prophets or sons of prophets. They could not have foreseen months ago, when these Japanese students began the school year, that before the term was over the President of the United States would denounce San Francisco and her school trustees for "excluding" the Japanese from the public schools, and stigmatize this alleged action as a "wicked absurdity." Therefore, it is quite evident that the graduation of these Japanese students is a routine matter. This proves beyond all question what we on this Coast have maintained, namely, that the Japanese have not been "excluded" from the public schools of San Francisco, but that adult Japanese have been segregated from the primary and grammar schools where hitherto they have been thrown into contact with white girls of tender age, and where they have no business to be.

These accusations fall to the ground now by their own falsity. We call upon President Roosevelt to withdraw and retract the accusations he has made against his fellow citizens of San Francisco.

Government by Cabinet Amendment.

"Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." We do not know whether the gods have got it in for the present Cabinet, and sincerely trust that they will not be destroyed other than by the natural processes of decay, senile or otherwise. But that they have, if not gone mad, at least had their brains slightly affected, is beginning to be suspected by thoughtful men. Secretary Root's extraordinary pronouncement at a recent banquet in New York, when he announced to the forty-five States of this federal union that in the eyes of the Administration they had ceased to exist, excited profound amazement. But from the President's previous utterances, and from the remarkable proceedings of other members of his Cabinet, there would seem to be either an outbreak of midwinter madness or a carefully planned attack on our present system of government. It is like a systematic attempt to amend the Constitution by executive order. The members of the Cabinet, who are nothing if not zealous, are following closely in their master's foot-steps. He amends the Constitution by executive order. They—good, honest, superserviceable Secretaries—attempt to amend it by Secretarial order. They are already hearing from the Senate. Soon they will hear from the House. And later they will hear from the people.

The most recent instance of Secretarial amendment of the federal laws is an act of Secretary Hitchcock of the Department of the Interior amending an act of the Congress of the United States. In time, doubtless, the titles of these new-fangled laws will come to read thus: "An executive order by the President, amending [or repealing as the case may be] article Tenth of the Constitution of the United States." Or "An act by the Secretary of State to amend the Constitution of California." Or "An act by the Postmaster General limiting the powers of the Congress of the United States."

This new method of legislation has been utilized by Interior Secretary Hitchcock to suspend a statute of the United States, thus withdrawing from allotment some four million acres of land belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, for the purpose of creating a forest reservation. A Senate committee looked into this usurpation. Secretary Wilson of the Agricultural Department endeavored to uphold his colleague, and said they both "had the best interests of the Indian at heart." Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot also spoke in the highest terms of the motives of the Secretaries. Mr. Pinchot, who is an intimate friend of the President, probably had encouraged the two Secretaries in their legislative functions; it is a weakness of the Presidential circle. But the Senate Committee, consisting of Teller, Long, Brandegee, and Clark, refused to accept this mixture of legislative and judicial functions on the part of the Cabinet and Forestry officials. Secretary Hitchcock pleaded that "the suspension was only temporary." To this the Senate Committee replied that a Cabinet officer had no right to suspend the operation of a statute for a single hour or a single minute. "If we have violated the law, I am sorry for it," said Secretary Hitchcock, "but my only motive was in the interest of the Indians, and because I desire to accommodate the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson."

At first the two legislative secretaries seemed inclined to recede from their tutelational action. But after a conference with the President they stiffened up, and

What a substitution between friends?

Such would seem to be the opinion of Messrs. Hitchcock, Wilson, and Pinchot. But the Senators do not agree, and demand that the extra-official functions of the Cabinet officers should cease, and their illegal orders be cancelled.

JAPAN'S SOCIAL EVIL.

The Yoshiwara, or Pleasure City of Tokyo.

"The Japanese have won in a single generation the right to stand abreast of the foremost and most enlightened peoples of Europe and America. They have won on their own merits and by their own exertions the right to treatment on a basis of full and frank equality. The overwhelming mass of our people cherish a lively regard and respect for the people of Japan. * * * The feeling that has been shown in shutting them out of the common schools in San Francisco * * * is a wicked absurdity. * * * We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Throughout the discussion aroused by the President's remarkable message on the Japanese question, the Argonaut, in common with most of the conservative journals of California, has expressed itself with moderation. In fact, we are glad to say that such has been the general tone of press and people in California. Of course, there are yellow newspapers among the press and hot-heads among the people, but such have been rarer than usual at times of public crises. All of the excitement, all of the heat in this discussion has been in the Eastern press and—with respect be it spoken—at the White House.

The Argonaut does not believe that the President or our people in the East are conversant with Asiatic habits or Asiatic morals. On the Pacific Coast our knowledge of such matters has been forced upon us. We did not seek it. But their very ignorance makes it a duty at this time to set forth some phases of Japanese life for the enlightenment of American men and women in the States east of the Rocky Mountains.

The statements in the annexed chapter are from a book entitled "The Real Japan," by Henry Norman, who is widely and favorably known as explorer, publicist, and member of Parliament. Mr. Norman—or rather, Sir Henry, for he was knighted by the Liberal Government last month—was educated in England, America, Germany, and France; he is a graduate of Harvard and Leipzig universities; he has, therefore, little provincialism in his make-up. He stands high at home as well as abroad. Any statements that he makes may be accepted as trustworthy.

A further word of explanation may be necessary. What is here printed must not be distorted into "an attack on a friendly nation." This is not an attack. It is a photograph. With the systems of morality which prevail among other peoples, Mohammedan, pagan or Polynesian, we in this Christian and Occidental country can have little sympathy. We do not believe in polygamy; we do not believe in polyandry; we do not believe in miscegenation; we do not believe in concubinage; and we certainly do not believe in Governmental harlotry. The Japanese have a perfect right to follow their own customs of morality, but they are not ours. And to show how different their customs are, and likewise to show the repugnance, nay, the horror with which American fathers and mothers think of association between their children and adult and semi-adult Japanese, it is only necessary to read this picture of a certain side of Japanese life by an impartial pen:

"We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE YOSHIWARA: AN UNWRITTEN CHAPTER OF JAPANESE LIFE. BY HENRY NORMAN.

There is a place in Japan which every male tourist visits to gaze on its outside; a place that contains probably the most remarkable attempt ever made to solve the great problem of human society; yet a place entirely unknown to the Western world, for nobody has ventured to make in print more than an airy passing allusion to it. No foreigner, indeed, has ever been in a position to write seriously of this place from his own knowledge, for the police authorities tell me that I am the first to whom opportunities for thorough investigation have been afforded. I hesitated of course, a good deal before sitting down to write of it, but I long ago concluded not to make one of the conspirators of silence upon all matters of the sexual relations of men and women. I have therefore tried to write simply and without impropriety of what I have seen and learned of this remarkable and secret place.

On the furthest north-western outskirts of Tokyo, an hour's ride in a jinkisha from anywhere, there is a large colony apart. You enter it through a wide gate on one side of which is a large weeping willow—"The Willow of Welcome" in Japanese—and on the other side a post of police. The streets are long and wide, shops and tea-houses alternating; down the middle is a beautiful flower garden, six feet across, where a succession of flowers in full bloom is maintained among pleasant fountains and quaint stone lanterns. From the eaves of the bamboo-peaked roof hang two rows of brilliant red lanterns, and from the shops and the tea-houses at the side hang two more rows, in daytime four long lines of red are waving in the wind, and at night four streams of dancing scarlet—appropriate color!—make the darkness gay. At the end of the principal street is a large and handsome building surmounted by a clock-tower dominating the entire colony. And when you have walked for a quarter of a mile under the lanterns and beside the flowers you find not only one but a dozen such buildings, massive structures of stone and brick with pillared verandas and lofty vaulted entrances through which you get a glimpse of great stairways and columns of polished wood, with cool, green gardens extending temptingly beyond. There are no finer buildings in Tokyo than these, and they have cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. They bear no sign or mark outside to indicate their purpose, though if you look up in passing you will probably see a graceful figure or two in bright gowns strolling upon the balcony, or a pair of black eyes will look curiously down upon you, or perhaps you may catch sight of a graceful head with monumental coiffure resting upon a tiny hand and bare arm. This is the Yoshiwara as you may see it any day. What is it, however, if you can look behind the flowers and the lanterns, and read the unwritten story of these silent palaces?

"We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The word "Yoshiwara" means literally "the Plain of Reeds," and so long ago as the reign of the Shogun Iyemitsu in 1659 was the favorite quarter of the city for the residence of the courtesan class. At the Restoration, however, twenty years ago, the authorities determined to suppress houses of prostitution in the City of Tokyo proper, and confine them to this part. Now the word "Yoshiwara" has become the generic name for the quarter inhabited by the Japanese demi-monde in any town. There are no fewer than six of them in Tokyo alone, but the Shin-Yoshiwara, or new one, which I am describing, is the chief and most remarkable. It seemed to the authorities that public morals would gain by the removal of the licensed houses, or kashi-zashiki, from all the respectable quarters; then the system of regular medical inspection would be easier and more certain; the tax upon each member of the demi-monde could be better collected; the whole system, which is regulated by very intricate laws enforced theoretically with great strictness, would be much more under police control; and last, but not least in weight, such a quarter would be a happy hunting ground for the secret police.

To understand the peculiar Japanese point of view in this matter, we must go to the Department of Police. There is a special Bureau of Prostitution (included in the Bureau of Trade), with a dozen busy functionaries, and there, too, I was permitted as a special favour to be present at the enrollment of recruits. In a small room on the ground floor sat two officials behind desks on a raised platform. Opposite them were sliding-doors in the wall, and as these were opened from outside by a policeman three persons entered, the girl applying to become a licensed shogi, her parent or guardian, and the keeper of a kashi-zashiki. They all make very low bows and remain in an attitude of the greatest respect. The girl is questioned, she replies automatically with downcast eyes; the parent is questioned, he replies apologetically, with many explanations; the keeper is questioned, he replies profusely, with practiced fluency. There is a good deal of talk, and the official makes many entries in an elaborately ruled ledger before him. Then the three retire, in a moment the sliding-doors open again to admit another trio, and so on without variation, without emotion, formally and relentlessly the stream of victims is rolled on.

"We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Some of the girls are no longer young, but coarse in person and brazen in manner. Others are delicate and pretty, and very frightened. Some look little more than children, bewildered. The parents are quite commonplace people, and the bawds are like their fellows the world over, smug scoundrels.

The whole system is based upon the theory of a civil contract. When a girl is forced by her parents or desires of her own will to become a yujo or "lady of pleasure," the keeper of a kashi-zashiki is immediately ready to advance to the parents a certain sum of money, say twenty dollars, or fifty, or in very exceptional cases perhaps a hundred. The girl, her parents, and a surety thereupon enter into a bond for her to become an inmate of his house under the ordinary conditions for three years, or until the proportion of her earnings which goes to the keeper, is sufficient to recoup him for the sum advanced, together with his outlay for her clothes and board. Should she wish to leave before his complete reimbursement she must refund all the money advanced or expended for her up to that time. If she runs away, the keeper recovers possession of her by a civil action for debt against her parents and surety. But she can escape altogether by getting beyond her parents' reach and leaving them to settle the debt. When her time has expired, if the refunding process is complete, she is at liberty to leave or re-engage herself for another term. If it is not complete, she has no choice. Therefore she stays and stays. She is not allowed to go outside the Yoshiwara without a kansatsu, or local police pass, and even then she would probably be accompanied by a male attendant.

"We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The official examination takes place every Monday morning at the police station, the upper floor of which is converted into a sort of surgery for the purpose, and any shogi found diseased is immediately conducted by a policeman to a special hospital for such cases. As in England, the ordinary hospitals will not receive them. This hospital is supposed to be supported by the associated keepers, but as a matter of fact they in turn levy a regular tax upon all their shogi for the purpose.

All the circumstances of each case, the names of the parents, the reasons why they give their consent, the name of the keeper and the details of the contract, are scrupulously and fully entered in the official ledger of the Department of Police, and the authorities and the law have set up every possible theoretical safeguard between the yujo and the keeper.

It is very unusual, by the way, for one of these houses to be owned by the keeper; such profitable property is generally owned in Japan as elsewhere, by highly respectable capitalists who are never heard of. And profitable, indeed, it must be, for the market value of land inside the Yoshiwara, as compared with the general average in Tokyo, is as four to one. In this Yoshiwara there are 100 kashi-zashiki and about 1850 shogi. The government tax upon each house is three dollars a month, and upon each courtesan from half a dollar to three dollars a month, according to her class. There are four classes or grades in the occupation, the remuneration of each being prescribed by law.

"We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Of the four grades, oiran is the politest name, shogi the most frequent, joro the most accurate and severe, and yujo—"fille de joie"—the prettiest. The majority of the girls who enter the Yoshiwara are there that their parents may have money in consequence; but there is not one case in hundreds where they are not unwilling and unhappy victims. The duty of filial obedience is the primal and imperative virtue among the lower classes of Japan. A daughter yields absolute unquestioning obedience to her parents under all circumstances. Therefore when they say to her "You will marry so-and-so" she does not dream of objecting. No more does she when they say "You must enter the Yoshiwara." Of course when she is asked at the Department of Police, "Do you take this step of your own free will?" she replies, "I do," but the case is parallel to the condemned criminal who walks up the steps of the gallows of his own free will.

The reason that such a life in Japan is regarded differently from a similar life in other countries is simply that it is different—with just the difference between a person who becomes immoral under compulsion and one who is immoral from choice. The Japanese have their own view of all sexual matters, including this one. Iroko to kasake uo, they quote philosophically, nai monowa nai. And courtesanship among themselves they estimate at precisely its true value. An ineffaceable stain and an irredeemable lowering of personal dignity they know it to be, but they know also that there are not a few cases in which it leaves the moral character untouched. The biography of a famous and beautiful oiran named Murasaki says of her, "She defiled her body, but not her heart," and describes her tenderly and prettily as deichiu no hasu—"a lotus in the mud." Consequently many an oiran, understanding this, looks forward to a respectable marriage with a man whose acquaintance she has made in the Yoshiwara, and a few of them are thus fortunate every year, though perhaps not a larger proportion than in other countries.

To complete the picture of the Yoshiwara, I must add that in the lower-class houses the inmates sit at night in the front room on the ground floor, behind wooden bars and plate glass, and the passers-by examine them critically at their leisure, like goods in a shop window. Some of them are dressed in what passes for European costume. A sight of indescribable vulgarity and horror, this exhibition is barbarous and offensive in the extreme.

HENRY NORMAN.

"We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us."—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Yes, but we of the West do not want our children to learn all the Japanese know. And, God willing, they shall not.

Opinions on the President's Message.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST PRESS.

The President's intemperate utterances, his threats to enforce his ideas with the bayonet are merely absurd.—San Francisco Call.

The President's statement that the Japanese are excluded from our schools is a gross and amazing blunder. His threats to use force to compel California's submission to his dictation cause just resentment. He is a servant, not a Master.—Sacramento Bee.

His language is violent, almost threatening. His references to employing civil and military power to enforce treaties is distinctly menacing. He forgets he is not a ruler like Emperor William, but only the administrator, for a certain period, of the people's laws.—Oakland Tribune.

Californians are not obsequious subjects of the President's dictatorship. We object to converting our State into a dumping ground for Asiatic hordes.—San Jose Mercury.

He does not understand the situation and is too stubborn to be open to conviction after forming his opinion.—Bakersfield Californian.

His assertion of Federal authority to force the public schools is monstrous. It is in excess of the Constitutional authority. In his indictment he states what has the effect of a falsehood. He shows a feeling of contempt and hostility against his own fellow countrymen. When he speaks of "mutterings against the Japanese because of their efficiency as workmen" he states what is grossly untrue.—San Francisco Chronicle.

His statement that our school authorities deny the Japanese the advantages of the public schools is untrue. His intemperate language on this subject is absolutely inexcusable.—Labor Clarion.

Metcalf's neglect to discharge properly the duties of the investigation required by Roosevelt does not excuse the President's language; he seems to forget that he is an American President. Even Emperor William would not have eulogized foreigners at the expense of his own people.—San Francisco News Letter.

Our schools are our own. We will not turn them into establishments to Americanize Orientals. It is a matter beyond the Constitutional powers of the President.—Sacramento Union.

The public schools are not a national institution. They are supported by voluntary State taxation.—Humboldt Times.

He assumes the power to oblige our young school children to associate with adult Asiatics not up to our standard of morals. He has no such authority.—Berkeley Gazette.

School matters belong to the States alone.—Colusa Sun.

Foreign children can not be forced into any school that may be selected. None can claim special privileges, and the Japanese demand for special school privileges will be resisted and resented, even should it result in war.—Stockton Independent.

The President's language to California and San Francisco is offensive, and is intended to be so.—Fresno Republican.

The California public schools will be directed by the State, and what the opinion of the President is will matter not. The President's Message is manifestly crude and ill considered, and his stand will not be sustained by the people of the South and West. His Japanese recommendation is a blunder. It was unfortunate, and has a tendency to humiliate the people of this Coast.—Marysville Appeal.

He can not force the people of the Pacific Coast to accept his views in this matter, and the Japanese will not be admitted to citizenship or social equality.—Vallejo News.

The Administration can not coerce us into receiving Japanese or other Oriental aliens into our schools with our own children.—Modesto Herald.

The Japanese are not our kind, and will not merge. They belong to Asia.—Portland Oregonian.

His statement concerning coercion with military force is a plain threat. Such language is uncalled for. He is not authorized to threaten California with the Big Stick.—San Diego Union.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

"Are They Up to Their Jobs?"

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—I read with great pleasure your article "Are they up to their jobs?" but I think you have confused two classes of men—those who have had a chance of training, and those who haven't.

No man is ever up to his job, unless he is trained, except a genius. Our generals in the early part of the civil war had had no training in handling large bodies of troops, such as the generals of military countries have in their annual manoeuvres; in these circumstances it would have been surprising if generals up to their jobs had been found, because (pace George Bernard Shaw's dictum, apparently shared by you) "capable persons engaged in military pursuits are so scarce that the existence of two of them in the same time in the same hemisphere is extremely rare"; it is the difficulty of the pursuit, rather than the incapacity of the person engaged in it. A really great general is the quintessence of moral and mental force, and were he not so extremely rare, all the world would be under military rule.

Your strictures upon the management of the Hearst-Hughes campaign, according to this way of looking at things, seem to be unwarranted; for this was really a campaign of revolt—a thing so rare that a man who trained himself to manage such a campaign would have as precarious a livelihood as a man whose sole occupation was to sell smoked glasses for eclipses.

But minora canamus: you purposely ignored "the ordinary every-day man" not up to his job. I hold that most of our woes come from him. Wars are few and far between and we can endure the vagaries of politics, but the day's bread and butter and the day's comfort are the important things, and here the not-up-to-the-job-ness becomes serious.

Lack of training again: I really believe that no serious deterioration in their respective services would ensue if our street-railroad managers became head-waiters in our restaurants, and vice-versa. Certainly there could be no more vexatious and nerve-destroying delays in our daily movements, and no more disgusting crowding than now exists. They are all at a maximum now, and therefore could not increase. Hence a maitre d'hôtel manager would be stoically accepted by the public.

Mutatis mutandis, could the railroad man turned head-waiter beat this? In one of our most expensive restaurants a bottle of claret was ordered, and it came to the table chilled so that it tasted like a cross-cut saw. An appeal to the maitre d'hôtel brought out the statement that he served all claret at the temperature of the cellar. He was asked if he had ever heard of claret being chambre; but he had never heard either of the term or of the custom. He offered to bring hot water to pour in the glasses, and the waiter did his best to make things even, by bringing the salad at the temperature of the kitchen. Further protest was useless, as it is a two-to-one shot that the proprietor of the restaurant could not have told whether or not his maitre d'hôtel's sole previous training was in a Maine country town.

But let us not despair; there is one man in town thoroughly up to his job—the cashier. No matter how forlorn and inadequate the cars are, the cash-registers are of the latest model; and I found no mistake in the charging of the cold claret and the warm salad.

San Francisco, December 16.

C. H. H.

Notes, Beams, and Jobs.

EDITOR ARGONAUT:—The article, "Are They Up to Their Jobs?" in your issue of December 15 struck a chord of sympathy in my nature. I had begun to think I was old-fashioned, out of tune with present methods, and am glad to see that at least one other recognizes the seemingly general inefficiency. Perhaps not general, but very nearly so. For instance: In other days, books and magazines of the better class were remarkably free from typographical errors, and usually bound with care and with some effort toward artistic excellence. Some of the great publishing houses of the East still have a reputation for fine printing, but it would seem that they do not care to preserve it. In the December number of the Atlantic Monthly, on pages 722 and 723, are typographical errors that never would have appeared in earlier days of the Riverside Press. In the December number of the Century Magazine, on page 289, is a typographical error to be seen at a glance. The Century is printed by the De Vinne Press, a name notable among good printers. To turn from greater to lesser lights, in the December Bookman, in an editorial note on page 336, is the phrase "would have liked to have aired them." I have marked more than twenty "wrong-font" letters in the same number.

Are the proof-readers up to their jobs? Are the old-time striving for thoroughness and pride in good workmanship dying out? I do not think I am a pessimist, but I deplore the hasty, slipshod, impudent ways of the time, and especially in the homely arts that affect every interest of my middle-class life.

Yours in sympathy,
Los Angeles, December 20, 1906.

A. B. L.

There are occasions when a little less than the whole truth seems expedient, otherwise we would unhesitatingly endorse the criticisms of our correspondent. He has touched a delicate topic. For many years the Argonaut had its own composing-room, proof-room, press-room, and mailing-room. The paper was produced under conditions that made careful supervision of all the departments easy. The results may not even have approximated perfection, but they rarely threw a dun-colored gloom over the interested members of the staff. After this period of watchful but agreeable care and its reward, the flood.

Now, the conditions are changed. Other hands, other machines, have at least temporary charge of the mechanical details. There are painful slips, and now and again typographical errors, and semi-occasionally omissions that seem really important to us. We can not consistently speak of the notes that others find in other eyes. Our own eyes are beaming, but not continually nor with irrepressible, long-enduring joy. Let us speak of politics, or humor, or poetry, or the masters thereof. They are fair game. Printers are in a class by themselves.

OLD FAVORITES.

The Death of the Old Year.

Full knee-deep lies the winter snow,
And the winter winds are wearily sighing;
Toll ye the church-bell sad and slow,
And tread softly and speak low,
For the Old Year lies a-dying.
Old Year, you must not die;
You came to us so readily,
You lived with us so steadily,
Old Year you shall not die.

He lieth still; he doth not move;
He will not see the dawn of day.
He hath no other life above,
He gave me a friend and a true true-love,
And the New Year will take 'em away
Old Year, you must not go;
So long as you have been with us,
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old Year you shall not go.

He frothed his bumpers to the brim;
A jollier year we shall not see,
But though his eyes are waxing dim,
And though his foes speak ill of him,
He was a friend to me.
Old Year, you shall not die;
We did so laugh and cry with you,
I have a mind to die with you,
Old Year, if you must die.

He was full of joke and jest,
But all his merry quips are o'er.
To see him die, across the waste,
His son and heir doth ride post-haste,
But he'll be dead before.
Every one for his own.
The night is starry and cold, my friend,
And the New Year, blithe and bold, my friend,
Comes up to take his own.

How hard he breathes! over the snow
I heard just now the crowing cock.
The shadows flicker to and fro;
The cricket chirps; the light burns low;
'Tis nearly twelve o'clock.
Shake hands before you die,
Old Year, we'll dearly rue for you;
What is it we can do for you?
Speak out before you die.

His face is growing sharp and thin.
Alack! our friend is gone,
Close up his eyes; tie up his chin;
Step from the corpse and let him in
That standeth there alone,
And waiteth at the door.
There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
And a new face at the door, my friend,
A new face at the door.

—Alfred Tennyson.

Ring Out the Old.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night—
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new—
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true,

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress for all mankind.

Ring out the slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land—
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

—Alfred Tennyson.

President Roosevelt's official family, in October, 1901, when he wrote the letter to Mrs. Storer praising Root, consisted of the following cabinet members, besides Mr. Root, who was Secretary of War: John Hay, Lyman J. Gage, E. A. Hitchcock, John D. Long, James Wilson, Charles Emory Smith, P. A. Knox. Of these, only Mr. Root and Mr. Wilson remain—Mr. Hitchcock being about to retire. The Los Angeles News, in commenting on the President's quoted words, "There is no one of them, with the possible exception of Root, to explain and champion my administration," says the sentence is rather surprising when it is considered that several of these men were well accustomed to public speaking, and were regarded highly as authorities upon statecraft.

POLITICO-PERSONAL.

Senator Bailey of Texas finds the opposition to his reelection firm and active, but still insists that he will be triumphant.

Reports from all parts of New Hampshire indicate that the candidates for United States Senator are the incumbent, Senator Burnham, and Winston Churchill, the author. Senator Burnham is said to be sure of reelection because he has a majority of the Republican members pledged to his support. Winston Churchill has not even formally proclaimed his candidacy.

In an obviously sardonic mood, Ibsen suggested that when doctors experiment on new medical and surgical theories, that the least damage would be done to the world if they would perform these experiments on politicians. There are a few aldermanic candidates in Boston, remarks the Traveler, that would be spared with great pleasure for this purpose. Other cities, doubtless, would be glad to name local favorites for the waiting list.

General Grosvenor of Ohio is finding much difficulty in his task of pushing through the ship subsidy bill, and it may be that his term will expire before success is won, as he is not to be a member of the next Congress. Congressman Burton, his colleague, has announced his decided opposition to the bill. Those who favor the measure are now concerned over the attitude of Speaker Cannon, who used to be outspoken in opposition, but is now silent.

The President gave a dinner at the White House in honor of Governor-elect Hughes of New York, on the occasion of the recent visit of the latter to Washington. Those invited to meet the Governor-elect were the Secretary of War, the Postmaster-General, the secretary to the President, Speaker Cannon, Senator Lodge, Representative Payne, Sherman, Littauer, Parsons, Fasset, and Cocks, of New York; McKinley, of Illinois; Loudenslager, of New Jersey; Watson, of Indiana; Assistant Secretary Bacon and Assistant Secretary Keep. During the dinner there was much discussion of the campaign and general congratulation over the defeat of Hearst. After his return to New York Mr. Hughes denied the report that he had a long private conference with the President during his visit.

Irving B. Dudley, who has just been promoted in the diplomatic service from Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Peru to the same position for Brazil, is named as a Californian. He was for a time a resident of San Diego, a city judge there, and a member of the executive committee of the California Republican Central Committee. His home, however, is really at Evanston, Ill., though for the past four years his wife and 6-year-old daughter Helen have been living with him at the United States legation in Lima. Mr. Dudley has a fine command of the Spanish language and had hoped that when appointed to a more important post he would be given the post of Minister to Spain or Portugal. His two brothers, Charles E. Dudley and William Dudley, hold high positions with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad.

Although Senator Platt of New York is feeble in the extreme and moves about only with great difficulty, he has savage aversion to any one hinting at his condition, remarks the Chicago Record-Herald. He tottered out of the Senate while the President's message was being read, and made for a waiting carriage. A stiff breeze blew his coat-tails widely about and his thin frame shook like a reed. A Capitol policeman made bold to take hold of the old man's arm as he tried to mount the steps of the carriage and assist him to enter. Fiercely the New Yorker turned on him. "What are you doing, sir?" snarled the Senator. "Only trying to help you in your carriage, sir," politely replied the bluecoat, with a tremor in his voice. "Get away from me," snapped Senator Platt imperiously, "I don't need the help of you or anybody else to get into my carriage."

The House of Representatives defeated the bill to increase the pay of members of Congress. Representative Sullivan of Massachusetts made a slashing speech in favor of the proposed increase from the standpoint of one who has found by experience that it is practically impossible for a Representative to live within the income provided by the government except through practicing economies and thrift that are incompatible with the dignity of a member of Congress. Mr. Sullivan said that the salary now paid to Senators and Representatives of $5,000 per year is not enough to attract men of capacity and brains who might be compelled to live upon it, and that if it continued it will in time fill the legislative halls with idle rich men who get into politics to cure themselves of ennui, and political heelers who have no visible means of support outside of politics. The House voted to increase the salaries of the Speaker, the Vice-President, and members of the Cabinet from $8,000 to $12,000 per annum.

President Fallieres of France recently confided some of his troubles to a reporter of L'Illustration, and among the striking features of his lament are these sentences, which seem to show that official cares in republics are much alike even if they are not always given the same treatment: "When the general appears, surrounded by his officers, I assure them of the solicitude of the republic, and I thank them for their devotion to the regulations and to the country. If I go into a chamber of commerce I declare that we are striving victoriously against foreign combinations. To the farmers I promise higher prices, and to the consumers the lowering of the cost of food-stuffs. At the close of banquets I extol the benefits of mutuality which must peacefully resolve the social question, and, if I touch foreign politics, it is to state that France, conscious of her rights and of her power, has no warlike designs. I am obliged to use such phrases, and I blush for them. But what can I do? In order to be original, shall I own that I am ignorant of the desiderata of the province and that I am only slightly interested in the local budgets? Must I confess that the manufacturers and the merchants of Germany, of England, and of America, compete advantageously against our products? Shall I cry out loudly for war? I do not hide from myself that such a proposition would be coldly received and might even throw the world in trouble. So I resign myself to the commonplace—that is the will of the high function which has been confided to me."

"THE COLLAR AND ELBOW."

A Wrestling Match in the Mines on New Year's Day.

Should you meet Father Ryan, you'll know in a minute that he isn't "Frinch"—that is to say, you'll know that much provided you've any skill in seeing tribal characteristics. The father is short and stout, and round about, but not at all clumsy or unwieldy. He has a broad, flat back, short neck and square shoulders. His feet are small and shapely, while his hands are not only small, but soft as an idle woman's, and he has a soft fatherly way of turning those hands one over the other upon his full chest, as though he were a very helpless, amiable, and kindly person. Amiable and kindly no doubt he is, when it comes to be helpless—ow-wow-wow, that is another matter entirely.

Father Ryan's hard, square head is set upon his shoulders as though it were put there to stay, and his neck is one of the last necks in the whole world that an athletic would think of trying to break. The back of his head is a feature of great expression, and the meaning of it is—war. Were it not for a face as fresh and bland as the face of a blonde young female saint, Father Ryan would pass for a belligerent person. The expression of his face and hands contradicts all the other points about him. And then his general manner, especially in his approach to strangers, is as fearlessly pacific as a four-year-old child's. In fact, his manner seems to confide in the innocence and goodness of every creature.

It is not known to all people how the religious organization known as the Roman Catholic Church determines upon the local fitness of the priests and missionaries it sends to all points of the compass; but it is known by observation that it often finds the proper man for the right place. If this work of pious selection were done away off yonder in the Roman city of Italy, as some persons charge that it is, it would be little less than miraculous. If done by the local bishops, as perhaps it may be, it shows a wondrous knowledge of men and places.

Before Father Ryan came quietly into our tough mining town, we had never observed any suspicious religious character mousing around for a gospel ranch. In fact none of us ever had taken thought to ask if any man in the camp had any religion of any kind; but when Father Ryan came there he seemed to know all about it. He called the people of his faith together, or visited them one at a time, and among the first things we knew, he began with his own hands, assisted by others, to grade a level spot on one of the rock-faced hills surrounding the town.

When we stopped on our way to and from work, and asked: "What'r goin' to put up?" the father, embracing his shovel-handle long enough to seem to be about to spit on his gloved hands, stood up and replied:

"A small edifice to the worship of God."

"Oh! church, eh?"

"Well, begging your pardon, hardly a church; but a bit of chapel just."

"What kind?"

"Catholic." And the father went on shoveling the loose earth and small rocks over the side of the grade as if he had no greater concern in the matter than the employment of his time until sundown. By-and-by the chapel began to assume the form of a structure, which, like each of the various hoisting works, looked down from its stony eminence upon the town of cabins, clustered in the hollow of the hills.

When the house was roofed in, and externally complete, the irreverent wits of the camp dubbed it "Purgatory 'tist' Works."

This new title coming to the ears of Father Ryan, he smiled meekly and said:

"Sure, it's not a bad name at all; and, glory be to God, I've great hopes I'll be the means of hoisting many a poor soul into eternal glory."

It was no easy matter to collect the money to pay for the religious building in our camp, because we had all been so long away from what are called religious influences, and free from the so-called restraints of divine grace, that we thought such notions superfluous. We had seen our fellows sicken and die, or die without being sick; we had cared for, nursed, or buried them without the "benefit of clergy," until we were in a great degree emancipated from the self-instituted guardianship of the pious gatekeepers and toll-gatherers who infest the journey through life. Full many a harsh refusal and profane snub fell to the lot of Father Ryan, as he went from mine to mine on pay-days in his effort to gather into the treasury of the Lord a small part of the hard earnings, much of which otherwise was destined to cross the green cloth of the gaming table, or disappear through the till of the bar-room counter. But his "reverence" abated no jot of his good humor, nor one iota of his perseverance.

Regularly during the first day after every pay-day he came up the pathway to each mine, puffing and complaining of shortness of breath, hat in hand, smiling and beaming with benevolence, and he seldom if ever went empty away.

"It's a fearful atmosphere this, on the lungs," he would say; "it makes me puff like a fat man in a fut-race."

"I'll tell you what'll cure ye of that."

"Deed I wish you would then."

"Change 'shifts' with me for a month."

"Deed I would then if I could believe that either of us could do the work of the other as it ought to be done; I'd take your advice, and be glad to do it."

"I'm 'fraid you'd peter, padre, in the lower levels. Mighty warm down there."

"Pull well I know it's truth you're speaking about the heat and hard labor down below," said the father, with his kindest smile, "and I know I'm not equal to you in bodily powers; but there is still a lower level, where it's not to say warm, but powerful hot, and I'm striving my utmost to keep you out of that."

"All right, padre; if you can copper hell we'll chum on the chips," and the hard hand of the miner passed his religious contribution into the soft hand of the priest.

"I can not say that I clearly comprehend your words, but your actions have an elegance that moves me to thank you now and forever."

Thus he went about the hills, puffing, talking, and gathering the soul-tax. The miners, with or without regard to his religious exertions, came to like him in a pale, mild, moderate sort of way; but there came a time at last when he developed traits—or, as the miners say, "let himself out"—in such a way that their liking became almost enthusiastic.

The pay-days in the mines in our camp were from the 1st to the 4th of each month, but in the year when Father Ryan was building his chapel two of the largest works announced that their mines would pay off on the day before Christmas, and shut down for repairs during the holidays.

Now, about half-way between these shut-down mines and the town, there was a little swale in the hillside at an abrupt elbow in the road. In this little swale, and on the level with the road-bed, an enterprising spirit graded into the hill, forming a smooth level place. On the front half of this level, and occupying about half the space, the man of enterprise erected what the poets call a hostelry, that is to say, a place of refreshment—mostly alcoholic and nicotian—for the accommodation of the constant goers to and fro between the town and the mines. It was a rough log-on-end building, roofed with willows overlaid with rye-grass, and weighted down with a coating of earth. The two ends fitted up against the rocky sides of the graded recess. The front was not imposing as to architecture, and the rear was like the front, only instead of facing any road-view, it formed one side of a square, unroofed theatre, the other side of which was walled about by the quarried faces of the natural rock. This rear theatre had a native rock flooring, quarried and chipped smooth, for no purpose originally other than for a place of storage for empty barrels, boxes, etc. But shortly after the inauguration of alcoholic entertainment in the house, and before the yard could be dedicated to its intended use, there was an impromptu wrestling bout in this convenient but crude arena, and from that day forward the house and place became known far and wide among the silver hills as the "Collar and Elbow."

The "Collar and Elbow" thenceforth became a sort of fierce gymnasium, at which all feats of strength were performed—mostly, however, confined to wrestling, lifting, and boxing, and the like, with now and then a square fight in dead earnest.

The hard stone floor of the arena was a cruel place to fall or be dashed upon; but then the natural man envelops a stalwart savage, and the savage is true to his instincts.

On New Year's day the "Collar and Elbow" was hospitably dispensing free egg-nog to its patrons, and the low log house was full of noisy, brawny men, talking, gesticulating, drinking, smoking, and profaning the King's English artistically. Father Ryan came beaming like a stout cherub into the crowd, and, taking off his hat, said in a mellow, soft voice, as he laid the hat upon the end of the counter:

"A happy New Year to you, gentlemen, one and all, and many happy returns of the same."

"Hello, padre, come up and take a drink with the boys," said a stout miner in a rough yet kindly way, looking inquiringly into the father's face, and laying a hand gently on his shoulder.

"Well," said his reverence, "not wishing to spoil conviviality in moderation, I'll do it."

"Bully for you, old man. Give the padre a bumper o' nog. Damn the padre that can't stand in with the boys."

"No, if you will excuse me," said the father, "it's not egg-nog I'll take, but a glass of wine. I've a poor head for mixed liquors."

"All right, padre—anything you like."

The bar-keeper, with a respect tempered no doubt by inherited regard for the church, quietly passed the wine to the priest.

"Here's—" the recipient of the wine was beginning to say.

"Stop your damn noise. The padre's goin' to drink. Let's all jine him."

"Indeed, then, I'm in hopes you will all join me, not here alone, but elsewhere."

"Good enough! The padre means to meet us all in the 'sweet by-and-by.' That's a damn fine sentiment. We'll drink on it. All fixed? Here we go."

"Now, gentlemen," said Father Ryan, after emptying his glass, and with his hat still on the counter, "if you will kindly excuse me, I have a little business with each of you."

"Well, we'll excuse you. What's the little business?"

"Well, then, it's just this. I'm in sore need of a few more dollars to finish the little house on the hill, and I'd be obliged to each of you if you'd put what you think you can spare into my hat there on the counter, as a holiday contribution to the good cause."

"See yer, boys, the padre wants to finish his 'h'ist' works. Let's all chip. There's mine," and the miner threw his half-dollars into the hat.

The example was contagious, and the silver was piled into the hat. Father Ryan stood beaming on the boys as they contributed to his holy store.

"Has everybody anteed? See yer, Nate," to a big-boned, American built man, who sat on the end of the board bench in the corner, "come up and pool."

"Not if I know myself," said Nate, sulkily.

"Go fer him padre—speak a piece to him. Jerk a hunk o' hell fire at him. Damn a man that won't ante for the gospel!"

The men turned about and faced the dissenting Nate, jeering and going at him.

"Oh, now, gentlemen, be aisy," said his reverence with a light wave of the hand. "Every man has a right to give or refuse as his feelings prompt him; and I'm thinking it's not for regard of the money that the gentleman refuses to contribute. If I might I would ask him if he does not think some kind of religion is a good thing?"

"You can ask me anything you damn please; but I'm not building meetin'-houses."

"Do you not think they ought to be built?" asked the father softly.

"I don't care a damn whether they are built or not. I'm not in the business."

"Wouldn't you give toward a charity?"

"Meetin'-houses are not charity."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said the priest, "if you'll add ten dollars to the amount in my hat, I'll agree to show you before next New Year's day, if you are alive, that it is a charity, or I will on that day pay you back the money and two per cent a month interest; or, if you die before that day, the money shall be paid toward your funeral expenses. Come, now, what do you say?"

"I don't say nothing to that. But I'll tell you what I'll do."

"What?" asked his reverence.

"I'll put up twenty dollars against any man's twenty that I can throw any man in the house, best two falls out of three, and if I lose, the money goes in the hat."

"O-a-ah!" growled some one, "yer don't want to challenge a priest do ye?"

"You can take it up, if you want any of it."

"I ain't no champion rustler, but I'll be—"

"Whist! Wait a moment," said Father Ryan, interrupting the speaker. Then turning to the challenger, who still sat in his corner: "When and where do you propose to wrestle?"

"Right now, and right here, in the back yard, on the stone floor."

"What hold?"

"Collar and elbow."

The men in the room became silent, as they stood watching and listening to the controversy.

"Gentlemen," said Father Ryan, blandly, as he turned to the crowd, "if one among you will be kind enough to put up the money, with the help of God I'll try my best to win it."

"Here's your money!" said the bar-keeper, spanking the heavy gold twenty on the board.

"And here's the mate to it," said Nate, rising from his place in the corner and striking a second twenty on top of the first.

Now all was excitement. The egg-nog was forgotten, while betting became the order of the hour.

"Twenty dollars even that the padre wins! Damn if I don't bet my last dollar on religion every pop."

"Two to one on Nate Smith—from ten dollars to a hundred."

And so the shouting and buzzing went on with a vehemence and rapidity beyond the power of written report. When it had somewhat worked off the babel of its confusion and settled down, Father Ryan, in a business-like way, asked:

"Who is to hold the stakes?"

"Oh, let the bar-keep hold 'em," said Nate, carelessly.

"What kind of shoes have you on?" said the father. And the knowing ones in the crowd winked wisely at each other, while the stalwart Nate turned up the heavy, hob-nailed, steel-tipped soles of his feet.

"Has any one a pair of brogans, No. 7, steel-toed, high in the instep, to lend me?"

"Here they are, old man," said a respondent, as he sat down on the bench to take them off his feet.

"All right," and the father stamped his feet into the hard shoes. Then, stripping off his coat, vest, and outer shirt, he said: "I want now to borrow a stout, twilled, blouse-jacket, or jumper, as I believe you call it—if some one will kindly oblige me."

"Will buckskin do, father?"

"Yes, indeed. Any stout jacket which will give my friend a fair hold on my collar—something that will not tear out."

"Yer ye are," said a teamster, stripping off his buckskin roundabout and presenting it to the father. "Ye can't tear this more'n hell'll freeze over."

When Father Ryan had donned and buttoned the leather garment, he said:

"Now I'm ready. Show me the ground."

Being marched with the pell-mell crowd into the back-yard, he rubbed the iron-bound sole of his borrowed shoes over the natural rock-floor, and, smiling like a cherub in a leather jacket, said:

"It is a cruel, hard place to fall—hard as the arena of pagan Rome."

The preliminaries being all settled, the impromptu athletes stepped to the centre, shook hands, and then standing front to front, took each other by the collar with one hand, and by the elbow of each with each other hand, and the muscular bout began.

The collar-and-elbow wrestle between skilled contestants is really, so to speak, a fist fight with the feet. One would think in reviewing the kicks of the nailed feet that shins would be broken like pipe-stems, but it is not often one wrestler is permitted to get a square-toed kick upon the shins of the other, where there is science on both sides.

But really to describe the tripping, kicking, fending, foiling, and muscular writhing of the contestants on this New Year's day in the stone amphitheatre behind the log-saloon is not in the power of this or any pen. But the result was that, after posing on the brink of alternate success and defeat, Nate Smith went down, solid, on the flat of his back, taking care, however, to stiffen his neck against a sounding rap of his conscious cabesa on the eternal hard floor.

"Score one for the church!" shouted a knowing fellow in the crowd.

"Hurrah for the padre—he's a little bull with the clay on his horns!"

"Damfearint! Jersey too."

"Gentlemin," said Father Ryan, puffing and panting violently, and half gasping out the words, "will yees—oblige me—be standin' back—to give us a bit more air—it's near smothered I am."

"Stand back! Everybody stand back!" shouted the men at the front, charging rearward upon the rear.

"Yis; do stand back. Let us have good ordther throughout. It's sairious business, and I hope there'll be no levity on the part o' the spectators," said the soldier of the cross, whose later utterances were less broken by reason of his getting what the popular voice called his "second wind."

Once again the strugglers came to the center, and now again the contest was waged with all the vigor of the human animal supplemented by that essence of immortality known as the intellect. This second bout was even more warily worked through than the first—each man having already tested the skill of the other—but it ended in a drawn battle, both men coming down together with a terrific fall upon the hard floor. This time there were serious inquiries to know if either man was hurt.

"Hurt, is it? Yis, indade I am; but I'm not injured."

"I'm not injured either, but I've got as much of this thing as I want at present," said Nate, and then added, "we'll postpone the other fall 'til next New Year's."

"No, we won't!" shouted the crowd; "that's a dead give away."

"All right, boys. Father Ryan are you ready?" said Nate.

"Ready, please God," and he stepped to his place. "I'm here among the tigers, like an early martyr in the amphitheatre."

Nate extended his hand, which the martyr grasped good-naturedly, but instead of taking hold of his collar, Nate, holding the priest still by the hand, turned to the crowd and said:

"Boys, here's a man that has throwed me once, and 'tied' me once. I've done my level best to save my own money and to win his, but it can't be done. The best I can do is to fall with him. I throw up the sponge. The money goes in the hat."

At this speech there was cheering and grumbling, but the cheers predominated.

"Gentlemen," said the father, resuming instantly the educated tone, "my opponent has acted throughout this journey like a Christian knight and a chivalrous spirit, and I wish to say that, if there is any dissatisfaction with his conclusions, I will waive any claim that I may have upon the sum of money at issue in this wager; and, further, if he is willing, we will, turn and turn about, wrestle with any dissatisfied person or persons, one at a time of course, until there is no shadow of complaint of unfairness. But I want it understood that all that we both earn goes into the hat."

"I'm willin'," said Nate, "and I'm agreeable to that last prop., but my twenty goes into that hat all the same, and no more jaw-bone about it."

There being no takers of the last proposition, the wrestlers resumed their ordinary garments. The egg-nog drinking began again, while the priest, after stowing the collected money away in his various pockets, placed his hat upon his head, took another light glass of wine in compliment of the season, then shook hands all round, and said:

"Gentlemen, let your mirth be seasoned with moderation, all your contests with kindness, and so strive, in season and out, that all your days shall produce good citizenship. I am deeply obliged to you for the hearty fairness and squareness of my reception today. Good-bye."

It is needless to add that the "bit of chapel" was entirely finished, and that Nate Smith, with "the boys," drops in now and then on Sunday—"not," as he says, "that I care a damn for hallelujah in Latin, but just to give the padre a send-off."

J. W. G.

Renewed agitation of the subject of an occupant for the vacant niche in the Washington City Hall of Fame assigned to Indiana has resulted from the interest aroused by diversified opinions as to the proper statue to stand by the side of Governor Oliver P. Morton. Morton's statue is there, and has been for several years, but no agreement has been reached as to the other figure. Indiana is entitled to two statues. General consent seemed to give the first place to the great war Governor. Several Indians are proposed as companions to Morton, chief among them of course, General Harrison. Another favorite is the author of "Ben-Hur," General Lew Wallace. Governor Thomas A. Hendricks is often suggested.

A Calcutta trade journal calls attention to the demand for crocodile skins in America, and from time to time has urged the natives living contiguous to crocodile haunts to engage extensively in the business of killing this creature for his skin, guaranteeing that they will be able to sell to American buyers at remunerative prices all the skins they can take. There are thousands of crocodiles in the lagoons and tidewater streams of India, easily accessible, and there are Indians in plenty to hunt them and take their skins. Consequently there is no reason why a big trade in crocodile skins should not be built up between the United States and India.

Many eminent architects have long expressed grave fears as to the safety of St. Paul's Cathedral, in London, and it is estimated that an expenditure of between £40,000 and £50,000 will be necessary to safeguard the building. The southwest tower is more than a foot out of the perpendicular, and there are numerous ominous cracks in the structure due to subsidence.

The Island of Zanzibar has been under British protection since November 4, 1890. It is the great storehouse and distributing centre for trade of the whole East African coast, although with the development of the resources of the mainland and increased shipping facilities of the several mainland ports its relative commercial importance is not so great as in former years.

The only open unimproved lot in the business district on Fifth avenue, New York, is owned by an elderly spinster, a descendant of the Astor family. She will not sell the lot, for which real estate dealers have been scrambling, even though offered $650,000 for it, as she prefers to keep it so that her pet dog may have a place to exercise.

An invention of Frau Antoinette Arntzen and exhibited at the recent musical exposition in Berlin consists of a method of increasing the resonance of the voice by inserting a film under the roof of the mouth, making a sort of sounding board. The apparatus is intended for the use of orators, officers, sea captains, etc., as well as for singers.

The number of skins of fur-bearing animals obtained every year in British America is much greater than it was half a century ago. Muskrats outnumber all other animals trapped or killed for their furs in Canada by a large margin, and these rodents yield about 1,000,000 pelts annually.

A bureau has been established at Budapest for supplying schoolboys with ready-written essays and prose and verse compositions and translations in any language at eight cents a page. The Budapest education authorities have applied to the government to suppress it.

The oratorio of "The Messiah" was given entire by graphophone to an audience of over a thousand persons in Weymouth, England, the other night. It was considered a complete musical success.

A monument to Captain James Cook was recently unveiled in New Zealand.

THE RING OF A COUNTESS.

How It Involved the Honor of a Young Russian Diplomat.

Paris remarked with complacency in the season past the frequency—greater than ever before—of American voices and American beauty on the boulevards. Without doubt the visitors from the republic across the sea are in high favor, but not all the customs, or, shall I say, the traits, that come and remain. Three encounters, which have taken place in as many months, seem to demonstrate that even in France there is a change of feeling and methods—an adoption of novel revenges. The recent disorder at Longchamps race-course, when the pavilions were overturned and burned, I recall at once, though in point of time it was not the first of the three. The first and last are associated, as the later incident is but a natural development in the new order from the earliest event. A distinguished guest at a Brittany chateau last August was accused of theft by his hostess, and a charge against him actually placed with the public prosecutor. Later it was withdrawn but no satisfaction was offered to the victim of the complaint. When satisfaction was demanded the husband of the hostess refused to meet the man whom his wife had dishonored. Today, in the Bois de Boulogne, the guest met the host of three months before and lashed him severely with a riding whip. Tonight all the gossip of the strange affair is being revived to augment discussion of the assault.

At the castle of Ker-Stears, near Brest, a large party was entertained last summer by the Countess and Count Rodellec du Portzic. Among those enjoying the hospitality of the country seat was M. Alexandre Greger, a Russian of rank and a diplomat who has had a brilliant career for one so young. He has been secretary of the Russian embassy at Rio de Janeiro and at Washington, and in each city he soon became an especial favorite in diplomatic and in social circles. Here he was a councillor of state attached to the embassy, and was looking forward to early advancement. He is married, and his wife is an American. The Countess du Portzic also is an American, though of French blood. Her father was Armand de Trobriand, who went from France to New York when a boy, was an officer in the war between the Northern and Southern States, and afterward achieved prosperity in commercial affairs. He married a Miss Jones, and two daughters survive them. The elder of the daughters married an Englishman of wealth, John B. Stears, and at his death she was left with a fortune. This widow, after a respectable interval, was won by the Count Rodellec du Portzic, who is at least twenty years her junior. Rumor has carried abroad the intimation that the couple are not in harmony.

One evening the countess favored her guests with music, and near her stood the diplomat. The lady took off her costly rings and laid them on the piano shelf, and, later, when the music was over, the young councillor assisted her in extinguishing the lights. Next morning one of the rings had vanished. It was a jewel worth fifty thousand francs, its setting a blue diamond once in the possession of Louis Philippe, and in after years coming down to be a favorite ornament on the shapely hand of the actress, Leonide Leblanc. Suspicion was directed toward M. Greger, the diplomat, and almost immediately the gem was found in a bottle of tooth-powder packed in his hand-bag. Without hesitation the countess denounced her guest, and, going further, placed a legal charge against him.

M. Greger denied the accusation with scorn, and said that the ring might have been secreted by a servant. But appearances were against him. It was known that he was embarrassed for lack of funds, being deeply in debt in Paris. He wrote to the Russian ambassador, forwarding his resignation, and retained an advocate, M. Feillard, of Brest. Before the first shock of the misadventure had passed, M. Greger admitted that there were strained relations between the Count du Portzic and himself, and that they had been caused by his advice to the countess to relieve herself of an uncongenial and cruel mate, by divorce. Before the time set for the formal trial, the countess withdrew her charge from the hands of the public prosecutor, but is said to have declared her continued belief in the guilt of her guest.

In Paris the cause of the young Russian had many supporters, and the action of the countess was almost universally regarded with disfavor. It was said that no Frenchwoman would denounce or accuse a guest. The journals took up the matter and printed many letters to sustain their criticism. L'Echo de Paris exhibited nearly a hundred communications which declared that the countess had violated the unwritten law of society in charging with crime one who was under her roof by invitation. The antecedents of the countess were again made the subject of remark, especially her second marriage. It was said that the Count du Portzic, though a younger man than might have been attracted naturally by the widow, had won her hand only after threats of destruction that would involve both. Finally, after days, the incident seemed destined to join other topics of the hour in a quickly forgotten past.

M. Greger, however, could not rest under the imputation that weighed upon him. He sent a challenge to the count which was ignored. Then he began a suit to dispel the defamation and slander, but may have realized that this, even if successful, would not heal wounded honor. The meeting today could not have been premeditated, but seems rather the sudden bursting into flame of a smoldering desire for revenge. That the Russian is convinced of the count's responsibility for the indignity thrown upon him can not be gainsaid.

Such a story seems like a chapter from Balzac. If the sorrows of the young man are not indicated with force in this letter it is because of the weakness of my pen. Not all is told when is shown the sacrifice of a career that seemed most promising. His friends were aware of the councillor's circumstances, and they looked with admiration on his brave resolution to rise superior to them, as many another has done in Paris. But all the petty details of his misery were given by the newspapers without remorse, in the first days of the affair. That he had invited his diplomatic associates to a supper far beyond his present means, and was paying the account of the restaurateur in small installments, was made public. That his tailor and his laundress were unpaid for long terms was found no less interesting by the reporters. That there were motives sufficient to induce one less distinguished to seize a rich prize carelessly displayed is not to be denied, but that he could stoop to such an act is not credible in his circle. Even a diamond worth fifty thousand francs could not have tempted him. Had such a degrading impulse overpowered him, a moment's reflection would have brought to his view the utter impossibility of disposing of so remarkable and costly a ring.

Now that M. Greger has chosen to return a deadly insult to his defamer in an unusual way, the result is once more a matter of speculation. A duel can not be avoided now. The count must recognize and meet his assailant. The diplomat is a practiced swordsman. It is said that in Washington he crossed foils more than once in a fencing bout with his excellency President Roosevelt. Before this letter reaches you the cable may have brought the intelligence that the tragic-comedy which opened at Ker-Stears castle in Brittany last August has closed on the field of honor under the leafless trees of a friendly French nobleman's estate.

ST. MARTIN.

Paris, December 17, 1906.

CURRENT VERSE.

On an Old Russian Candlestick.

Once, long ago—I know not where nor when—
It cast its light upon some strange-set board,
Around which, fur-enamelled, lounged a horde
Of hot-eyed youth and swart, thick-bearded men.
Its flame lit up their wine-wild faces, then
It caught the studded hilt of djik and sword,
And stopped till, coarse-carousing with her lord,
Some jeweled woman flashed it back again.

Far from those mingled scenes of mirth and ire
This bit of brass forlornly braves its doom—
'Tis waste with me the silent days' desire,
To watch long nights of quietness and gloom,
To share the lonely glimmer of my fire,
And cheer the hired baroness of my room.

—Margaret Ashmun in New England Magazine.

The Vampire City.

Come with me into Babylon! Here to my woodland seat
Over the miles she lures and smiles—the smile of the bitter-sweet;
I hear the distant cadence, the siren-song she sings;
I smell the incense burning where her great red censers swing.

Out of the night she calls me, the night that is her day;
I see the gleam of her million lights a thousand miles away;
As the roar of a mighty army I hear her pulses beat
With the tramp of the restless vandals, the rush of the wearied feet.

Ever and ever onward a white procession goes;
Youths with the strength of lions, maids with the breath of the rose—
Toward her, but never from her, throned on her armored isles;
They give her their lives for homage, but the City only smiles.

They know that her breasts are poison; they know that her lips are lies,
And half revealed is the death concealed in the pools of her occult eyes;
Yet still she is calling ever, and echo is never dumb;
Follow us into Babylon! Mistress of Life, we come!

—Reginald Wright Kauffman.

That fictitious personality of legal creation, John Doe, has finally been given a black mark. Last May the Supreme Court of Brooklyn handed down an opinion that too much use was being made of the John Doe fiction, and that justice often miscarried on that account. Five justices agreed in this conclusion. A more important and binding decision along this line has now come from the New York Court of Appeals in the case of a head book-keeper for Klaw & Erlanger, the heads of the theatrical trust. He was handed a "John Doe" subpoena and asked to testify, and he refused. He was threatened with contempt proceedings, and the court ruled that he did not have to obey such a summons. It held that many subpoenas issued in that manner are worthless, and that "no business secret would remain unknown if such a command were obeyed."

Congressman Pollard of Nebraska, recently introduced in the House, as a matter of personal privilege, a resolution which seeks to open a way by which he can get back into the Treasury the sum of $1861, back salary, which was unearned but accepted. Apparently Mr. Pollard was not much worried about this matter until last fall, when his constituents discovered the fact and came near defeating him. After he was re-elected, Mr. Pollard set about squaring himself with his conscientious constituents.

The convict cobbler Voigt, whose exploit as a counter-feit captain at Koepenick set the world laughing, was sentenced to four years' imprisonment for his escapade. At the trial the court-room was crowded with distinguished officials, army officers, jurists, and fashionable women. Voigt conducted his own case with self-possession and skill. He declared that his raid on the town treasury was primarily for the purpose of securing a passport with which he could leave Germany.

A proposal was introduced recently in the French Chamber of Deputies requiring all members to sign the working list each day, and providing that absent members should be reported and the lists published. Further, the measure proposed to fine members absent without leave. It is hardly necessary to say that the proposal was not warmly received.

An edition for blind readers is now published by the London Daily Mail. The paper is issued every Saturday, and besides giving the news of the week is elited with especial regard for the misfortune of its readers. It is said that in England one out of every five who are without sight can read the Braille characters in which the paper is printed.

It is estimated that not less than $20,000,000 is paid out in tips yearly in Paris.

A CELTIC-GREEK POET.

"The Life and Letters of Lafcadio Hearn."

A personality as strange and romantic as has the hero of one of his own fantastic tales, a nature at once charming and bizarre, a man of exquisite sensibility and astounding sensitiveness, who pursued the beautiful as children chase butterflies, is revealed in "The Life and Letters of Lafcadio Hearn," by Elizabeth Bisland (Wetmore). Mrs. Wetmore, who enjoyed the author's friendship for thirty years has done well in giving up the bulk of her work to Hearn's correspondence. One must needs be blessed, or cursed, with a genius as illusive and eccentric as his own, to be able to interpret so unusual a life-story.

Lafcadio Hearn was born of Greek and Irish parentage in the Ionian Islands, in 1850. When England ceded the Ionian Islands to Greece, in 1856, Dr. Hearn, who was a surgeon-major in the British army, returned to Dublin with his beautiful Greek wife, and their two boys. The Irish soldier's romance ended shortly after, for Mrs. Hearn fled to Smyrna with a Greek cousin, whom she subsequently married. The father also married again and Lafcadio, an extremely sensitive boy of seven, was adopted by a grand-aunt and removed with her to Wales. The household into which he now passed was devoutly religious, but the odd little Greek child steadfastly refused to accept Christian instruction. Stories of ghosts and goblins, nymphs and fauns and nereids, he listened to with feverish interest, but he would have none of the saints of the Pictorial Church History. In an amusing reminiscence, Hearn tells this incident of the fate of several books on Greek mythology, which he discovered in his aunt's library:

One day the beautiful books disappeared; and I was afraid to ask what had become of them. After many weeks they were returned to their former place; and my joy at seeing them again was of brief duration. All of them had been unmercifully revised. My censors had been offended by the nakedness of the gods, and had undertaken to correct that impropriety. Parts of many figures, dryads, naiads, graces, muses had been found too charming and erased with a pen-knife;—I can still recall one beautiful figure, whose breast had been thus excised. Evidently "the breasts of the nymphs in the brake" had been found too charming; dryads, naiads, graces, and muses—all had been rendered breastless. And, in most cases, drawers had been put upon the gods—even upon the tiny Loves—large baggy bathing-drawers, woven with cross-strokes of a quill-pen, so designed as to conceal all curves of beauty, especially the lines of the long fine thighs. . . . However, in my case, this barbarism proved of some educational value. It furnished me, with many problems of restoration; I often tried very hard to reproduce in pencil-drawing the obliterated or the hidden line.

After spending several years in a Jesuit college in the north of France, and at Ushaw, the youthful Hearn seems to have wandered about London in direst poverty. He never alluded to this painful period in his conversations, although the following from his fragmentary autobiography probably refers to an episode in his terrible experiences:

I take off my clothes,—few and thin,—and roll them up into a bundle, to serve me for a pillow: then I creep naked into the hay! . . . Oh, the delight of my hay-bed—the first bed of any sort for many a long night!—oh, the pleasure of the sense of rest! The sweet scent of the hay! Overhead, through a skylight, I see stars—sharply shining: there is frost in the air.

The horses, below, stir heavily at moments, and paw. I hear them breathe; and their breath comes up to me in steam. The warmth of their great bodies fills the building, penetrates the hay, quickens my blood;—their life is my fire.

I wish I could tell them how thankful I am,—how much I like them,—what pleasure I feel in the power that proceeds from them, in the sense of force and life that they spread through the silence, like a large warm Soul.

It is better that they cannot understand. For they earn their good food and lodging;—they earn the care that keeps them glossy and beautiful;—they are of use in the world. And of what use in the world am I?

Those sharply shining stars are suns,—enormous suns. They must be giving light to multitudes unthinkable of other worlds.

In some of those other worlds there must be cities, and creatures resembling horses, and stables for them, and hay, and small things—somewhat like rats or mice—hiding in the hay. I know that there are a hundred millions of suns. The horses do not know. But, nevertheless, they are worth, I have been told, fifteen hundred dollars each. They are superior beings! How much am I worth?

To-morrow, after they have been fed, I also shall be fed—by kindly stealth;—and I shall not have earned the feeding, in spite of the fact that I know there are hundreds of millions of suns!

In 1869 or 1870, Lafcadio Hearn, half blind and in frail health, came to America, and lived for two years in extreme penury on the East Side of New York. In 1874 he was working as a reporter on the Cincinnati papers, but it was not until he arrived in New Orleans, in 1877, that Hearn found himself in an environment suited to the development of his peculiar genius. During the next twelve years he labored with infinite pains to perfect himself in word mastery, which eventually made him one of the greatest stylists of the times. Hearn's first literary work, translations from the "Nouvelles" and "Romans et Contes," by Theophile Gautier, was published in 1882, under the title of the initial tale, "One of Cleopatra's Nights." The charm of the book attracted the attention of a discriminating few, who acclaimed the advent of a brilliant new star in the literary firmament. Among the critics who encouraged the sensitive author by kindly reference to "One of Cleopatra's Nights" was Jerome A. Hart, editor of the Argonaut. Like Hearn, Mr. Hart was then engaged on translations from Gautier, de Maupassant, Loti, Prosper Merimee, and other French writers, which made the more welcome this sympathetic notice of the book in the pages of the Argonaut:

Mr. Lafcadio Hearn, a talented writer on the staff of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, has just translated some of Gautier's fantastic romances, under the name of "One of Cleopatra's Nights." The book comprises six fascinating stories—the one which gives the title, "Clarimonde," "Arria Marcella, a Souvenir of Pompeii," "The Mummy's Foot," "Omphale, a Rococo Story," and "King Candale." Mr. Hearn has few equals in this country as regards translation, and the stories lose nothing of their artistic unity in his hands. But his hobby is literalism. For instance, of the epitaph in "Clarimonde,"—

"Ici-gît Clarimonde,
Qui fut de son vivant
La plus belle du monde," he remarks: "The broken beauty of the lines is but inadequately rendered thus:—"

"Here lies Clarimonde,
Who was famed in her life-time
As the fairest of women!"

Very true—it is inadequate. But why not vary it? For example:—

"Here lieth Clarimonde,
Who was, what time she lived,
The loveliest in the land!"

The fleeting archaic flavour of the original is not entirely lost here, and the lines are broken, yet metrical. But this is only a suggestion and a kindly one.

The biographer remarks of this criticism and the general reception of the book:

Other notices had been less kind. The Observer, as Hearn quotes in a letter to Mr. Hart, had declared that it was a collection of "stories of unbridled lust without the apology of natural passion," and that "the translation reeked with the miasma of the brothel." The Critic had wasted no time upon the translator, confining itself to depreciation of Gautier, and this Hearn resented more than severity to himself.

Hearn expressed his appreciation of Mr. Hart's article in the following letter:

New Orleans, May 1882.
Thanks for your kindly little article. I suppose it emanated from the same source as the charming translation of Gautier's "Spectre de la Rose"—which we reproduced here comparing it with the inferior translation—or rather mutilation—of the same poem which appeared in the Monthly.

Your translation of the epitaph seems to me superb as far as the first two lines go; but I can hardly agree with you as to the last, "La plus belle du monde" can not be perfectly rendered by "the loveliest in the land"—which is a far weaker expression, by reason of the circumscribed idea it involves. "La plus belle du monde" is an expression of paramount force, simple as it was; it conveys the idea of beauty without an equal, not in any one country, but in the whole world. But I think your second line is a masterpiece of faithfulness; and, as you justly remark, my hobby is literalism.

Hearn never ceased to be grateful for the Argonaut's encouragement of his early efforts, and the subjoined letters were the beginning of a correspondence with Mr. Hart that continued at intervals until Hearn's death in Japan:

New Orleans, May 1882.

We have the same terrible proverb in Spanish that you cite in Italian; but it certainly can never apply to the Argonaut's exquisite translations—preserving metre, colour, and warmth so far as seems to be possible. Still, I must say that I do not believe the poetry of one country can be perfectly reproduced in corresponding metre in the poetry of another: much that is even marvellous may be done,—yet a little of the original perfume evaporates in the process. Therefore the French gave prose translations of Heine and Byron: especially in regard to the German poet they considered translation in metrical form impossible. Nevertheless it is impossible also to refrain from attempting such things at times,—when the beauty of the exotic verse seems to take us by the throat with the strangulation of pleasure. I have felt impelled occasionally to make an essay in poetical translation; the result has generally been a dismal failure, but I venture to send you a specimen which appears to be less condemnable than most of my efforts. I can not presume to call it a translation,—it is only an adaptation.

As for the lines in "Clarimonde," if the book ever reaches a second edition, I think I will be able to remedy some of their imperfections. Skaldic verse, I suppose, would be anachronistically vile; but something corresponding to the metre of "La Chanson de Roland," unrhymed, what the French call vers assonances. This corresponds exactly with your lines in breadth; also in tone, as the accent of the assonance is thrown upon the last syllable of each line.

Just received another note from you. Have seen the reproduction; I am exceedingly thankful for the compliment; and you know that so far as the copyright business is concerned, the credit must do the book too much good for Worthington to find any fault. I suppose you receive the Times-Democrat of New Orleans. I forwarded last Sunday's issue, containing a little compliment to the Argonaut.

New Orleans, December, 1882.

I venture to intrude upon you to ask a little advice as a brother-student of foreign literature you could probably give me better than any other person to whom I could apply. I am informed that in San Francisco there are enterprising and liberal-minded publishers, with whom unknown authors have a better chance than with the austere and pious publishers of the East. It would be a very great favor indeed, if you could give me some positive indication in this matter. I desire to find a publisher for that excessively curious but somewhat audacious book, "La Tentation de Saint Antoine," of Flaubert, of which I have completed and corrected the MS. translation. You who know the original will probably agree with me that it would be little less than a literary crime to emasculate such a masterpiece in the translation. I have translated almost every word of the Heresiarch dispute, and the soliloquy of the god Crepusus, etc.

Consequently, I have very little hopes of obtaining a publisher in New York or Boston. Do you think I could obtain one in San Francisco? I would be willing to advance something toward the cost of publishing—if necessary.

New Orleans, January, 1883.

Writing to San Francisco seems, after a sort, like writing to Japan or Malabar, so great is the lapse of time consumed in the transit of mail-matter, especially when one is anxious.

I am not surprised at the information; for the difficulty of finding publishers in the United States is something colossal, and my hopes burned with a very dim flame. I do not know about Worthington—as he is absent in Europe, perhaps he will undertake the publication; but I fear, inasmuch as he is a Methodist of the antique type, that he will not. Now the holy Observer declared that the "Cleopatra" was a collection of "stories of unbridled lust without the apology of natural passion;" that "the translation reeked with the miasma of the brothel," etc., and Worthington was much exercised thereat. Otherwise I should have suggested the publication in English of "Mademoiselle de Maupin."

I regret that I can not tell you anything about the fate of "Cleopatra's Nights," but the publisher preserves a peculiar and sinister silence. As the translations were published partly at my own expense, I am anxious only regarding the fate of my original capital.

Yes, I read the Critic—and considered that the observation on Gautier stultified the paper.

"Salammbô" is the greatest, by far, of Flaubert's creations, because harmonious in all its plan and purpose, and because it introduces the reader into an unfamiliar field of history, cultivated with astonishing skill and verisimilitude. It was twice written, like "La Tentation." I translated the prayer to the Moon for the preface to "La Tentation." I sincerely trust you will translate it. As for time, it is astonishing what system will accomplish. If a man can not spare an hour a day, he can certainly spare a half-hour. I translated "La Tentation" by this method—never allowing a day to pass without an attempt to translate a page or two. The work is audacious in parts; but I think nothing ought to be suppressed. That serpent-scene, the crucified lions, the breaking of the chair of gold, the hideous battles about Carthage—these pages contain pictures that ought not to remain entombed in a foreign museum. I pray you may translate "Salammbô"—a most difficult task I fancy—but one that you would certainly succeed admirably with. In my preface I spoke of "Salammbô" as the most wonderful of Flaubert's productions. Verily the path of the translator is hard. The Petersons and Estes & Lauriat are deluging the country with bogus translations or translations so unfaithful to the original that they must be characterized as fraudulent. And the great American public like the stuff. One who translates for the love of the original will probably have no reward save the satisfaction of creating something beautiful, and perhaps of saving a masterpiece from desecration by less reverent bards. But it is worth working for.

With sincere hopes that you will not be deterred from translating "Salammbô" before some incompetent hand attempts it, I remain, Sincerely,

LAFCADIO HEARN.

Hearn's gorgeous sketches of the West Indian isles, and a remarkable story of the Gulf of Mexico, entitled "Chita," attracted publishers and readers to him. He was commissioned by the Harpers in 1890 to visit Japan to obtain material for a book, but he had a disagreement with the publishers, and decided to accept a position from the Japanese government. The author married a Japanese, by whom he had four children. became a subject of the Mikado, and remained in Japan until his death in 1904. Hearn's early letters from Japan are full of extravagant praise of the country and people, but towards the end of his life he made extraordinary efforts to return to America. In a letter to Mr. Hart, written shortly before the author's death, Hearn says:

During the last fourteen years I have had many kind words from your paper; and once you were good enough to reply to a letter like the present one. Let me venture to trouble you again, though I have indeed no claim upon your time outside of literary sympathies.

I should like very much to pass a season or two on the Pacific Coast; but I can scarcely afford that pleasure unless I am able to obtain an easy position of some kind. Are there any literary possibilities in San Francisco; something in the way of regular contributions, signed or unsigned (which I should prefer) would be very nice. My sight forbids anything like hard newspaper work—though I might attempt much with a typewriter. Could I be of use on the Argonaut? I should be very thankful for a kind reply—however discouraging.

In forwarding the letters he received from Hearn to the publishers of Mrs. Wetmore's work, Mr. Hart commented on the foregoing note as follows:

It seems to controvert the idea very generally entertained that Lafcadio Hearn had lost all desire to return to this country, even temporarily; that he had become so thoroughly Orientalized that he was unwilling to quit Japan. There is something pathetic also in the desire expressed by him to secure regular work on the Pacific Coast, although he was half-blind. It is an eloquent commentary on the pecuniary gains of the literary artist for no one could deny that Hearn ranked high as an artist.

The two volumes ($6 net; Houghton Mifflin), of the "Life of Lafcadio Hearn," are illustrated with portraits of the author, his family and friends, and with pictures of his home and haunts in Japan.

D. A. D.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Governor Hanly of Indiana has appointed Miss Mary A. Stubbs to the office of State statistician, made vacant by the death of her father, Joseph H. Stubbs. This is the first appointment of a woman to a State office in Indiana.

Queen Alexandra celebrated her sixty-second birthday at Sandringham December 1. The queen was delighted at having most of her children and grandchildren present for her birthday. Last year King Haakon and Queen Maud, and the Prince and Princess of Wales were all abroad.

Charles M. Jacobs, consulting engineer of the Pennsylvania, New York, and Long Island Railroad Company, has been retained for the construction of a tunnel under the river Seine from Rouen to Havre. Mr. Jacobs, who has already prepared plans and submitted them to the French officials, has had charge of the entire work of the big Pennsylvania Railroad tunnel under the North and East rivers, and Manhattan.

Ex-Senator Henry G. Davis is to build a Presbyterian church to cost $25,000 at the new town of Gassaway, W. Va., which place is named for him. Gassaway is a rapidly growing town and is the seat of the Coal and Coke Railway shops. The church will be built of native stone. The Davis Memorial Presbyterian Church at Elkins was built by Mr. Davis in memory of his son, who was lost at sea while cruising on the coast of Africa.

Senator Tillman of South Carolina is as careless regarding his own attire as he is about giving offense by his manner and mode of expressing himself. Oddly enough, however, in the matter of feminine dress it is said he has developed such fine taste that his wife and daughter depend almost entirely upon his judgment in the selection of their hats, gowns, and wraps. He never goes to a large city that he does not carry back home some article of attire for Mrs. or Miss Tillman, and he keeps up with the latest modes more carefully than they do.

James Alexander Campbell, who was Conservative member for the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen in the British Parliament from 1880 till his retirement at the last election, is an elder brother of the recent Prime Minister of England, yet was opposed to him in political policy.

William E. Gladstone's elder brother, Sir Thomas Gladstone, sat in opposition to his brother on the Tory side of the House of Commons. John Bright sat in the House of Commons as a Liberal Unionist, with his brother, Jacob Bright, and his son, W. L. Bright, who were Home Rulers.

Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn has been named to succeed the late Prof. Samuel P. Langley as secretary of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. He is not yet 50 years old, and has been for six years paleontologist of the United States geological survey, and from 1901 to 1903 held the same place in the Canada geological survey; he has been for several years curator of vertebrate paleontology (besides vice-president and trustee) of the American museum of natural history in New York City, and he is also Da Costa professor of zoology in Columbia University. Though the place to which he is invited is an important one, Professor Osborn may decide not to accept it.

Richard C. Kerens of St. Louis, long prominent in business and in politics, and who served on the Inter-Continental Railroad Commission with President A. J. Cassatt, of the Pennsylvania railroad, and former Senator Henry G. Davis, is in New York in the interest of a projected trunk railroad through the republics south of Mexico. He gives it as his "deliberate judgment that from three to five years and $75,000,000 would be sufficient to complete a continuous all-rail line through all the republics, opening such a field as the dream of man can not possibly comprehend. The republics through which it would pass have stated willingly that they stand ready to contribute ten or twenty times the amount necessary."

The distinguished men of science and letters who share with President Roosevelt the honor of winning a Nobel prize this year are representatives of three nations. J. J. Thomson, professor of experimental physics at the University of Cambridge, England, was given the prize for researches into the nature of electricity. Mr. Moissan, professor of chemistry at the Sorbonne, Paris, was awarded the prize for his experiments in the isolation of fluorine, his researches regarding the nature of that element and his application of the electric furnace to the service of science. Professors Ramon y Cajal and Camillo Golgi, of Paris, received the prizes for their works dealing with the anatomy of the nervous system. Giosue Carducci, professor of Italian literature at the University of Bologna, was awarded the literature prize.

In a volume on French foreign policy, "La France Conquise," which has just appeared from the pen of M. E. Flourens, the well-known deputy and ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, a high compliment is paid to King Edward VII. M. Flourens considers the king to be a great politician. He says: "An attentive and sagacious observer, knowing thoroughly the strength and weakness of all the politicians of both continents, having from East to West penetrated the secrets of all the courts, the mysteries of all the chancelleries, Edward VII, when he ascended the throne, had fewer illusions than any on the difficulties of the present or the dangers of the future."

Rear-Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan, commandant of the New York yard, one of the most popular officers in the navy, has reached the age limit and will be placed on the retired list. He received his appointment to the Naval Academy in 1860, from Illinois, where he grew up, an orphan, "bound" to a farmer. He was commissioned lieutenant in 1866, lieutenant-commander in 1868, and commander in 1882. Rear-Admiral Coghlan has been noted in the navy for his frankness of comment. He has been twice court-martialed, once in 1876 for having sent an abusive letter to an employee of the Navy Department. He was sentenced to suspension and the loss of thirteen numbers. In 1890 he criticized the administration of naval affairs and was tried. Civilian witnesses refused to testify, and he was acquitted of the charges. He was in command of the Raleigh in the battle of Manila Bay, and commanded the expedition for the capture of Isla Grande in Subig Bay in 1898. He brought his vessel to New York in 1899, and two days later, in a speech at the Union League dinner to his officers, he not only spoke his mind freely about German meddling at Manila, but recited the "Hoch der Kaiser" doggerel. The following evening, at another club dinner he repeated his remarks, and was then ordered by the Secretary of the Navy to go on board his ship. He was asked for an explanation, and later reprimanded, but the reprimand was not made public. He applied to President Roosevelt for a restoration of the numbers he had lost through the court-martial sentence, and was successful, being made senior captain, and reaching the grade of rear-admiral a week later.

IT IS EASY WITH ELECTRO SILICON
to Clean and Polish
SILVERWARE
Send address for a FREE SAMPLE, or 15c. in stamps for a full box. Electro-Silicon Soap has equal merits.
THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 30 Cliff St., New York.
Grocers and Druggists sell it.

Del Monte Offers
During the reconstruction of San Francisco. Hotel Del Monte offers a welcome shelter to those desiring a homelike place for rest and recreation. The park-like grounds, the golf links, the flowers, the many walks and drives were never more attractive than at the present. The entire Hotel has recently been renovated and improved, with steam heat, electric lights, hot and cold water, telephones in every room. Why not make this attractive resort near San Francisco your permanent home? Special terms for families. Address Geo. P. Snell, Manager, Del Monte, California

A Permanent Home
THE OCULARIUM
Perfect Fitting
Eye Glasses
At Moderate Prices
Lenses Replaced, 50c
Henry Kahn & Co
OPTICIANS
1309 VAN NESS AVENUE
Between Bush and Sutter

PRINTING CARES of Business People taken care of by
SPAULDING-GRAUL COMPANY
Formerly GEO. SPAULDING & CO.
being a concern where the wants of those desiring Printing, Lithographing, Bookbinding, Designing, Engraving, Etc., are given prompt attention. Give us a trial.
914 Howard Street at Fifth
Phone Temp. 2351
San Francisco

See that Lea & Perrins' signature is on wrapper and label.

Beware of inferior sauces put up in bottles similar to the above.

Lea & Perrins' Sauce

THE ORIGINAL WORCESTERSHIRE

is invaluable to the fastidious cook. It adds zest to her Gravies and spice to her Salads, and improves the flavor of Fish, Game and Soups. Its rare rich flavor makes it the most useful of all sauces.

Lea & Perrins' Sauce is in every well-equipped kitchen

John Duncan's Sons, Agents, New York

LITERARY NOTES.

Rambles in the Mississippi Valley.

The photographs by the author, Clifton Johnson, in "Highways and Byways of the Mississippi Valley," give one a more vivid idea of the picturesque features of the region than could be obtained from a library of descriptive writings. There are over sixty illustrations, most of them pictures of homely scenes in actual life, or of nature in characteristic and interesting sections of the vast valley. There are surprisingly realistic snapshots of plantation laborers in the cotton and sugar cane fields and in their cabins, of primitive dugouts and of houseboats and the water-gypsies, of colored mammies and pickaninnies, of alligator hunting, of "crap shooting," and quait playing.

In the text, Mr. Johnson is entertaining and instructive. As in his previous volumes of travel, he concerns himself with the humbler folk of the farmhouses and smaller villages, recording their conversations, their ways and habits, their familiar daily life and amusements, and always with simple art and sympathy. The author sought out the unconventional, living in rude quarters, and roughing it in the rustic hamlets along the historic river. There is an interesting chapter on Mark Twain's boyhood home, and the comments of the villagers on their distinguished townsman are quaint though slighting.

Published by The Macmillan Company, New York; $2 net.

The Princess Pocahontas.

"The Story of Pocahontas and Captain John Smith" is told and pictured by E. Boyd Smith of that ilk, for he may be descended from Captain John himself, although he boasts not thereof. At one time many of the first families of Virginia were glad to trace their descent to Pocahontas, and did so until the number outran all reasonable belief. In fact, the number of white ladies in Virginia descended from Pocahontas was exceeded only by the number of colored ladies who used to be nurse to George Washington.

Mr. Boyd Smith has made a pleasing volume of the life, adventures, and marriage of his great predecessor. It is told in a pleasing vein as if he himself believed it, which, as one knows, adds infinitely to the impression of truth seeming. No one who disbelieves in Santa Claus, for example, can ever convince a child that the good Saint exists. It is a pleasant story, whether it be strictly true or no. There are those of us who do not believe Indian Princesses are so pretty and so proper as was the daughter of the great King Powhatan. There once was a Plute Princess in Nevada, the daughter of Chief Winnemucca, who was called Sarah. Well-meaning Easterners, noting the thriftless ways of Sarah's paternal, took her "back East" with them, educated her at one of the great almshouse foundries, and would have started her in life. But most people get tired of Indians after a comparatively short period. The good Easterners got tired of Sarah Winnemucca and she floated back to Nevada. It was not long before the Princess Sarah went back to the wickiups and ways of her tribesmen and became the mock and jeer of Virginia City's streets. After a year or two all that remained of civilization in the Princess Sarah was a taste for bon-bons and a desire to wear high heeled boots.

But this Princess Pocahontas doubtless differed greatly from the Princess Sarah Winnemucca. She is certainly much prettier in the twenty-six colored pictures of Mr. E. Boyd Smith.

Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price $2.50 net.

An Important History of Korea.

Out of the fullness of his knowledge of, and sympathy for, Korea, the Poland of the Orient, Homer K. Hulbert has written an important and authoritative history of the country, with an account of the names of the people, the people, entitled, "The Passing of Korea." The Koreans have been frequently maligned, and seldom appreciated says the author. Over-shadowed by China in respect of numbers, and by Japan in respect of wit, their fates are such as follow in the wake of ignorance everywhere. Yet they have played a very important part in the history of the East, and enjoyed a high degree of civilization when Japan was made up of savage tribes. Korea's new birth can not come from Japan; the latter can bestow only what she has, the mere garments of Western life. Mr. Hulbert gives a narrative of the events that led up to the eventful night of November 17, 1905, when, "at the point of a sword, Korea acquiesced 'voluntarily' in the destruction of her independence."

Over sixty remarkable photographs illustrate the book.

Published by Doubleday, Page & Co., New York; $3.50 net.

Japan.

"Childreth's Japan As It Was and Is—A Handbook of Old Japan" now appears in a new edition with supplementary notes by Ernest W. Clement. The original edition is dated "Boston, June 1, 1885," the editor's preface is dated "Tokio, July 1, 1906," hence it is brought quite down to date. There is an illuminating "Fore-word" by William E. Griffie who was one of the first American teachers in Japan (1870-72). The work is in two volumes, and contains over one hundred illustrations and several maps. The pictures are mainly from photographs. An elaborate index is provided. The work is rendered particularly timely by the present strained relations existing between the United States and Japan.

Published by A. C. McClurg & Co.

A Nature Book.

"The Log of the Sun, a Chronicle of Nature's Year," by C. William Beebe, contains 52 full page illustrations by Walter King Stone with numerous vignettes and photographs from life. It is made up of 52 short essays, the subjects being the beauties of Nature in woods and fields. Parts of the text have been published in various periodicals. The following titles from the contents will indicate the nature of the book. "Birds of the Snow," "Cedar Birds and Berries," "Spring Songsters," "Insect Pirates and Submarines," "Secrets of the Ocean," "Night Music of the Swamp." The color illustrations, those printed in monotone, and the half-tones in black and white, are all excellently done. The work is an admirable piece of book-making.

Henry Holt & Co. $6.00 net.

History of the Panama Canal.

Willis Fletcher Johnson, for twenty-five years a close student of Isthmian Canal affairs, reminds the reader, in his book, "Four Centuries of the Panama Canal," that the design of Spanish adventures in the fifteenth century is being fulfilled by American engineers in the twentieth century. Columbus was the original promoter of the Panama Canal when he proposed a search for a water highway from Europe to Asia, westward, by way of the Atlantic. Mr. Johnson traces step by step the various enterprises and futile schemes which seldom went beyond the discussion of the survey. He believes the United States owes its work well, and that the skill and energy of our engineers are moving toward success where Ferdinand de Lesseps met with egregious failure. The author brings his data up to the present year.

The book is illustrated with portraits and views, and there are six interesting maps. At the conclusion of the volume, which contains some 450 pages, are copies of the several treaties, and other documents.

Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $3 net.

The Colorado Desert.

Those who have gazed through car windows at the monotonous wastes of the desert region of Southern California, or who have the popular conception that a desert is all sand, barren, unfruitful, without plant or animal life, will marvel at George Wharton James' description of its beauties and resources in "The Wonders of the Colorado Desert." Although Mr. James has limited his account to that portion of the desert confined within the counties of San Diego and Riverside, he has not exhausted the story of its tragedies and mysteries, its horticultural possibilities, its life, both of man and animals, its lost mines, its former bandits, and its wonderful river, in two good-sized volumes. The author has set down his observations and experiences with fascinating vividness.

In addition to the full-page illustrations from photographs, the work contains nearly 300 pen-and-ink sketches by Carl Eytel, who knows the Colorado Desert as no other man knows it.

Published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston; $5 net.

Heredia's Sonnets.

Edward Robeson Taylor has prepared a new edition of the "Sonnets from the Tropics of José-Maria de Heredia." Dr. Taylor has made a number of changes, recasting some of the sonnets almost entirely, and has added more notes. Those who delight in the sonnet form will be grateful to the translator for his labor of love. Dr. Taylor has reproduced the exquisite imagery and splendor of fancy of Heredia's verse with consummate art. Although Heredia's literary baggage is not large—he was elected to the French Academy because he wrote one hundred and eighteen sonnets—his fame is safe. His "Trophies" win "the world of letters in all the aggregation of their perfection and splendor" in 1893, introduced Heredia's work to discriminating readers, and since then the force and beauty of his sonnets have given them high place among the classics of that difficult form. Several notable poems by Dr. Taylor are included in the present volume.

Published by Paul Elder & Co., San Francisco.

Is Mars Inhabited?

"Mars and Its Canal," by Percival Lowell, is a review of past Martian discovery, and science's latest words on the strange markings on the planet's disk, which have baffled astronomers since they were first detected by Schiaparelli. Since Professor Lowell's first work on Mars was published, eleven years ago, the planet has approached the earth five times within suitable scanning distance. His continued work has confirmed his early conclusions: That the canals are of artificial origin, therefore Mars is inhabited by intelligent beings. The canals are interconnected in a regular manner, and it is supposed, they were built to husband the water that comes from the semi-annual melting at the poles. The book is written in a popular vein, and is profusely illustrated by maps and charts.

Published by The Macmillan Company; $2.50 net.

New Publications.

Finley Peter Dunne's latest Dooley book, "Disquisitions by Mr. Dooley," contains a number of papers that were followed by the laughter of the country when they first appeared. "Oats as a Food," "The Race Question," "The Labor Problem," and "The Automobile," are among the themes that the genial philosopher discusses with wisdom and sanity. Harper & Brothers, New York; $1.50.

Few books that have been published this season are more genuinely entertaining than "Random Rhymes and Odd Numbers," by Wallace Irwin. There are verses in every mood and every measure in the jingling collection, most of them frankly humorous, but one or two in a serious vein. The Macmillan Company; $1.50.

"Tiles from the Porcelain Tower" is the title of a volume of pleasing verse by Edward Gilchrist. Most of the poems are Oriental in theme and treatment.

The "Book Room," Boston; $1.25 net. Poems written "with vivid coloring of pain," by one who would have illumined California letters, if a few more years had been vouchsafed him, make up a little volume of verse by Stanley Coghlin, entitled "Hathor." It is the work of a rarely gifted writer. A. M. Robertson, San Francisco; 75 cents.

With a sympathy and intimate knowledge almost native, George William Knox discusses the awakening of the East, in "The Spirit of the Orient." Mr. Knox writes in entertaining and enlightening fashion on the peoples, customs and spirit of India, China, and Japan. The book is illustrated from photographs. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York; $1.50 net.

The story of a hustling boy and a wide-awake girl who invent wonderful machines which bring them into astonishing difficulties is told in Ernest Ingersoll's stirring tale for juveniles, entitled "Eight Secrets." Counterfeiters, Secret Service officers, railroad detectives, and other interesting people are involved in the mysteries of the story. The Macmillan Company, New York; $1.50.

The advice of the American Federation of Labor that trade unions enter politics has inspired Victor S. Clark to consider the political views of the Australian labor parties in an untechnical volume, "The Labour Movement in Australasia." The author's observations were made during visits to Australia and New Zealand under a Commission from the government. Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50 net.

"Half a Rogue," by Harold McGrath, illustrated by Harrison Fisher, is an up-to-date story concerning politics, bosses, labor unions, playwrights turned candidates, elections, defeats—ending, oddly enough, with a proposal of marriage. (Robbs-Merrill Co. $1.50.)

To Edmund Gosse.

Fame is a food that dead men eat—
I have no stomach for such meat.
In little light and narrow room,
They eat it in the silent tomb,
With no kind voice of comrade near
To bid the banquet be of cheer.

But Friendship is a nobler thing—
Of Friendship it is good to sing.
For truly, when a man shall end,
He lives in memory of his friend,
Who doth his better part recall,
And of his faults make funeral.

—Austin Dobson, in Century Magazine.

Books for Boys and Girls.

Two books to delight the hearts of little ones at Christmas time are "The Goose Girl" by Lucy Fitch Perkins, and "The Good Fairy and the Bunnies," by Allen Ayrault Green. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

A wholesome and merry story of four fun-loving girls and their adventures with their father, who is the author of an unprinted novel, and the plan by which the novel was published, is told in "Daddy's Daughters," by Marion A. Taggart. Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

THE LIQUEUR
OF POLITE SOCIETY

THE LIQUEUR
OF POLITE SOCIETY

LIQUEUR
Pères Chartreux

—GREEN AND YELLOW—

This famous cordial, now made at Tarragona, Spain, was for centuries distilled by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux) at the Monastery of La Grande Chartreuse, France, and known throughout the world as Chartreuse. The above cut represents the bottle and label employed in the putting up of the article since the monks' expulsion from France, and it is now known as Liqueur Pères Chartreux (the Monks, however, still retain the right to use the old bottle and label as well), distilled by the same order of monks, who have securely guarded the secret of its manufacture for hundreds of years, and who alone possess a knowledge of the elements of this delicious nectar.

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes.
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Sole Agents for United States.

P. Centemeri & Co.

KID GLOVES

New Location

1551 Van Ness Ave.

Between Pine and California

San Francisco

Blake's Book Store or
At the Sign of the Lamp
WHICH DO YOU PREFER?

A complete set of Dickens will be awarded to the writer of the best letter stating preference and giving reasons for same. Letter must be 150 words or less, and be received before Jan. 15th. Judges, Mr. Jerome Hart, Editor of The Argonaut, and Mr. T. F. Bonnet, Editor of Town Talk. Address letters to

JAMES D. BLAKE

now at 646 Van Ness Ave., near Turk St.

SPENCERIAN
STEEL PENS

Spencerian Pens are ink savers, time savers, temper savers.

They never balk or splutter the ink.

If you buy a dozen pens, or a box, you'll find each pen perfect and even of point.

There's a Spencerian Pen made that will just suit your style of writing.

We will send you a sample card of 12 pens, different patterns, upon receipt of 6 cents in postage.

SPENCERIAN PEN CO., 349 Broadway New York.

PARTICULAR PEOPLE

USE GOOD

Stationery

EMBOSSSED
LETTERHEADS FROM STEEL DIES

is one of our Specialties

WRITE FOR SAMPLES

Isaac Upham Co.

Stationers

Printers

Bookbinders

17th and Folsom Sts.
and Pine and Front Sts.

SAN FRANCISCO

ROBERTSON'S

NEW LOCATION

1539

Van Ness Ave., near Pine

"Next to the White House"

Mr. Robertson calls attention to the above address, which is very centrally located.

EDUCATIONAL

St. Matthew's Military School

Burlingame, California

Easter Term begins January 10, 1907

For illustrated catalogue address

REV. WILLIAM A. BREWER, Rector

IRVING INSTITUTE

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Accredited by the universities. Special advantages in music art, and elocution. Twenty-eighth year.

MISS PINKHAM and MISS MACLENNAN, Principals.

2126 California Street, San Francisco.

Easter Term opens Monday, January 7, 1907, 9 a. m.

MISS HARKER'S SCHOOL

Palo Alto, Cal. Home and Day School for Girls, Intermediate and Primary Departments. Certificate admits to Stanford Vassar and Wellesley. Number limited. Reopens August 20th.

MR. HUGO MANSFELDT

Announces his removal to 2090 Fell St., corner of Shradar. Telephone West 1736.

What Press Clippings Mean To You

Press clipping information is information you can obtain in no other way. As a business aid, Press Clippings will place before you every scrap of news printed in the country pertaining to your business. They will show you every possible market, big and little, for your goods, openings that you would never hear about in the ordinary way, and—they give you this information while it is fresh and valuable.

If you have a hobby or wish information upon any subject or topic, press clippings will give you any subject or topic, press clippings will give you all the current information printed on the subject.

The cost for any purpose is usually but a few cents a day. The International Press Clipping Bureau, the largest press clipping bureau in the world, reads and clips 55,000 papers and other periodicals each month, and even if you are now a subscriber to some other clipping bureau, it will pay you to investigate our superior service.

Write for our book about Press Clippings and our Daily Business Reports, and ask about The International Information Bureau, which supplies complete manuscripts or materials for addresses, essays, lectures and debates, and complete and reliable information upon any subject at a reasonable cost. Address

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Boyce Bldg., Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Town in Verse and Prose.

An anthology that will be received with a grateful greeting is "The Friendly Town," which contains over two hundred selections in verse and prose from some one hundred authors, compiled by that discriminating lover of choice literature, E. V. Lucas. Mr. Lucas calls his beautiful volume, "a little book for the urbane." It is a book for winter nights when Shut in from all the world without.

We sit the clean-winged hearth about.

Here are poems that one can not avoid reading aloud—to yourself, or a sympathetic single listener. More than one listener, as Lamb observes, and it degenerates into an audience. Here are exquisite bits in prose from the heart of books by Walpole, Pepys, Lowell, Lamb, Sir Thomas Browne, Hazlitt, Thackeray, Boswell, Hunt, Lang, Hawthorne, and other masters of English. None of the selections is too long, although Mr. Lucas is careful to cull complete passages. There are from ten to a score of old favorites under the following headings: Winter and Christmas; Friends and the Fire; More Friends; The Table and the Binn; Midnight Darlings; Music and Painting; The Play; Youth in the City; The Tavern; The Past; Two Londoners; Good Townsmen; The Courty Poets; The Post; The Wise Men; Awakening.

The publishers have given the gems artistic setting. The flexible covers are very handsomely designed in gold, and the end pages are illustrated from drawings by William Hyde. The book is a companion volume to "The Open Road," which contains classic selections celebrating the delights of country life, as "The Friendly Town" is compiled from authors who have loved the city.

Published by Henry Holt & Co., New York; $1.50.

Sketches of the Romantic Composers.

An interesting volume of essays on the so-called period of romanticism in music—the first half of the nineteenth century—is Daniel Gregory Mason's "The Romantic Composers." Mr. Mason has selected the composers who immediately followed Beethoven, including Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Berlioz, Chopin, and Liszt, to illustrate the musical peculiarities and aesthetic principles of the romantic school. While a technical mastery of music has little to do with the character of the composer, the author yet believes that temperament is reflected in compositions. With that as his keynote, he reveals to us the human side of the several maestros—characteristic anecdotes, hits of letters and table-talk, contemporary descriptions of manner, etc.

The composers of the nineteenth century were men of more cultivation, of greater intellectual versatility than their predecessors. Schubert alone of the six musicians in Mr. Mason's book, was a composer pure and simple.

The volume is illustrated by seven photogravures, several of them reproductions from paintings. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York; $1.75.

Italy in the Fifteenth Century.

Edward Hutton, author of "The Cities of Spain," and several books on Italian subjects, has written a volume on Italy during the Renaissance, "Sigismondo Pandolfo Malatesta, Lord of Rimini." In this story of a typical medieval Italian despot, Mr. Hutton writes fact as fiction. He wishes, he says, to give, in the form of a romance, an impression of the first part of the fifteenth century without using a single incident that is not authenticated; to write the life of one of those tyrants who were without morality, honor, or justice, yet in some way did subsequent generations signal service. While there is nothing in the book that might not appear in an historical or controversial work, the novel dress of the narrative makes of it a book that will be read with delight. The author is master of a vivid style, and his word-pictures of the period when wars were never seemed to end, and of the softer side of life, are very striking.

There are ten artistic illustrations in photogravure of bas-reliefs and a medal-image of the hero of the book. Published by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York; $4.00 net.

Pioneers of the Middle West.

"Pilots of the Republic," by Archer Butler Hulbert, the romance of the pioneer promoter in the Middle West, is history that reads like fiction. Beginning with Washington, as a promoter of Western investments, the author reviews the careers of Richard Henderson, the founder of Transylvania; Rufus Putnam, the father of Ohio; David Zeisberger, hero of "The Meadow of Light"; George Rogers Clark, founder of Louisville; Henry Clay, as promoter of the first American highway; Lewis and Clark, as explorers of Louisiana; and the more prominent companions of the valiant men who led the expedition that opened the West. The story of the achievements of the army of pioneers with axes on their shoulders is a marvelous chronicle, and the "miracle" they wrought in a century's time is one besides which the Seven Wonders of the Old World must forever remain commonplace.

There are sixteen portraits in photogravure, and illustrative initials by Walter J. Eoright. Published by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago; $1.50.

A Forty-Niner's Diary.

A kinetoscopic picture of mining life in California in the early Fifties that will be read with absorbing interest by the pioneers, who remember "when the water came up to Montgomery Street," and also their descendants, whose reminiscences will date from when "the fire reached Van Ness Avenue," is "The Diary of a Forty-Niner." The book purports to be a record of the experiences of one Alfred T. Jackson, a pioneer miner who cabinied and worked on Rock Creek, Nevada County, California; Chauncey L. Canfield is the editor. The entries range over a period of two years, and give a graphic account of the days when the Argonauts built their cabins beneath lofty sugar pines, baked their bread in the Dutch oven, ate their primitively cooked meals on rough planked tables, smoked their pipes in the gathering twilight while they discussed the luck of the day. Even if the diary be apocryphal, the book is still a notable contribution to the scant literature of the era subsequent to the discovery of gold.

Published by The Morgan Shepard Company, New York and San Francisco.

A One-Volume Shakespeare.

The Cambridge edition of "Shakespeare's Complete Works" will be welcomed by those who wish the dramas and poems in one volume. The text of the Cambridge Shakespeare is the result of an independent examination of the early Quarto and the First Folio editions. The editor, William Allan Nelson, has a summary biography of the Bard of Avon, and a special introduction to each play, giving the ascertained facts on such questions as date, authenticity and sources. Copious textual notes and a satisfactory glossary are appended.

The frontispiece is the "Droeshout Original" portrait of Shakespeare. The book is printed in clear type on opaque paper, and is so stitched that it opens easily and stays open. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston; cloth, $2.00.

Personal and Miscellaneous Gossip.

Still another mousing critic points out that Jack London's story, "A Wicked Woman," published in the November number of the Smart Set, is very much like a tale by Josephine Meighan, entitled "Her Past," printed in the New York Commercial Advertiser in 1903. In general motive and in climax there is to be noted a marked similarity when the two stories are shown side by side, and another peculiar coincidence of thought may now be placed in the ample collections.

The average public library subscriber reads 75 to 100 volumes a year, but a wealthy lady of Philadelphia, now 73 years old, has read more than 15,000 volumes from a library there since 1851, or 300 volumes a year.

It is announced that a forthcoming volume is "Fairy Tales Told by the Seven Travelers at the Red Lion Inn," compiled by David Belasco and Charles A. Byrne. A paragraph says that this is an extraordinary as the President's investigation into the ancient Irish sagas. Mr. Belasco has given us fairy tales before, but this is the first time he has acknowledged them.

William Shakespeare is the hero of a new and striking novel by the Danish woman writer, Sophus Banditz. Queen Alexandra, who recently read it in the original, was so much impressed by its merits that she advised the authoress to have it translated into English. This translation is now proceeding and the English version is to be dedicated to the Queen, who is, of course, herself a Dane.

The cottage at Nether Stowey, England, in which Coleridge wrote "The Ancient Mariner," "Christabel," and others of his finest poems is to be purchased and kept as far as possible in the state in which it was during the poet's residence. It was in this cottage that Coleridge entertained William and Dorothy Wordsworth, Charles Lamb, William Hazlitt, and others.

The Yudin collection of 80,000 volumes on Russia, one of the most extensive in existence, has been purchased in Krasnoyarsk, Siberia, for the Congressional Library at Washington.

In Herr Paulsen's "Recollections" of the dead master, are these words: "Ibsen once remarked in my presence that there were three things he did not care about—children, flowers, and music." It is not surprising that in Ibsen's eyes "modern society is not a human society."

Jeremiah Curtin, a distinguished linguist and philologist and well known also as a translator of Russian and Polish novels, died December 14 at Bristol, Vt., aged 66. Mr. Curtin was proficient in sixty languages, excelling as a linguist, it is said, any other man. He was born in Milwaukee and after his graduation from Harvard in 1863 he became secretary of the United States legation in Russia and later acting consul there. He then spent several years in literary work in London and other European capitals. He traveled with the party of the Grand Duke Alexis when the latter visited the United States in 1872. In 1883 he began his long connection with the Smithsonian Institution, in the bureau of ethnology. In 1891 he retired from this work. He was a close friend of Henry Sienkiewicz long before the author of "Quo Vadis" became noted and it was Curtin's English translation which made the book popular in America. The following is a list of works which he has published: "Myths and Folk Tales of Ireland," "Myths and Folk Tales of the Russians," "Western Slavs and Magyars," "Hero Tales of Ireland," "Fairy Tales of Ireland," "Creation Myths of Primitive America and Their Relation to the Religious and Mental History of Mankind," "The Mongols," "Religion and Ideas of the Mongol Race." In addition to his translation of "Quo Vadis," Mr. Curtin has worked into English eight other novels by Sienkiewicz.

STAGE GOSSIP.

Dramatic Notes.

The testimonial benefit to Henry Clay Barnabee and the widow of W. H. MacDonald at the Broadway Theatre in New York, was an event of note for players and public. The list of stars and other members of the profession who appeared is a long one, and the audience was no less distinguished and enthusiastic. The programme was long and varied, and, best of all the net results were large.

Francis Macmillen, the young American violinist, who had already won high praise in London and on the Continent, is now on his first concert tour in this country. At his first appearance in New York the critics were enthusiastic in describing his success.

Peter F. Dailey actually knits fancy work in the third scene of the burlesque, "The Great Decide," and he donated some specimens to be sold at the Professional Women's League bazaar at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York a few days ago.

Lillian Russell will appear in Kellett Chambers's new comedy, "The Butterfly," in fifty-two towns in twenty-three States of the South and Middle West in sixteen weeks, beginning early in the year.

Second Week of Grand Opera.

The second week of the Lambardi Opera Company at the Central Theatre will see Verdi's famous opera, "Rigoletto," on Monday and Thursday evenings, and at the Saturday matinee, with Sig. Angelo Antola as the Jester; the favorite tenor Domenico Russo as the Duke; Sig. Olinto Lambardi as the Bravo; the pretty, piquante song bird Adalina Tromben as the daughter Gilda, and Maria Millon, as Maddalena, the bravo's sister.

At the New Year's matinee Puccini's great work "La Boheme" will be given with Velia Giorgi as Mimì; Bianca Nunez as Musetta; Salveneschi as Rodolfo; Scifoni as Marcello; Lambardi as Shaunard, and Canetti as Colline.

Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, Verdi's greatest triumph, "Il Trovatore," will be sung with an all-star cast, including Esther Adaberto as Leonora; Matilde Campofiore as Azucena; Filippo D'Attavi as Manrico; Roberto Scifoni as the Count di Luna, and Ugo Canetti as Ferrando. This opera was one of Adaberto's greatest successes in Italy and Russia, and her rendition of the unhappy heroine is said to be one of the finest dramatic and vocal performances on the operatic stage. "Faust" will be repeated on Wednesday evening and at the Saturday matinee, with Giorgi, Millon, Patti, Paccini, and Lambardi in the cast.

The repertoire for the third week will include "La Tosca," with Adaberto; "The Barber of Seville," with Tromben; and "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" with all the Italian opera stars in the cast.

For the fourth week several new operas are promised—"Chopin," "Iris," and "Germania," in addition to "The Masked Ball," "L'Africaine" and "The Elixir of Love."

The Orpheum.

May Edouin and Fred Edwards will make their first appearance in this city at the Orpheum this Sunday afternoon. Miss Edouin's mother, Alice Atherton, was a great favorite in the early days of musical comedy and extravaganza in San Francisco, and the daughter is said to have inherited exceptional talent. Mr. Edwards is a clever and versatile performer, and their skit, "A Bachelor's Dream," will receive a warm welcome. Emelia Rose, recently from Europe, is also new here. She does some remarkable feats of foot balancing and is assisted in her act by two well-trained and accomplished little canines. Other attractions include "Menetekel," the extraordinary illusion, Ned Wayburn's "Rain Dears," Ed. F. Reynard, the ventriloquist, Walter C. Kelly, "The Virginia Judge," Work and Ower, the acrobatic comedians, and Wilson's monkey, "Jessie." On the grounds of the Chutes, where the Orpheum is located, are to be found attractions of every description. The Circle Swing, "A Day in the Alps," Scenic Railway, trip "Down the Flume," and numerous other amusement devices are popular, while the Zoo contains one of the finest collections of animals in the United States.

The Novelty Theatre.

James O'Neill, a sterling actor, whose fame is as closely connected with "Monte Cristo" as was that of Jefferson with "Rip Van Winkle," is appearing this season in a revival of the dramatization of Dumas's great romance. Mr. O'Neill will appear at the Novelty Theatre all next week in "Monte Cristo," with a strong supporting company. Younger theatre-goers, and older ones as well, will find the attraction to their taste, as the play is full of action and striking stage pictures.

Hotel St. Francis

a credit to
San Francisco

PERFECT SERVICE
EVERY COMFORT

THEY WHO GO TO SEE
GO
TO STAY

The famous
Grill Room
is unsurpassed

Take your friends to lunch there

AMUSEMENTS.

ORPHEUM

Week Commencing Sunday Matinee Dec. 30
Matinee Every Day Except Monday

MAY EDOUIN and FRED EDWARDS, presenting "A BACHELOR'S DREAM," EMELIA ROSE, in Her Novelty Acrobatic Act; and last week of the

Orpheum Road Show

PRICES—10c, 25c, 50c. Down town Box Office
at Donlon's Drug Store, Fillmore and Sutter Sts.
Phone, West, 6,000.
CHUTES AND ZOO—Open daily from 10 a. m. till midnight. Admission 10c; Children 5c.

Central Theatre

Market and 8th Sts. Phone, Market 777

LAMBARDI Grand Italian
Opera Company

Matinee this afternoon at 2:15 - - - "LUCIA"
Tonight and tomorrow (Sunday) matinee - - - "AIDA"
Tomorrow evening - - - "FAUST"

NEXT WEEK
Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday, Sunday matinee, "RIGOLETTO"
Tuesday, Saturday, Sunday matinee, "IL TROVATORE"
Wednesday night and Sunday matinee, "FAUST"
Friday night - - - "LA BOHEME"
Special Mat. (Tuesday) N. Year's Day "LA BOHEME"
Superb Casts
Enlarged Orchestra
Splendid Chorus
Correct Costumes
PRICES—$2., $1.50, $1., 75c and 50c. Boxes, $21.
$3.50 per seat. SEATS NOW SELLING. Box office open 9 A. M. to 10 P. M.

Novelty Theatre

Cor. O'Farrell and Steiner
Sunday Night, Dec. 30th, last time of "Yon Yonson"
Beginning Monday, Dec. 31st—two weeks
First appearance here in over ten years
JAMES O'NEILL
Firt week including special matinee, New Year's Day Regular matinee Saturday—Great revival of "MONTE CRISTO"
Second Week—"The Voice of the Mighty"
PRICES—$1.50 to 25c

RACING! RACING!
NEW CALIFORNIA
JOCKEY CLUB

OAKLAND TRACK

Six or more Races each Week Day
RAIN OR SHINE
Races start at 1:40 P. M. sharp

For Special Trains stopping at the Track take the
S. P. Ferry, foot of Market Street, leaves at 12, thereafter every twenty minutes until 1:40 p. m.
No smoking in last two cars, which are reserved for ladies and their escorts.
Returning, trains leave the track after fifth and
last races.
PERCY W. TREAT, Sec.
THOMAS H. WILLIAMS, Pres.

These trade-mark and cross lines on every package
Cresco Grits and
(Formerly called CRUTCHER'S GRITS)
BARLE CRUSTALS,
Perfect Breakfast and Health Cereals
PANSY FLOUR for Pastry, Cake and Biscuit
Unlike all other goods. Ask grocers.
For book of sample, write
FARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N. Y., U. S. A.

Headquarters for Renting
Pianos. Little pianos for small rooms. Medium size pianos for average rooms.
Big pianos for big rooms.

YOU WILL SAVE MONEY
BY RENTING THEM FROM

Scott-Curtaz

560 Hayes Street

VANITY FAIR.

A crusade against woman's alleged extravagance in dress is being organized in Berlin by Felix Heinemann, a leading German publisher. His scheme is to form an international league to fight against the passion of most women for ultraluxurious costly clothes and ornaments.

As an object lesson in the lengths to which women will go in arraying themselves, Herr Heinemann proposes that illustrated books shall be published in Berlin, New York, Paris and London, with photographs showing fashionable women of all nations wearing gorgeous gowns, rich furs, and magnificent jewelry.

The pictures are to be accompanied by letterpress describing the careers and habits of the women, specially noting their methods of spending their money; the object being, of course, to point out the waste on fashion as practiced by wealthy people.

Herr Heinemann thinks that such a book would be a powerful argument for a return to sane and simple tastes.

Some of the most noted Parisian artists have contrived to transform Edmond Rostand's country home, Arnaga, into a fairyland. The walls of his magnificent apartments, whose windows look out over the crest of the Pyrenees, are covered with the ever-delightful tales which Hans Christian Andersen and the Grimm brothers have immortalized.

But the gem of this poet's dwelling is his wife's boudoir. Familiar stories of "Cinderella" and the "Beauty and the Beast" are told again, with a wealth of color and fantasy, by the famous decorator, Jean Weber.

In this artistic retreat, which is a happy combination of Byzantine palace and Basque chalet, Rostand lives part of the year, with his wife and son, in a retirement only broken to receive some brother poet or an artist friend, who is requested never to mention Paris and its strenuous ways.

To escape from the continual excitement of city life and the feverish search for amusement found at fashionable resorts, and also to be able to devote himself entirely to work, the creator of "Cyrano" fled eight years ago to the half-savage and wholly picturesque fastness of the Spanish frontier. First he rented a tiny cottage, nestled against a tiny church. But his view lacked the traditional poesy and splendor of Basque landscapes, so he built Arnaga. It is not constructed along the conventional lines of the French chateau, but standing on a high hill, surrounded by parks and terraces, it at first gives the impression of a Moorish palace.

Those who wonder how Rostand's earnings as a dramatist suffice to keep up such a pretentious establishment forget that he married Rosemonde Gerard, the daughter of a Paris banker. Her millions are the magic wand which called into being this fairy castle.

On one side it overlooks a verdant plain, sprinkled with semi-tropical blossoms and watered by the winding stream of the Nive. On the other rises a majestic chain of rugged hills, which in the glory of the Southern sunset flush to a deep crimson and then pale to a somber purple.

Not in years has death claimed so remarkable a centenarian as Miss Adeline Thomson, a belle of long ago, who has just passed away in Philadelphia, (notes an editorial writer in the New York World).

Miss Thomson was born when Jefferson was President, and she lived to be one hundred and three. Punctilious in social conventions to the end—still wearing full evening dress at dinner—she was a picturesque figure from a society which gave tone to American manners long before the day of that "proud old rayjeem," as Mr. Dooley says, "which has ruled the wurruld iv fashion since th' repeal iv th' Sherman act." She was an antique portrait such as Boston, Baltimore and Charleston may still occasionally show, removed from its familiar background of Chippendale and chintz—a madeira survival in an age of champagne and froth.

What a career it was, begun with a girlhood passed under Dolly Madison traditions and lasting through Nellie Grant to the latest bride of the White House! To have spanned a century of American society while maintaining an alert interest in it to the last was a rare distinction. What a story of fashion's vagaries the old presses and trunks in her home could tell, from the clinging Empire draperies through the voluminous crinoline and the chignon to the sober tailored skirt! Though a good American, the sister of a Senator and a Rear-Admiral, Miss Thomson swore allegiance to Victoria and Eugenie in turn and to the Princess who succeeded them as ruler of the world of modes.

She danced with beaux resplendent in ruffled shirts and satin "smalls," and again with fastidious gentlemen arrayed in blue swallow-tails and white waistcoats, and in her later years with partners in conventional black. Yet she remained heart-whole and unweid. But what an aunt she must have been to three generations of debutantes!

The news of the birth of his grandson is said to have come to the Kaiser in anything but a ceremonious way. The Kaiser was cruising on the Hohenzollern in Norwegian waters, and anchored off Bergen, where Dr. Oscar Stuebel, the German minister at Christiania went aboard. Dr. Stuebel and the German consul at Bergen were commanded to remain to lunch, and during a momentarily conversational pause the consul casually remarked: "The flags flying in the town ought to show your majesty how the Norwegian people rejoice over the birth of your august grandson."

This remark gave the emperor the first intimation of the birth of a son to the crown princess. The emperor pounded the table with his fist so that the plates and the glasses clattered and turning to Dr. Stuebel who sat next to him, exclaimed: "Fellow, must I learn this news merely as an item of casual gossip?"

Every one present looked at the unfortunate Stuebel, who turned as pale as the table cloth and tremblingly confessed that he had forgotten four hundred telegrams which had arrived at Bergen for the emperor.

Messengers steamed full speed ashore to bring the telegrams. The first one the emperor opened was from Abdul Hamid and requesting the messenger to bring a telegraph blank, and apparently regaining his good humor, the Kaiser, addressing a dispatch to the crown prince, wrote:

"I have just learned from the Sultan that a son has been born to you."

"Any one who swears," declared the Bishop of Carlisle, "manifests the beggarliness of his vocabulary." The Concord Patriot puts it in this fashion:

"People swear because they do not know the possibilities of plain English, or have not the skill to manipulate it so that it will yield the amount of fire they want. You can do almost any thing with common words. No matter how tame and lifeless they look, standing in stupid rows as if they didn't know enough to come in when it rained, they can be made to dance like imps, to frolic like fairies, to float, angel-wise, on light wings, to glow like fire spirits. They can do things that make the ordinary bits of profanity look like feeble scarecrows stiffened up with a fence stake. The cure for profanity—reformers and educators please make a note—is merely wit enough to handle your words so that swearing will seem like baby talk in comparison."

Now America's leading papers are printing the extract from the Concord Patriot and London's leading papers are commenting on the sermon of the Bishop of Carlisle, because both men had a new phrasing of an old idea. That idea was the futility of profanity.

There is one oath, however, of which the language should not be deprived, (declares the New York Evening Mail editorially). "Much virtue in an 'if,'" is conceded. Much more virtue in a "damn!" It must not be uttered often. To be effective, it must be explosive and unexpected. The censors of swearing whose words we have quoted with approval had in mind the dribblers of profanity—the weaklings not only of language, but of life.

We are content to let the women decide whether a modicum of swearing is not needed for use in emergencies. Do not they, themselves, sometimes feel called upon to close a door so quickly that the "slam" sound really constitutes a wooden swear word? Do they not some times solace their souls and relax their nerves by forming their lips into the "D" position even though they may end by uttering only "Dear me!" Do they not revel in spirit, even though they afterward reprove the speaker, when a clean-thoughted, clean-lived, deep-voiced man is surprised into a resounding "Damn!"

Swearing as a habit is the mark of the imbecile, the vulgarian or the blackguard. But there is something wrong with the man from whose lips there never has sprung an oath unstudied and unexpected, but resonant with the full strength of resentment, indignation, or the note of strife.

The Man Shopper.

(By W-Jt Wb-tm-n.)

I am a man shopper.
I am one of a million souls, and yet I am a million souls in one.
I stride hither and thither, looking for something to give to Lizzie, and for the talking doll for my sister's cousin's niece.
I have in my vest pocket the list. Mine is one of a million vest pockets, and mine is a million vest pockets in one.
I must find pearl-handled opera-glasses for Cousin Jennie (if I can get anything decent for $3.89).
I must get a hundred other things, for this is the season of joy and gladness.

I am the man shopper.
I feel that my heart is big within me. I unbutton my vest to give it room.
I say my heart is big and I unbutton my vest, and a Kind Old Lady warns me that I am tempting the pneumony.

I wonder what the world would do without Kind Old Ladies. (Confound it, Madam, you may be kind, but your umbrella's jabbed me in the short ribs.)
I asked the man in the wondrous apparel at the door to direct me to the novelty counter. I am gone, but he is still telling me how to go there.
I shall follow the crowd. I am the crowd. I am embodied gladness. I am the ebullient soul of all those that seek pledges of affection for friends and kindred.

I am the man shopper.
I wonder what friends and kindred would do without us.
I see a man with a game eye and a striped cravat. He is buying a silver flask. He is bappy. He is kicking about his change.
I see a man in a frock coat and a white tie—a pastor. He is sporting the slipper counter and looking for members of his flock.
I am bumped into by a cash boy; I am scolded by a woman with a pompadour and a trusting child for stepping on her dress.

I am the man shopper.
I bear a hundred gay girls giggle about what they will get for him. I also hear them gurgle about what he ought to get for them.
I am pained. I have leaned against some bolly. I am told by another floor walker how to get to the novelty counter.

I tell him how to go somewhere else.
I am asked by seven hundred people if I have been waited on.
I am full of the fierce joy of being in and among, and up, and through, and altogether and utterly of the great mass of humanity.
I feel Tiny Timmified, and all the world may hang up its stocking.
I am the ——— For the last time, sir, get off my feet.

—W. D. Nesbit, in Chicago Tribune.

The five tunnels on the Southern Pacific Bay Shore cut-off have been completed. Their aggregate length is 1.9 miles. All five tunnels have cement floors and walls, and are brick roofed. They are electric-lighted and have a clear width of thirty feet. Only the track-laying remains to complete the line, aside from bridge work in San Francisco. The double track line should be ready for operation in March. Work has been commenced on the Dumbarton bridge, and it will probably be completed by midsummer.

W. & J. SLOANE & CO.

are now showing complete lines of

Carpets, Rugs, Furniture, Office Desks, Upholstery
Draperies, Linoleums, Window Shades, Etc.

at their new store at the corner of

Van Ness Avenue and Sutter Street

Nordhoff
Grill1545 Pine Street
Below Van Ness Ave.Finest and Largest Dining Room in the CityMerchants' Lunch 11 A. M. to 2 P. M. DailyLadies' Afternoon Teas
and Dinner Parties a Specialty

SIEVERS FLORAL CO.

1660 California Street, near Van Ness Ave.

Choicest Collection of Plants, Flowers and Holiday Baskets

PHONES: Franklin 1015
Franklin 1014

L. KREISS & SONS

CABINET MAKERS
UPHOLSTERERS
DECORATORS

Dealers in Fine Mahogany, Early English Oak Furniture; reproductions of rare examples of Antique Fabrics of all the important periods of English, French and Italian Arts in Tapestries, Brocaded Silks, Damasks, Embroideries, Etc.

Our stock is complete and contains many Odd Pieces suitable for Gifts.

1219-23 POST ST.

Above Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

Murphy, Grant & Company

Jobbers of Dry Goods Furnishing Goods and Notions

Temporary Office: Eighth and Franklin Sts., Oakland, Cal.

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A golfing judge, according to the story, had occasion to interrogate in a criminal suit a boy witness from Bala. "Now, my lad," he said, "I want to know if you are acquainted with the nature and significance of an oath?" The boy, raising his brows in surprise, answered: "Of course I am, sir. Don't I caddy for you at the Country Club?"

A farmer on his first visit to New York was ignorant of city ways. "Everything was fine," this farmer said, when he got back home from New York. "Everything was fine except the light. They kept the light burning in my room all night long—a thing I ain't used to, and I couldn't sleep on account of it." "Well, Hi, why didn't you blow it out?" said his wife. "Blow it out? How could I?" said the farmer. "The blame thing was inside a bottle."

At a recital it so happened that two ladies were making their way to their seats at the very moment Von Buelow finished his introduction of the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata Pathetic. This so irritated him that he purposely commenced the allegro at such an absurdly slow pace as to make the quavers in the bass correspond exactly to the time of the ladies' footsteps. As may be imagined, they felt on thorns, and hurried on as fast as they could, while Von Buelow accelerated his tempo in sympathy with their increasing pace.

A lawyer in Washington was telling some colleagues of neat retorts he had heard in court, when he was reminded of the interchange of compliments between a Western judge and a sharp-tongued attorney from Chicago. The judge, a quick-tempered man, had had several "run-ins" with counsel, when suddenly he observed: "I can teach you law, Mr. Perkins, but I can not teach you manners." "That is true, your honor," retorted the Chicago lawyer.

Senator Long, of Kansas, was rather diffident when he went to his first big reception in Washington, at the home of Senator Elkins. Mrs. Long tried to steer him down the line and succeeded admirably. When they had shaken hands with everybody Long mopped his face and said: "Well, my dear, I guess I got through that all right, and I think I knew everybody with one exception. Tell me, who was that man at the end of the line with whom I shook hands." "That," Mrs. Long replied freely, "was the butler."

Among the interested visitors at the marine barracks at Washington on one occasion there was a party of young girls from a Maryland town. They proved very much interested in everything pertaining to the life and discipline of the post. "What do you mean by 'taps'?" asked one young woman. "Taps are played every night on the bugle," answered the officer. "It means 'lights out.' They play it over the bodies of dead soldiers." A puzzled look came to the face of the questioner. Then she asked: "What do you do if you haven't a dead soldier?"

A well-known Washington correspondent, when a reporter on the New York Tribune, was sent one Saturday night to interview Father Ducey, a priest famous both for his wit and his good deeds. Father Ducey was in the confessional, Norcross was told, and that he could go in and see him, and come out before anybody went in, without any doubt. He found the reverend father waiting and began a timorous conversation with him, being somewhat awed by his unaccustomed surroundings. "Good-evening, Father." "Good-evening, my son." "Father, I am a reporter from the New York Tribune." "Very well: I absolve you from that."

Bernard K. Green, the well-known consulting engineer of Washington, said the other day, in a discussion of the new Pennsylvania Capitol, which he helped to build: "The trouble with every question is that self-seeking enters into it. Were there no self-seekers, the world would be a very Utopia. But as it is—" He smiled. "Why, yesterday," he said, "in a talk about filtration in a cafe, I heard a well-dressed man say earnestly: 'I maintain that all water used for drinking and culinary purposes should be boiled at least one hour.' 'You are a physician, I presume?' said a thin man, respectfully. 'No, sir,' was the reply, 'I am a coal dealer.'"

Joseph Choate, when he was a very young man, just starting out to practice law, was once retained by a shopkeeper to defend him in a suit for damages brought by an employee. Unfortunately for Mr. Choate, his client lost his head completely under cross-examination, furnishing evidence so favorable to the prosecution as to result in a five thousand dollar verdict. The merchant was, nevertheless, highly indignant with his lawyer for having lost the case, and when they encountered each other at the court-room door, he blustered: "If I had a son born an idiot I'd make him a lawyer." "Your father seems to have been of another opinion," replied young Choate, coolly.

Colonel John Cosgrove, afterward Congressman, defending a client accused of some crime, in an eloquent climax shouted: "What does the State's attorney expect? Does he expect my client, like Daniel, to command the sun to stand still, and have it obey?" Judge James W. Draffen, lawyer for the opposition, interrupted: "May it please your Honor," he said, addressing Judge James E. Hazell, who was on the bench, "I object to Colonel Cosgrove's misquoting Scripture." "I beg pardon," blandly replied Colonel Cosgrove, "I forgot for the moment that it was not Daniel, but Solomon, who commanded the sun to stand still."

DIVIDEND NOTICES.

The Continental Building and Loan Association, corner of Market and Church sts., San Francisco, Cal., has declared for the six months ending Dec. 31, 1906, a dividend of 5 per cent per annum on ordinary deposits and 6 per cent per annum on term deposits—interest on deposits payable on and after Jan. 2, 1907. Interest on ordinary deposits not called for will be added to the principal and thereafter bear interest at the same rate.

WASHINGTON DODGE, President.
WILLIAM CORBIN, Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—THE RENTERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY of San Francisco, Commercial and Savings Bank, Safe Deposit Vaults, 115 Hayes Street, between Van Ness Ave. and Polk St.—For the half year ending Dec. 15th, a dividend has been declared at the rate of FOUR per cent (4%) per annum on Savings Deposits, free of taxes payable on and after Monday, Dec. 17, 1906. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from Dec. 15, 1906. Also, Two per cent (2%) per annum paid on Commercial Deposits, subject to check, credited monthly.

C. S. SCOTT, Cashier.

Dated, San Francisco, Dec. 4, 1906.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, 706 Market St., opp. 3d.—For the half year ending December 31, 1906, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one-half (3½) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1907. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1907.

GEORGE A. STORY, Cashier.

SECURITY SAVINGS BANK, 316 Montgomery St.—For the half-year ending December 31, 1906, dividends upon all deposits at the rate of three and one-half (3½) per cent. per annum free of taxes, will be payable on and after January 2, 1907.

FRED W. RAY, Secretary.

HOME MUTUAL DEPOSIT LOAN CO.

SAINT MUNGO BUILDING.

1300 Golden Gate Ave.

Dividend of five (5) per cent. per annum declared for six months ending December 31, 1906.

GEO. M. MITCHELL, President.

E. B. CLARK, Secretary.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY.

526 California Street.

For the half year ending December 31, 1906, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and six-tenths (3 6-10) per cent. per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1907. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from January 1, 1907.

GEORGE TOURNY, Secretary.

SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION.

N. W. Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

For the half year ending December 31, 1906, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and eight-tenths (3 8-10) per cent. on term deposits and three and forty-two one-hundredths (3 42-100) per cent. on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1907. Depositors are entitled to draw their dividends at any time during the succeeding half year. Dividend not drawn will be added to the deposit account, become a part thereof and earn dividend from January 1st.

LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

CALIFORNIA SAFE DEPOSIT AND TRUST CO.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

For the six months ending December 31, 1906, dividends have been declared on the deposits in the savings department of this company as follows: On term deposits at the rate of 3 6-10 per cent. per annum, and on ordinary deposits at the rate of 3 3-4 per cent. per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2nd, 1907. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as principal from January 1st, 1907. INTEREST PAID FROM DATE OF DEPOSIT.

J. DALZELL BROWN, Manager.

MECHANICS SAVINGS BANK.

143 Montgomery St., cor. Bush.

For the half year ending December 31, 1906, a dividend has been declared on all savings deposits, free of taxes, at the rate of three and one-half (3½) per cent. per annum, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2nd, 1907. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as principal from January 1st, 1907. INTEREST PAID FROM DATE OF DEPOSIT.

JNO. U. CALKINS, Cashier.

BANKING.

The Anglo Californian Bank, Limited

This old and well-known institution has become so thoroughly identified with the financial and commercial development of San Francisco, during the past thirty-five years, that its name is synonymous with prosperity and advancement.

The management has been quick to recognize the changes in the business districts, brought about by the fire, and in order to meet the convenience of its clients and the business public generally, has established branches on Van Ness Avenue, near Geary Street, and at No. 2049 Mission Street, near Sixteenth, the latter being temporary quarters, pending completion of its four-story Class A building, now in the course of erection on the northwest corner of Sixteenth and Mission Streets.

The last published statement of the Bank's condition shows as follows:

Loans.....	$7,242,714.62	Capital.....	$1,500,000.00
Bonds and Stocks....	1,294,293.06	Surplus and Undivided Profits..	1,272,634.28
Bank Premises and Real Estate.....	145,212.16	Deposits.....	12,880,511.02
Cash and Sight Exchge.	6,970,925.46
	$15,653,145.30		$15,653,145.30

Safe Deposit Vaults in a Safe Deposit Building

Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS

These Safe Deposit Vaults have withstood the Greatest Test to which Safe Deposit Vaults have ever been subjected, and are in the same condition as on April 17, 1906—entirely unaffected by earthquake or fire—

The Strongest and Best Appointed Safe Deposit Vaults in the West

Special Attention to Overnight Storage of Ledgers

INSPECTION CORDIALLY INVITED

464 California Street

San Francisco, California

French American Bank

Union Trust Building (Third Floor)

Ready to accommodate its customers and do a general banking business. We will collect on insurance policies for those wishing our services.

THE FRENCH SAVINGS BANK

occupies offices in the same building.

Officers—Charles Carpy, President; Arthur Legallet, Vice-President; Leon Boqueraz, Vice-President.

Directors—J. E. Artigues, O. Bozio, J. A. Bergot, E. J. DeSable, J. M. Dupas, J. S. Godeau, J. J. Mack, Geo. Belaney, Leon Kaufman.

Our Branch Bank is Now Open

at No. 810 Van Ness Avenue, near Eddy St.

Mutual Savings Bank

710 Market St., Opposite Third

SAN FRANCISCO

Guaranteed Capital.....	$ 1,000,000
Paid-up Capital.....	300,000
Surplus.....	320,000
Assets.....	10,000,000

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities.

Officers—President, James D. Phelan; First Vice-President, S. G. Murphy; Second Vice-President, John A. Hooper; Secretary and Cashier, Geo. A. Story; Asst. Secretary and Asst. Cashier, C. B. Holson; Attorney, Frank J. Sullivan.

Directors—James D. Phelan, John A. Hooper, Frank J. Sullivan, Jas. M. McDonald, S. G. Murphy, James Moffitt, Roht. McElroy, Charles Holbrook, Rudolph Spreckels.

THE GERMAN SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

526 California Street, San Francisco

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....	$ 2,552,719.61
Capital actually paid up in cash.....	1,000,000.00
Deposits, June 30, 1906.....	38,476,520.22

F. Tillmann, Jr., President; Daniel Meyer, First Vice-President; Emil Rohde, Second Vice-President; A. H. R. Schmidt, Cashier; Wm. Herrmann, Asst. Cashier; Geo. Tourny, Secretary; A. H. Muller, Asst. Secretary; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

Board of Directors:

F. Tillmann, Jr., Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohde, Ign. Steinhart, I. N. Walter, N. Ohlandt, F. W. Van Bergen, E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

PAYING BY CHECK THE BETTER WAY

Steamer Day will soon be only a memory. Progressive San Francisco merchants now mail checks when accounts are due instead of keeping large sums of money on hand and waiting for a collector to call. It's a better, safer and far more convenient way.

The California Safe Deposit and Trust Company

Extends an invitation to all San Francisco merchants—large or small—to open an account at its Home Office or most convenient branch. The Bank pays interest on checking accounts and treats its patrons with utmost courtesy.

HOME OFFICE

California and Montgomery Streets

West End Branch.....1531 Divisadero
Mission Branch.....927 Valencia
Uptown Branch.....1740 Fillmore near Sutter

Helping the Homeless

The Continental Building and Loan Association

Has helped build up several interior towns and cities of California but for the next few years its funds will be used to help restore the burned homes of San Francisco

Dr. Washington Dodge, President
Gavin McNab, Attorney
Wm. Corbin, Sec'y and Gen'l Mgr.

Office: Corner Market and Church Streets

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

Ready for business at 1165 O'FARRELL ST., bet. Franklin and Gough

Pianos Tuned, Repaired, Moved and Stored

SOHMER-CECILIAN PLAYER-PIANOS

PERSONAL.

Notes and Gossip.

A chronicle of the social happenings during the past week in the cities on and around the Bay of San Francisco will be found in the following department:

It is announced that the wedding of Miss Elsa Lichtenberg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Lichtenberg, to Mr. Harry Disbrow Johnson, will take place on Wednesday afternoon, January 2, at 3 o'clock, at St. Paul's Church, San Rafael.

The wedding of Miss Katharine Powers, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George Herman Powers, to Mr. Edward Russell Chapman took place on Wednesday at St. Paul's Church, San Rafael, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The ceremony was performed by Bishop Nichols, assisted by the Rev. Ernest Bradley, rector of the parish. Miss Ruth Powers, the bride's sister, was the maid of honor and Miss Mary Foster, Miss Mabelle Toy, Miss Ida Wilhelm and Miss Grace Dollar were the bridesmaids. Mr. Allen Powers, the bride's brother, was the best man and the ushers were Mr. Wilberforce Williams, Mr. Spencer Bishop, Mr. W. J. Ward and Dr. Donald Smith. About 500 invitations were sent out to the ceremony but there was no reception afterwards. After their wedding journey Mr. and Mrs. Chapman will go to Detroit to make their future home.

Miss Jennie Crocker will be the hostess at a ball at "Uplands", her home at San Mateo, on Wednesday next, at which she will entertain a large number of guests. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McNear entertained at a dinner on Friday evening of last week at the home of Mrs. McNear's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hopkins, on California street. Miss Jennie Crocker was the guest of honor and sixteen guests were present.

Miss Helene Irwin will be formally presented as a debutante at a large tea to be given early in January by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William G. Irwin, the date of which has not yet been decided upon. Mrs. Mary Prentice Huntington will entertain at a tea on New Year's day in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Huntington, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Brockway Metcalf.

The members of the Claremont Country Club will give a ball at their club house on New Year's eve, to which a large number of guests will be invited.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin was the hostess at a theatre party recently at which her guests were: Mr. and Mrs. William G. Irwin, Mr. and Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt, Miss Helene Irwin, and Count de la Rocca.

Mr. and Mrs. George Armsby entertained at a dinner on Friday of last week at the Palace Hotel. Their guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Driscoll, Miss Gertrude Jolliffe, Miss Armsby, Mr. Frothingham, and Mr. Raymond Armsby.

Mrs. Albert P. Niblack, the wife of Commander Niblack, U. S. N., entertained at a tea last week on board the U. S. S. Charleston, at Santa Barbara, in honor of Admiral and Mrs. Swinburne.

Mrs. Charles G. Lyman was the hostess at a luncheon at the Palace Hotel last week at which her guests were: Mrs. Charles Farquharson, Mrs. Bray, Mrs. Mark Gerstle, Mrs. William Gerstle, Miss Castle and Miss Baldwin.

Mrs. Flora Louise Clement, of Washington, D. C., and Capt. Sidney A. Cloman, military attache of the American Embassy at London, were married at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Hays Hammond, in Lakewood, N. J., on December 18, by the Rev. Dr. William Guthrie, of San Francisco. The bride was the widow of Victor Clement, a mining engineer, who made a fortune in South Africa. It was there that Mrs. Clement met Mr. and Mrs. Hammond. Capt. and Mrs. Cloman will sail Saturday for London. Capt. Cloman is to assume his duties as military attache of the embassy January 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Marye at their home in Washington entertained at dinner a number of friends last week, after the christening of Baby Helen Marye. She was baptised with water brought from the River Jordan by one of her godmothers. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Whittell, and Mrs. Austin Tubbs of San Francisco.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Annexed will be found a resume of movements to and from this city and Coast and of the whereabouts of absent Californians.

Mr. and Mrs. John I. Taylor (formerly Miss Daisy Van Ness), arrived last week from the East and will spend some time here as the guests of relatives.

Mrs. William S. Tevis spent several days last week here and at Burlingame, returning to her ranch at Bakersfield for the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Martin, who have been in Paris for several weeks, are leaving there this month for a Mediterranean trip, going early in the new year to Egypt, where they will spend the rest of the winter.

Mrs. Henry M. Newhall and her family, and the Rev. Dr. J. A. O'Meara and Mrs. O'Meara (formerly Miss Alice Newhall), who have been in Europe for the past two years are at present in London, and will spend some time in England.

Miss Genevieve King, Miss Julia Langhorne, Miss Helene Irwin, and Miss Mary Keeney have recently been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McNear at Menlo Park.

Miss Lily McCalla and Miss Alice Hoffman have spent the past week in Santa Barbara, with Miss McCalla's parents, Admiral and Mrs. McCalla. They were the guests of honor at a tea given by Mrs. McCalla on Wednesday last.

Mrs. Orestes Pierce and Miss Florence Dunham have recently arrived in Paris.

Dr. and Mrs. Harry M. Sherman and their family spent the Christmas holidays in Ross Valley, as the guests of Mrs. Sherman's mother, Mrs. Kittle.

Miss Mary Foster has returned to her home in San Rafael, after a visit in the East, of several weeks' duration.

Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson, who has been travelling in Europe for the past few months, is at present in Italy.

Mrs. William P. Morgan and Miss Ella Morgan, have returned from their Eastern trip. Miss Morgan has recently been at Del Monte as the guest of Miss Flora Low.

Mrs. Camilo Martin has returned from a stay of several weeks in Riverside and is again at San Mateo, where she will spend the winter with her mother, Mrs. George Hyde.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Sherwood of Spokane are in the city for a visit.

Miss Mary Baily and Miss Helen Baily are at present at Camp McKinley, near Manila, with their brother, Dr. Howard Baily, U. S. A., where they expect to spend the winter.

Miss Elsie Tallant has returned from a visit to her aunt, Mrs. J. J. Brice, at the latter's home in Napa county.

Mrs. Deane and Miss Marie Rose Deane, who have been living in Berkeley for several months past, will come to San Francisco next month to remain until the spring.

Dr. and Mrs. Redmond Payne, who have been in Europe since the early summer, have arrived in New York, but will not return to California until February, as they will travel in the East.

Mrs. Wendell Simpson, the wife of Captain Simpson, U. S. A., went down last week to Santa Barbara, where she is visiting Captain and Mrs. James H. Bull.

Mr. Balfour Adamson returned last week from an Eastern trip.

Mr. Eugene Gallois has postponed his departure for Paris, to join Mrs. Gallois and Miss Jean Gallois, and will not leave for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Oddie, who have been East on a visit, have returned to California, but will leave shortly for their home in Tonapah.

Mr. Dixwell Davenport has arrived from the North and will spend several weeks here.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles de St. Maurice (formerly Miss Lattie Belle Goad), whose wedding took place early this month, spent their honeymoon at Del Monte.

Among the navy men in Los Angeles, for a few days last week, were Admiral Lyons, Captain J. H. Bull, and Lieutenants L. S. Lacy, and Henry O'Neil. Major J. H. H. Lesterne, U. S. A., was also visiting in Los Angeles last week.

On American Extravagance.

An aspect of American wealth that distressed Mr. H. G. Wells, is the showy extravagance and competitive spending by our smart set. He writes:

Before I came to America it was in his capacity as spender that I chiefly knew the American; as a person who had demoralized Regent Street and the Rue de Rivoli, who had taught the London cabman to demand "arf a dollar" for a shilling fare, who bought old books and old castles, and had driven the prices of old furniture to incredible altitudes, and was slowly transferring our incubus of artistic achievement to American soil. One of my friends in London is Mr. X., who owns those two houses full of fine "pieces" near the British Museum and keeps his honor unsullied in the most deleterious of trades. "They come to me," he said, "and ask me to buy for them. It's just buying. One of them wants to beat the silver of another, doesn't care what he pays. Another clamors for tapestry. They trust me as they trust a doctor. There's no understanding, no feeling. It's hard to treat them well."

And there is the story of Y., who is wise about pictures. "If you want a Botticelli that size, Mr. Record, I can't find it," he said; "you'll have to have it made for you."

These American spenders have got the whole world "beat" at the foolish game of collecting, and in all the peculiar delights of shopping they excel. And they are the crown and glory of hotel managers throughout the world.

They swarm in the pleasant places of the Riviera, they pervade Paris and Rome, they occupy Scotch castles and English estates, their motor-cars are terrible and wonderful. And the London Savoy Hotel still flaunts its memory of one splendid American night. The courtyard was flooded with water tinted an artistic blue—to the great discomfort of the practically inevitable gold-fish, and on this floated a dream of a gondola. And in the gondola the table was spread and served by the Savoy staff, mysteriously disguised in appropriate fancy costume. The whole thing—there's only two words for it—was "perfectly lovely." "The illusion" — whatever that was—we are assured, was complete. It wasn't a nursery treat, you know. The guests, I am told, were important grown-up people.

John T. Doyle, the prominent San Francisco lawyer, died at his home at Menlo Park December 23, of pneumonia, after two weeks' illness. Deceased was born of Irish parentage in New York City November 26, 1819. He was a graduate of Georgetown College, D. C., and of Columbia Law School. He practiced in New York until 1851, and came to California in the winter of 1852-53. In 1853 he recovered for the Archbishop of California the mission lands from the Mexican government. He also began to investigate the claim of the Catholics of California to money due from the Mexican government, known as the "pious fund," and in 1876 made a recovery of a large sum for the diocese of California. In 1902 he made a second recovery under an award from The Hague tribunal. He made his home in San Mateo County in 1866 at Menlo Park. In 1874 he was appointed trustee of the town of Menlo Park, and became the first president of the Board of Trustees. In 1877-78, under appointment, he served as Railroad Commissioner.

The New Zealand International Exhibition, now in progress, is the most important one ever held in Australasia. It covers fourteen acres, and the cost of the main buildings is estimated at $500,000, though the entire expenditures before opening were probably three times that sum. All nations were invited to exhibit, and it is regretted that American manufacturers did not respond. The Standard Oil Company, through its New Zealand representatives, is the only American concern with an exhibit.

A new company capitalized at $6,000,000 has been formed by John D. Spreckels, A. B. Spreckels, John D. Spreckels, Jr., William Clayton, and Harry L. Titus, with the avowed purpose of building a railroad from San Diego, California, to Yuma, Arizona, by way of the Imperial Valley. The articles of incorporation have been filed in San Diego, and the official title of the corporation is the San Diego and Arizona Railway Company.

Lieutenant Daniel Shean, U. S. A. and Mrs. Shean (formerly Miss Ursula Stone), are rejoicing in the arrival of a little son in their home last week.

Mr. and Mrs. William Huie, (formerly Miss Reis), are rejoicing in the advent of a little son in their home recently.

A pair of properly fitted glasses will chase away that headache.

HIRSCH & KAISER.

1757 Fillmore Street

Opticians

ARGONAUTS FOR OUR FILES.

We would be glad to have any of the following numbers from any disconnected copies of the Argonaut that our readers have and are willing to part with.

Numbers Required to Complete an Argonaut File.

Volume VI, 1880—Nos. 6, 13, 15, 17, 18, 22, 24, 26.

Volume VII, 1880—Nos. 3, 8, 14, 16, 19, 20, 23, 24.

Volume IX, 1881—Nos. 1, 3, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25.

Volumes X and XI, 1882—All numbers. Volume XII, 1883—Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 17, 24, 25, 26.

Volume XIII, 1883—All numbers. Volumes XIV and XV, 1884—All numbers.

Volume XVI, 1885—All numbers. Volume XVII, 1885—Nos. 1, 2.

Volume XX, 1887—Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

Volume XXI, 1887—Nos. 11, 13, 22, 23. Volume XXII, 1888—Nos. 3, 7, 11, 18, 25.

Volume XXIII, 1888—No. 3. Volume XXIV, 1889—No. 6.

Volume XXV, 1889—Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19.

Volume XXVI, 1890—Nos. 21, 23. Volume XXVII, 1890—No. 1.

Volume XXVIII, 1891—Nos. 1, 7. Volume XXIX, 1891—Nos. 8, 12, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22.

Volume XXX, 1892—Nos. 6, 20, 22, 24. Volume XXXI, 1892—Nos. 2, 3, 7.

Volume XXXII, 1893—No. 16.

J. S. DINKELSPIEL

Importer of

Diamonds, Precious Stones

1021 Van Ness Ave.

San Francisco, Cal.

Fine Set Pieces a Specialty

The Little Palace Hotel

corner of

Post and Leavenworth Sts.

IS

OPEN

The same excellence in cuisine and service that obtained in the Old Palace is duplicated in the new "Little Palace."

JOHN C. KIRKPATRICK
Manager

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Healthful cream of tartar, derived solely from grapes, refined to absolute purity, is the active principle of every pound of Royal Baking Powder.

Hence it is that Royal Baking Powder renders the food remarkable both for its fine flavor and healthfulness.

No alum, no phosphate—which are the principal elements of the so-called cheap baking powders and which are derived from bones, rock, and sulphuric acid.

THE STRONGEST
AND MOST ROBUST OF MEN AND WOMEN OCCASIONALLY REQUIRE A PURE TONICAL STIMULANT.
THE PURITY AND EXCELLENCE
OF

HUNTER BALTIMORE RYE

MAKES ITS USE PREFERABLE AT SUCH TIMES.

CHARLES M. REYNOLDS CO.,
Agents for California and Nevada,
912-914 Folsom St., San Francisco, Cal.

CLUBBING LIST FOR 1907.

By special arrangement with the publishers, and by concessions in price on both sides, we are enabled to make the following offer, open to all subscribers direct to this office. Subscribers in renewing subscriptions to Eastern periodicals will please mention the date of expiration in order to avoid mistakes.

American Magazine and Argonaut.....	$ 4.25
Argosy and Argonaut.....	4.35
Atlantic Monthly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Blackwood's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.20
Century and Argonaut.....	7.00
Commoner and Argonaut.....	4.10
Cosmopolitan and Argonaut.....	4.35
Criterion and Argonaut.....	4.35
Critic and Argonaut.....	5.10
Current Literature and Argonaut.....	5.90
English Illustrated Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.70
Forum and Argonaut.....	6.00
Harper's Bazaar and Argonaut.....	4.35
Harper's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.70
Harper's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
House Beautiful and Argonaut.....	4.75
International Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.50
Judge and Argonaut.....	7.50
Leslie's Weekly and Argonaut.....	6.70
Life and Argonaut.....	7.75
Lippincott's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.20
Littell's Living Age and Argonaut.....	9.00
Mexican Herald and Argonaut.....	10.50
Munsey's Magazine and Argonaut.....	4.35
Nineteenth Century and Argonaut.....	7.25
North American Review and Argonaut.....	8.00
Out West and Argonaut.....	5.25
Overland Monthly and Argonaut.....	4.50
Political Science Quarterly and Argonaut.....	5.90
Puck and Argonaut.....	7.50
Review of Reviews and Argonaut.....	5.75
Scribner's Magazine and Argonaut.....	6.50
Smart Set and Argonaut.....	6.00
St. Nicholas and Argonaut.....	6.00
Sunset and Argonaut.....	4.25
Theatre Magazine and Argonaut.....	5.75
Thrice-a-Week New York World (Democratic) and Argonaut.....	4.25
Weekly New York Tribune (Republican) and Argonaut.....	4.50
Weekly New York Tribune, Weekly New York World, and Argonaut.....	5.25

Hotel del Coronado

A gem set in semi-tropical surroundings
Drvest marine climate known
No winter, but perpetual spring or early summer.
Outdoor sports 365 days in the year
Golf, Polo, Tennis
Fishing, Boating, and Bathing
Choiceest cuisine of any hotel in the West
American plan only
All modern conveniences
All outside rooms
Send for illustrated booklet

MORCAN ROSS, Mgr., Coronado Beach Cal.
H. F. NORCROSS, General Agent
334 So. Spring St., Los Angeles

PERSONAL.

Army and Navy

The latest personal notes relative to army and navy people who are or have been stationed at Pacific Coast points:

Admiral Henry W. Lyon, U. S. N., and Mrs. Lyon left last week for Santa Barbara, where they will spend a fortnight, going thence to Los Angeles to visit friends for a short time.

Colonel Charles H. Noble, U. S. A., retired, has upon the advice and consent of the Senate, been retired with the rank of brigadier-general.

Colonel George S. Anderson, U. S. A., who is one of the best-known and most popular officers of the army, and who has recently returned to the United States on the transport Kirkpatrick, via the Suez Canal, has been ordered as Chief of Staff of the Atlantic Division, with station at Governor's Island, New York.

Colonel William S. Patten, U. S. A., Chief Quartermaster of the Philippine Division, arrived here on Saturday last from Manila, on leave of absence.

Colonel John A. Lundeen, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., Commander of the Artillery District of San Francisco, and Captain LeVert Coleman, Artillery Corps, U. S. A., District Ordnance Officer, have returned from Fort Rosecrans, San Diego, where they went for an artillery inspection of the post, and to be present at the first artillery practice for the year 1906-7.

Lieutenant Colonel George H. Torney, deputy surgeon-general, U. S. A., is detailed as a member of the Army retiring board, appointed to meet at San Francisco, vice Lieutenant-Colonel Daniel M. Appel, deputy surgeon-general, U. S. A., relieved.

Captain Franklin J. Drake, U. S. N., is to be rear-admiral on the retired list from December 10, in accordance with a provision included in the Naval Appropriation Act approved June 29, 1906.

Civil Engineer Harry H. Rousseau, U. S. N., who has been stationed at Mare Island for some time, left last week for Washington, D. C., where he has been ordered to be Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, with the rank of rear-admiral.

Major Thomas Wilhelm, U. S. A., retired, on duty with the organized militia of the State of California, has been designated to make the annual inspection of the militia.

Major Zerach W. Torrey, Inspector General's Department, U. S. A., has returned from an inspection tour of the Presidio of Monterey, within the past fortnight.

Major John R. Lynch, assistant paymaster, Department of California, U. S. A., has been granted a brief leave of absence, which took effect on December 26.

Major Lewis H. Strother, Twenty-eighth Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted four months' leave of absence, on a surgeon's certificate of disability, with permission to go beyond the sea.

Captain Patrick J. Hart, chaplain Artillery Corps, U. S. A., has been promoted to be major.

Lieutenant Commander G. W. Brown, U. S. N., is detached from the Pennsylvania and ordered to the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, for treatment.

Lieutenant C. C. Fewel, U. S. N., has been ordered to duty at the Naval Training Station, San Francisco, on December 31.

Captain Peter W. Davison, Twenty-second Infantry, U. S. A., Fort McDowell, Angel Island, has been ordered to the Presidio of San Francisco.

Captain Henry H. Rutherford, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., who went East in charge of a detachment of insane, has returned to his station at the Presidio of San Francisco.

Lieutenant Guy B. G. Hanna, Artillery, U. S. A., Presidio of San Francisco, has been granted leave of absence and has gone East.

Lieutenant Emory T. Smith, Ninth Infantry, U. S. A., has been granted four months' leave of absence, to take effect on the date of the departure of the Ninth Infantry from the Philippine Division, with permission to return to the United States via the Suez Canal.

Lieutenant James P. Castleman, Fourteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., has been ordered to Oakland on official duties connected with court-martial business.

Lieutenant Charles Keller, Third Infantry, U. S. A., is granted three months' leave of absence, which took effect on December 15.

Lieutenant C. L. Foster, assistant surgeon, U. S. A., is assigned to duty at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco.

Ensign S. M. Robinson, U. S. N., has been detached from the Baltimore and ordered to the Naval Hospital, Mare Island, for treatment.

Paymaster F. K. Perkins, U. S. N., has been detached from duty as pay officer of the U. S. T. S. Pensacola, Naval Training Station, San Francisco, and ordered to settle accounts and wait orders.

P. A. Paymaster J. S. Beecher, U. S. N., has been ordered to duty as pay officer of the U. S. T. S. Pensacola, Naval Training Station, San Francisco, from December 31.

Lieutenant Adolf K. Berners, Philippine Scouts, U. S. A., who has been a patient at the Army General Hospital, Presidio of San Francisco, has been ordered to proceed to Washington Barracks, D. C., Hospital, for observation and treatment.

Among the well-known officers of the army and navy who will be retired on account of the age limit during the year 1907 are: Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigbee, U. S. N., January 16; Rear Admiral George C. Reiter, U. S. N., July 6; Rear Admiral Henry W. Lyon, U. S. N. (now commandant of the Mare Island navy yard), November 8; Brigadier General Stephen P. Jocelyn, U. S. A. (now in command of the Department of the Columbia), March 1; Colonel William H. Heuer, U. S. A., March 2; Colonel Alfred C. Markley, Thirtieth Infantry, U. S. A., April 18; Brigadier Constant Williams, U. S. A., May 25; Lieutenant Colonel Elijah W. Halford, Pay department, U. S. A.; and Colonel Edward S. Godfrey, Ninth Cavalry, U. S. A.

The United States Fish Commission steamer Albatross arrived a few days ago from the Orient, where for six months the scientists on board have been engaged in oceanography and research in marine biology. The Albatross was nine days coming from Honolulu, at which port she arrived November 24 with her flag at half-mast as a tribute to the memory of her commander, who had been washed overboard and drowned three days before. The Albatross was in the vicinity of Perry Island either at the time or shortly after that latest peak of land poked its nose above the water.

Mr. and Mrs. Norris Davis are rejoicing in the advent of a daughter in their home.

Specially adapted to Asthmatics; always relieves, generally cures. Brooks' Homoeopathic Cough Syrup; 25c. at druggists.

A. Hirschman
Jeweler and Silversmith. Now at 1641 Van Ness Avenue, bet. California and Sacramento Streets.

The Christmas buying in San Francisco this year was even more remarkable than usual. Raphael Weill, of the White House, says that Saturday, December 15, was the banner day in the history of the establishment. It is estimated that between 25,000 and 30,000 people were in the store on that day.

Korn The Hatter
Now at 926 Van Ness Avenue Near Ellis Street

Dr. J. J. Henderson
Specialist for Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat.
1434 Post St., near Octavia.

HIND, ROLPH & CO.

SHIPPING AND COMMISSION

204-210 California Street Telephone Temporary 2540

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Pacific Coast Agents

Hebburn House Coal Gillingham Portland Cement

Golden State Limited

between

CALIFORNIA—CHICAGO

DAILY

LEAVE SAN FRANCISCO 5:00 P. M.
ARRIVE CHICAGO 10:15 P. M.

ELECTRIC LIGHTED
OBSERVATION PARLOR CAR
BEST OF DINING SERVICE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Husband—My dear Emily, why is it I am always in the wrong? Wife—Because I am always in the right.—Quips.
"Give me the lunch-basket, wifey. Don't you see we are sure to lose each other in this crowd?"—Sketch.
Elderly Coquette—I don't like this furniture. It isn't suitable for my style.
Dealer—What do you say to something antique.—Life.
"What are you in such a great hurry for?" "I am going to the funeral of my chief, and there is nothing he hates like unpunctuality!"—Fly Leaves.

A race of men who had never before seen a white man have been discovered in the arctic region. They will live to regret the incident.—Mexican Herald.

"But, captain, the most happy marriages are often made between people who are quite opposites." "That is the reason why I am looking out for a rich wife!"—Dallas Post.

"Do you intend to inaugurate any great reforms this year, Senator?" asked the beautiful girl. "No," replied the statesman. "My present term will not expire until 1909."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"And shall you carry out your plan of visiting Blue Grotto at Capri this year, Frau Lammer?" "Alas, no, Frau Spits: we are in mourning this summer, so we are going to the Black Forest."—Figaro.

She—What interested you most in your travels, major? Major—Well, the mummy of a queen I saw in Egypt. It's wonderful how they could make a woman dry up and stay that way.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"How much postage will this require?" asked the young author. "It is one of my manuscripts." "Two cents an ounce," answered the post-office clerk. "That's first-class matter." "Oh, thank you!"—Judge.

American Tourist (suspiciously)—Say, guide, haven't we seen this room before? Guide—Oh, no, Monsieur. Tourist—Well, see here. We want to see everything, but we don't want to see anything twice!—London Punch.

The food-inspector's wife was looking over her husband's notebook. "George," she said, "how do you pronounce the last syllable of this word 'butterine'?" "The last syllable," the inspector answered, "is always silent."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"Did your husband have any luck at the races?" asked the neighbor who comes looking for news. "Wonderful luck," answered young Mrs. Torkins. "He inadvertently put a twenty-dollar bill in his vest pocket and forgot to bet it."—Washington Star.

"Did ye get damages fer being in that railway accident, Bill?" "Sure: fifty dollars for me and fifty for the missus." "The missus? I didn't hear she was hurt." "She wasn't; but I had the presence o' mind to fetch her one on the head with me foot."—Harper's Weekly.

"Mamma, what's the use of putting all those things for the baby in that sterilizing machine?" "Why, Willie, so that no bad germs will enter his system." "That's what I thought. But I know an easier way." "What's that?" "Why, while you were out I sterilized the baby!"—Life.

First Clerk—Say, Bella, do you remember the swell fellow who used to come in every day last year, give us a good jolly, and buy candy for his grandmother? Second Clerk—Yes; he doesn't come any more. Is his grandmother dead?—First Clerk—No; he's married to her.—Harper's Weekly.

Automobilist (to another who has broken down)—Can I be of any assistance to you? The Afflicted One (under the machine)—Yes, sir. That lady you see is my wife. I'll be obliged if you will kindly answer her questions and keep her amused while I'm fixing this infernal machine.—Woman's Home Companion.

"Darling," said the bride, "I had a terrible feeling of sadness come over me this afternoon—a sort of feeling that you were doing something that would break my heart if I knew of it. Think, sweet, what were you doing, now, this afternoon at four o'clock?" "Dearest," replied the husband tenderly and reassuringly, "at that hour I was licking stamps and pasting them on envelopes."—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Chicago gambler, whose first name was George, used to visit a Chinaman's establishment and smoke opium and gamble almost daily. One day he rushed into the place and said, excitedly: "Hip, loan me $10. Thanks. I'll come in and pay you tomorrow noon, if I'm alive," and out he went with the money. About 3 o'clock the next afternoon a friend of the gambler dropped in on the Chinaman and said: "Hip, where is George today?" and the confiding Celestial wiped his eyes with the corner of his blouse and replied: "George, him dead."—The Earth.

Patient (who has been overdoing it)—Well, tell me, doctor. Hoo many whus-kies may I tak' durin' the day? Doctor—Weel, ye maun be regular. Tak' ane afore yer breakfast, anither after; anither at eleven, anither at twelve; anither afore yer lunch, an' ane after; ane at four, ane at five, ane at six; ane afore yer dinner, ane wi't, an' anither after; ane at nine, ane at ten, an' syne ane when ye're in yer bed. But, mind, ye mauna keep on dram, dram, drammin' a' day.—The Sketch.

THE TUNEFUL LIAR.

Revised.
Of modern philosophy
Here is a peep;
Beauty is oftentimes
Only clothes deep! —Life.

Dashing.

Once more will Peary dash
Once more the records smash;
Listen: He calls for cash.
Bravest of men,
Then, when the trip is made,
Frost-bit, but not afraid,
Beaten, but undismayed,
He'll call again. —Philadelphia Ledger.

Winter Miseries.

The furnace fire's started now
And trouble has begun.
For it is difficult to see
The whims of every one.
Elvira thinks it is too hot—
You know, she's rather stout—
While Eunice says, "I'm freezing cold!"
Don't let the fire out! —Philadelphia Ledger.

Maria wants the damper up
And Mildred wants it down.
Whichever way I fix the thing
I'm greeted with a frown.
Oh, I shall welcome with a whoop
The advent of the spring.
And when the winter is all gone
I'll cheer like everything! —Somerville Journal.

The Wise Man's Almanac.

They ain't no sense, as I kin see,
In mortals, sech es you an' me,
A-faultin' Nature's wise intents,
An' lockin' horns with Providence.
It ain't no use to grumble an' complain;
It's jest as cheap an' easy to rejoice;
When God sorts out the weather an' sends rain—
Why, rain's my choice! —James Whitcomb Riley, in Technical World Magazine.

It Was His Meat.

The ladies stopped a little boy whose legs were briar-scratched,
And laughed to see the novel way his little pants were patched.
"Why did they patch with white?" they asked.
"Why not with blue or red?"
The small boy scowled and touched the spot. "That ain't no patch," he said. —Dallas News.

MOTHERS BE SURE AND USE "MRS. WINSLOW'S Soothing Syrup" for your children while teething.

Footpad (with revolver)—Hold up yer hands! Victim—You can go through me if you want to, but I'll be dad-dinged if I'm going to hold up my hand any more! I'm tired of doing it. You're the third since I left the lodge.—Chicago Tribune.

Any remedy that will relieve a teething baby or a feverish child is invaluable. Steedman's Soothing Powders have done this for fifty years

First Physician—Has he got an hereditary trouble? Second Physician—Yes. I hope to hand his case down to my son.—Harper's Bazar.

NEXT SUNDAY GO TO BYRON HOT SPRINGS.—You can leave Friday afternoon or Saturday morning, returning Sunday afternoon or Monday morning. Two days at the Springs, and the entire expense of the trip is $7.50. This includes the railway fare, transportation from railway station to hotel and return, a delightful ride of two and a half miles, accommodations at the beautiful Byron Hot Springs Hotel, and use of the wonderful mineral baths, all for $7.50. Try it.

Goodyear Rubber Company
Have Returned to Their Old Home, Where They Were Located Before the Fire, 573-579 Market St., near Second
Tel. Temporary 1788

Press Clippings
Are money-makers for Contractors
Supply-houses, Business Men
and Corporations.
Allen's Press Clipping Bureau
Kohl Building

THE LATEST STYLES IN
Choice Woolens
H. S. Bridge & Co.
Merchant Tailors
1176 O'Farrell Street

THIRD STREET PROPERTY

FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN

137½ Feet and Two Corners

$75,000. MUST BE SOLD

Two 50 Varas

Vicinity North Point and Taylor Sts.

Fine Manufacturing Site or Lumber Yard

Particulars at office

GUY. T. WAYMAN

517 Market St.

REAL ESTATE

San Francisco

Steamship Lines

AMERICAN LINE

PLYMOUTH—CHERBOURG—SOUTHAMPTON
Philadelphia... Dec. 29 | New York... Jan. 12
St. Paul... Jan. 5 | St. Louis... Jan. 19

Philadelphia—Queenstown—Liverpool
Haverford... Dec. 29 | Merion... Jan. 19
Noordland... Jan. 5 | Haverford... Feb. 2

ATLANTIC TRANSPORT LINE
NEW YORK—LONDON DIRECT

Minnehaha... Dec. 29 | Minnetonka... Jan. 12
Mesaba... Jan. 5 | Minneapolis... Jan. 26

HOLLAND-AMERICA LINE

NEW YORK—ROTTERDAM, VIA BOULOGNE
Sailings Wednesdays as per sailing list.
Potsdam... Jan. 2, 6 a m | Statendam Feb. 20, 10 a m
Ryndam... Jan. 23, noon | Ryndam, Feb. 27, 5 a m
Potsdam, Feb. 6, 10 a m | Noordam, Mar. 6, 10 a m

RED STAR LINE

NEW YORK—ANTWERP—PARIS
Zeeland... Dec. 26 | Vaderland... Jan. 9
Kroonland... Jan. 2 | Finland... Jan. 16

WHITE STAR LINE

NEW YORK—QUEENSTOWN—LIVERPOOL.
Majestic... Dec. 26 | Majestic... Jan. 23
Oceanic... Jan. 2 | Teutonic... Feb. 6
Teutonic... Jan. 9 | Baltic... Feb. 13

Boston—Queenstown—Liverpool.

Cymric... Jan. 19, Feb. 23, Mar. 30
To the Mediterranean and Egypt, via Azores

FROM NEW YORK

Cedric... Jan. 5, 9:30 a m, Feb. 16
Celtic... Jan. 19, 9:30 a m, March 2 (21,000 Tons
Cretic... Mar. 30, noon, May 9, June 20

FROM BOSTON

Canopic... Jan. 12, 8:30 a m, Feb. 23
Republic... Feb. 2, 1 p m, March 16
G. U. KOEPEL, Pass. Agt. Pacific Coast.
Room 207 Monadnock Bldg., San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

ORIENTAL S. S. Co. have opened their general offices at 217-221 Brannan Street
SAN FRANCISCO

S. S. Nippon Maru (Calls at Manila) Dec. 28, 1906
S. S. Hong Kong Maru (Calls at Manila) Jan. 24, 1907
S. S. America Maru Feb. 13, 1907

Steamers will leave wharf, corner First and Brannan streets 1 p. m., for Yokobama and Hongkong, calling at Honolulu, Kohe (Hiogo), Nagasaki and Shanghai, and connecting at Hongkong with steamer for Manila, India, etc. No cargo received on board on day of sailing.
Round-trip tickets at reduced rates. For freight and passage apply at office, corner First and Brannan Sts. W. H. AVERY, Assistant General Manager.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER
A Positive Relief
PRICKLY HEAT,
CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all skin
Removes all odor of perspiration
Keeps the skin soft and smooth
Sold everywhere, or by mail on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original) Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, New York, N. Y.

Connecticut Fire Insurance Co.

OF HARTFORD
ESTABLISHED 1850
Cash Capital... $1,000,000.00
Cash Assets... 5,340,136.94
Surplus to Policy-Holders... 2,414,921.16
Benjamin J. Smith
Manager Pacific Department:
525 THIRTEENTH ST., OAKLAND
San Francisco Office:
2310 CALIFORNIA STREET

Bonestell, Richardson & Co.

Have Plenty of Every Kind of PAPER
Phone Temporary 1273
473 TO 475 SIXTH STREET
San Francisco

For YOUR

BREAKFAST

GERMEA

At All Grocers

The Johnson-Locke Mercantile Co.

AGENTS

SAN FRANCISCO

Mt. Tamalpais Railway

Via Sausalito Ferry—Foot of Market St.

Lv. San Francisco	W'kday	Sun.	Leave Tamalpais	Sun.	W'kday
8:25 A	9:50 A	11:00 A	10:40 A	1:05 P
1:45 P	1:45 P	3:15 P	1:05 P	2:30 P	4:30 P
4:35 P			4:30 P	5:45 P	9:30 P

Legal Holidays, Sunday Time

TICKET OFFICE AT SAUSALITO FERRY

Thos. Cook & Son

Now Located
1168 Broadway, Oakland
And North Nave, Ferry Building
San Francisco

REMOVAL NOTICE

JOHN G. ILS & CO.

Beg to announce their removal to their permanent store

827-829 MISSION STREET

Between Fourth and Fifth Streets, San Francisco, Cal.

OUR SPECIALTIES:

HIGH GRADE FRENCH RANGES AND BROILERS
BAKERY AND KITCHEN SUPPLIES

